Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. I do not desire to occupy the time of the committee, and I do not know that I would have said a word if I had not understood the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] to refer to me as the gentleman from Pennsylvania as having propounded a question to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] during the course of this discussion. Now, while I would be proud to represent any district in Pennsylvania, I have not that honor; but I feel just as much pride in representing a district in Iowa.

While I am not here to make any captious objection to the bill under discussion, I must still very modestly but firmly protest against a precedent of this kind being established here at this session. I cannot for a single moment agree with the gentleman from Virginia, who has asserted that the legal principle applicable to cases of this kind is that applicable to all bailees, and that only. I do think it would be a dangerous thing to establish any such precedent at this time and indorse it by legislation on the part of Congress.

I appeal to the history of the past. I appeal to every decision given on questions of this kind. And I will ask any experienced attorney what law is to be found under which you can hold the assistant treasurer of the United States responsible for the loss of funds in his possession simply as a bailee. He is an officer of the Government, and I take it as an officer of the Government he has executed bonds for the faithful discharge of his duty, and he is required when called upon to account for all funds coming into his hands by virtue of his office. He is in no sense a bailee.

Let us suppose, for instance, there was a suit pending in the court to-day for the purpose of recovering this money alleged to be lost; I care not whether by negligence on the part of the officer or by an inevitable accident. The only question in the court would be, was there a loss, and did the officer fail to account? In that case the court could not relieve him from his responsibility.

I say it would be wrong for us by our votes to-day to establish a precedent going to the extent that there is no legal liability on the part of the officer. I take it there is no provision in his bond which relieves him from such responsibility. The supreme court of every State in the Union has decided that an officer acting in a fiduciary capacity and receiving funds must account for those funds when called upon. Unless there be a reservation in his bond which excuses him from liability under certain circumstances his responsibility is fixed for all time to come and under all circumstances.

And when gentlemen tell me the evidence before the committee shows there was due diligence on the part of the officer, I beg leave to differ from them. When the report itself, read in the hearing of the House, shows there was a barrier erected for the purpose of protecting this property, but the alleged thief reached over that barrier and possessed himself of the money, to an unregenerated mind like mine that appears to have been no barrier at all. It was not so to the thief who got the money. The proof of due diligence is not here.

As I have said, the law has fixed the legal liability of these officers. Let us not decide this case as if the law itself protected the officer in any case of carelessness. Public officers should always be held to strict responsibility, and there should be no exception to the rule. But if, on the ground of an appeal to the sympathies and the generosity of the people of this nation at large, he should be relieved, let it be done on that ground, and not on the ground that there is no legal responsibility.

Mr. BOWMAN. I only wish to say a few words in regard to this case, which it seems to me will be to a certain extent a precedent for many cases that will follow, some of which are before our Committee of Claims. It is therefore important that the principle, if there is any principle in this case, should be settled for the guidance of the House. I think gentlemen are mistaken in saying this is a new case. It is not a new case. It has been the practice of this House in cases where due diligence was proved to reimburse the officer of the Government. We stand on this foundation principle: there is no legal obligation whatever on the Government to make good this loss. The only question is, is there an equitable obligation?

Now, in cases of this kind an officer of the Government, bear he the name of treasurer, revenue collector, postmaster, or any other title, provided such officer shows that he has been faithful, provided he shows that he has used due and ordinary, not extraordinary, diligence, is reimbursed for the losses sustained by him. The Government asks of him only ordinary diligence; not that he shall keep his money in a vault; not that he shall build a barrier from the floor up to the ceiling of the room, so that no thief can reach over it; not that he shall take any extraordinary precautions; but only that he shall take that care of the money of the Government which an ordinary man in the exercise of reasonable business diligence would of his own funds.

Now, it seems to me that there is here an equitable obligation on the part of the Government. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] gave you an example of a storekeeper losing his goods, and asks if he must not suffer the loss. That is not a parallel case. This officer did not own the funds. The funds did not belong to this sub-treasurer; they were the property of the United States in the hands of a bailee.

The gentleman would have made an exact parallel to this case if he had asked this question: in the case of a clerk in a store, provided the goods or funds are embezzled without the actual negligence of such clerk, shall he be held responsible to his employer for the loss? It could not be held that if a thief should go into a store and while the clerk was exercising due and ordinary and reasonable care should steal goods from the counter, that clerk must make good to the employer the value of those goods. Not a man on this floor would argue that question for a single moment. No one would say that a clerk should make good to his employer any goods stolen from the counters while that clerk was in the exercise of reasonable diligence.

So, taking the parallel or example of that business transaction, and you would find that this claimant would not be called upon to endure the loss. And that is the exact parallel in this case. This officer was a clerk of the Government, a sub-treasurer, its bailee, its agent, having upon his counter not his own goods but the bills of the Government; just as in the case of a postmaster he has stamps belonging to the Government. Now, by any doctrine of law or any doctrine of equity, if those goods are stolen while the officer is reasonably careful, there cannot equitably be any claim whatever against him for the loss.

Mr. REAGAN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BOWMAN. Certainly.

Mr. REAGAN. I would ask the gentleman if he does not think that there is a difference between a clerk liable to a merchant in the transaction of business in his store and a bonded public officer who is under obligations to keep secure and safe the public funds in his custody?

Mr. BOWMAN. I see no distinction whatever in principle. The clerk is under the same moral obligation to lock up and keep securely the goods of his employer that the sub-treasurer of the United States is under to lock up the money, the bank bills, the stamps of his employer, the United States, and to keep them securely.

I do not see how by any doctrine of law or any doctrine of equity or any doctrine of morals you can say that there is any such obligation on the part of the bailee, unless always you can show that he is guilty of gross negligence, to make good a loss under these circumstances. No one here has pretended that this officer was guilty of gross carelessness. He may have made a mistake; perhaps he did. Perhaps in the exercise of a sound discretion he should have built that railing up to the ceiling, so that no man could reach over it. But it was a mistake only; it was not dishonesty; it was not gross carelessness; it was simply an error of judgment to which any man is liable.

Now, if a man be guilty of an error of judgment only, that is a good excuse for him and does not make him liable unless you can also show that he was guilty of gross carelessness, or at least of actual, positive carelessness. In other words, this bailee may be guilty of errors of judgment. A stronger man or a wiser man might have done differently from what he did. But if you cannot go beyond that and show that he was culpably or wickedly or grossly careless, then I claim that he as an innocent man is entitled to be reimbursed. I claim that that is both good equitable and good legal doctrine.

Mr. REAGAN. Another question, if the gentleman pleases.

Mr. BOWMAN. Certainly.

Mr. REAGAN. Would not the gentleman consider it gross neglect for a man to lay down money on a counter, in the day-time, so that another could reach over the railing and steal that money? Is not that gross negligence?

Mr. BOWMAN. That is the issue in this case. At the same time that this issue of fact may decide this case, the principle underlying it ought to be ascertained, because there are other cases coming here for decision. Many members have in their charge cases of the robbery of a postmaster involving the same principles. All these cases should be settled upon a general principle; and I state that there is this foundation principle governing all such cases, namely: the question of due diligence. The question, then, comes right back to the matter of fact suggested by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] whether there was due diligence in this case. And, Mr. Chairman, the fact that there was an eight-foot railing for the protection of this money; that the sub-treasurer used, so far as we know and have reason to believe, his best judgment in providing that railing; that no one could reach over that railing without taking extraordinary trouble; that it was necessary to climb up and reach over with a hook made of wire or something else, thus taking extraordinary, not ordinary means to commit the robbery—I say that these facts leave no taint of negligence upon this bailee.

I do not believe that the Government of the United States ought to split hairs with the most exact nicety in matters of this kind. I believe that we are to decide these cases according to principles of right and justice and honorable dealing. Neither on appropriation bills nor upon other measures is it the duty of the Government of the United States to squeeze men down to the very lowest sums which they can be induced to take or to forego the payment of or which the strict letter of the law would entitle them to. I believe that the Government of the United States is bound, as we are bound in our dealings between man and man, to act honestly, justly, fairly, equitably, without taking advantage of any nice legal quibbles or technicalities. The United States cannot afford to be mean or, so to speak, legally dishonest. It is the duty of the United States to act liberally—to do what any man in private transactions would say is the right, honest, just thing, without any splitting of legal hairs. It seems to me, therefore, as a matter of law, of equity, of right, of justice, of fair and honorable dealing, that this man ought to be reimbursed, because no one has shown that he was guilty of any intentional wrong-doing and because he was in the exercise of reasonable care when this loss occurred.

Mr. MCMAHON. Mr. Chairman, if I needed anything to convince me that the bill before the House is a bad bill—not in itself, but in the results to which it may lead as a precedent—I would want nothing more convincing than the argument of the gentleman who has just preceded me, [Mr. BOWMAN,] for he gives official information, as a member of the Claims Committee, that almost every member of this House has introduced a similar bill, ready to be put upon its passage if we set the example upon this occasion. I say that the principle involved is bad. I do not care to dispute the merit of this particular bill, although I might be pardoned for questioning it, when the committee which has examined the matter is able to report to us only a surmise that some adroit thief committed this robbery.

Though some of my distinguished friends on this side of the House have affirmed it, I do not admit it to be true, as a principle of law, that a public officer is not an insurer of the moneys in his custody. Why, sir, if you go into the Treasury Department, where the poor girls are employed whose business it is to count the money of the United States, you will see how quickly the amount is deducted from their poor pay when they allow a counterfeit bill to pass their scrutiny unobserved, and you will realize that even an employé receiving but $700 or $900 a year is treated as an insurer. Yet in the case under discussion we find a public officer who voluntarily assumes the duties of an office and gives a written obligation that he will faithfully perform his duties and pay over all the money that may come into his hands. No exception is made in his contract, of casualties by fire, flood, theft, or anything of that sort. His obligation is unconditional, and we make his salary $4,500, or thereabout, because he assumes this responsibility. When some clerk in his office steals the public money, can the principal officer come to Congress and say, "I did not steal, but my clerk did?"

Now, what is the difference whether it was stolen by the clerk or by some outsider? The policy of the law requires that we should hold him to a strict accountability. It is impossible to tell when the loss is absolutely honest and free from connivance or contrivance.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is one consideration I would like to suggest to the gentleman. If this assistant treasurer had the appointment of all the men employed under him, his duty and obligation might be as the gentleman states. But I think there is an equitable consideration in his behalf in view of the fact that he is not allowed to appoint all his subordinates. They are sent down from Washington—some of them, perhaps, upon the recommendation of the gentleman from Ohio himself. Therefore I think we should be a little charitable.

Mr. MCMAHON. The gentleman assumes as a fact that which may or may not occur. It is not claimed in this case that it was stolen by any such clerk.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am speaking of the general rule.

Mr. MCMAHON. But no gentleman can dispute my proposition that we pay this officer a large salary because his responsibility is large. He assumes the office voluntarily and must meet all its risks. Suppose an insurance company, when a loss has been incurred, should say to the party insured, "You ought not exact from us the payment of this loss," would not the party insured properly say, "I have paid you for assuming this risk, and I want my money." So when a man accepts an office under the Government, and assumes the duty of handling the public money, the same principle should apply. We know that these positions are eagerly sought for, although it is known that the Government of the United States treats an official as an insurer of every dollar of public money coming into his hands. It is eminently proper that we should do so.

I ask gentlemen to consider the various devices resorted to by officers, when their accounts are short, to throw the blame from their own shoulders. I do not now allude to this case. I am speaking of the facts of current history. In Ohio, for example, we have had cases where a county treasurer has allowed himself to be bound hand and foot, so that when discovered it might be supposed that he had been set upon by an army of highwaymen, who had almost destroyed his life in order to force from him the combination of his safe; yet afterward some sharp detective has developed that there was a deficit in his accounts, and he submitted to all this in order to hide the fact that he was a defaulter.

So with many postmasters who beg us for relief. Some of them are understood to have burned up their establishments. They have a fair insurance on the store. They get the money for that. Maybe they make double by their supposed misfortunes. Maybe they get the money from the insurance companies and from the Government as well. But, sir, we cannot get along in this broad country of ours, extending from California to Maine, with comparatively few trusty Federal officers to supervise, unless we hold these subordinate officials to the letter of their bond. And, gentlemen of the House, whenever you depart from that rule you will be converted into a mere court of equity, without any fixed rules for your guidance, to refund to incompetent or dishonest men money which they or their subordinates have stolen, or carelessly permitted to be stolen, from the people. I will repeat, in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that I have nothing against this bill, although I have doubts as to the proof of the theft, but I do hope, for the reason I have stated, that this bill will not pass, even if the theory of fact upon which the committee has acted should be accepted to be true.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Chairman, as this belongs to a class of claims the payment of which I have resisted, I wish to say a word. I think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCMAHON] comes too late in reference to the establishment of the policy of paying this class of claims. In the Forty-fourth Congress a claim was presented by a clerk in the sub-treasury office at Chicago who in the discharge of his duties had received a five-hundred-dollar counterfeit bill. He asked to be reimbursed. I claimed that he was a public officer and in the discharge of his official duties took that risk, and therefore ought to bear the loss. I was told by the committee of which I was a member, and at that time chairman, that we could not make insurance agents of these officers and that we must reimburse him, because the bill was well executed and might well deceive; he had been honest. The claim was reported favorably to the House, and as it came from the State of Illinois I did not make very strenuous resistance to its payment. Everybody in the House voted to pay it. Later there came a claim from Kentucky, made by the collector of internal revenue, General Buckner, involving some $60,000. He had employed his own agent and clerk, who had given him a bond in sufficient security for the faithful performance of his duties. That clerk defaulted in the sum of $60,000 and afterward cut his own throat. The officer had acted honestly. He came here and asked to be reimbursed. He was an honest man, an honest officer. He was a republican, and brought some republican influence to bear, and notwithstanding I resisted the payment of the claim, he swept that side of the House, and coming from the blue-grass region, as he did, of course he swept this side. Everybody voted for his claim, it was passed, and again this policy was confirmed. When that was done by this House I quit resisting this class of claims; and I have only to say that this one is at least as good as either of the others, and, therefore, I consented to its being favorably reported without formal or other opposition. But I believed from the first that to begin relieving public officers by allowing claims of this class we were entering upon a policy which might come home to plague us.

Mr. CASWELL. This man was not the custodian of specific property. He kept an account with the Government; he kept a debtor and creditor account. His undertaking was to faithfully account for the moneys that passed into his hands. He might have been excused, perhaps, if the money had been lost by an armed force, or by riot, or possibly by fire; but this case cannot be distinguished from ordinary larceny or burglary, which is committed on the post-offices throughout the United States.

I concede in the case referred to by the gentleman from Illinois that if this money could be traced to an employé of the Government, then this man ought to be released. He would have a strong equitable claim. But, as I understand this, the presumption is that some outside parties took these funds from the counter, and it cannot be traced to the negligence or bad appointment of the Government. It does not require gross negligence to fix the liability of this man. Any carelessness whatever is sufficient to establish that liability. No one will deny—in fact it is conceded—that he would be liable upon his bond; hence there is no legal defense. There is no legal reason why he should be relieved. There is nothing left but an equitable one. It has not the features about it of the case of the clerk of internal revenue referred to by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. MORRISON,] because it is shown there that an employé of the Government took the funds. Then, if there be only an equitable claim and he was guilty of slight negligence, all the equity falls out, and he is left as the law would fix it.

I think it would be a very bad precedent; it would only lay the foundation for every Government official, who sustains a loss by theft or burglary, to present his case to the House and seek relief.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I wish to ask the gentleman a question before he takes his seat, and it is this: whether this case is not changed somewhat in the facts stated by the gentleman from Kentucky; and they are these: after this agent entered on the discharge of his duties his responsibilities were greatly increased, other duties were added not contemplated at the time he accepted the office and gave his bond? As appears from the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky, it was in the discharge of these supplemental and additional duties which had been imposed upon him after his appointment that involved what seems here to be negligence.

The Government increased his responsibilities, doubled his labor, and as the result of that, as stated by the gentleman from Kentucky, this loss resulted. It seems to me that that fact of this increase in his duties would take this case out of the rule as stated by my colleague from Ohio [Mr. MCMAHON] and by several other gentlemen. It appears, however, from the report of the committee that he was guilty of negligence, but if he was the Government was derelict in not furnishing him with the necessary safeguards which the Government ought to have furnished to protect the public property. I think every consideration of justice requires the passage of this bill.

Mr. CASWELL. Will my friend permit me to ask him a question? Does he not know that this agent was not required to continue in the discharge of the duties of the office if those duties were too onerous and too hazardous? If they were doubled up he could have surrendered his commission and ceased to act as such, but while he continued to act in that capacity all the responsibilities surrounding him must apply as a matter of course.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, I only wish to say a word. I stated that this was not a precedent, but that this bill would be in accordance with the proceedings of Congress in similar cases since Congress was organized. Here are some of the precedents which I will state.

In the first session of the Forty-third Congress the Hillhouse relief act was passed, which reimbursed Mr. Hillhouse in the sum of $185,000. Then the Spinner relief act passed in 1873, which reimbursed Mr. Spinner in the sum of $61,000 and a fraction.

The case of Richard B. Boling, surveyor of customs at Louisville, Kentucky, was passed in 1872, which reimbursed him in the sum of $23,838 which had been lost from his office by embezzlement. The case of John L. Thomas, collector of customs at the port of Baltimore, whereby a defalcation by the deputy collector of $27,549.25 was refunded to him. The Forty-fifth Congress passed similar bills for the relief of George Eyster, John W. Douglass, J. C. McBurney, James Johnston, and others, involving the same principle which is exhibited in this case, and many other cases of the same kind might be cited.

Mr. BROWNE. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts inform us what the object is in exacting from an assistant treasurer a bond?

Mr. BOWMAN. The object, Mr. Chairman, is to secure that the officers of the Government shall be honest, diligent, and faithful, and not to give bond against accidents by fire, earthquake, theft, or other accidents which are beyond their power.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Chairman, I doubt whether there has ever been a loss from the public Treasury by any of its officers or agents that has not been relieved by the legislation of Congress. I had a short experience as a representative of the United States some years ago, and had occasion to institute a number of suits upon bonds that had been executed for the purpose of indemnifying the Government against loss. I do not recollect one—I believe I do not recollect a single instance—in which relief was not granted, either by the action of some one of the Departments or by act of Congress.

I remember one case. Under the revenue law, a manufacturer of tobacco shipping it out of the district is required to execute a bond that the tobacco shall be delivered safely to the collector of the district into which it is to be transported, so that the tax may there be collected. In this instance certain tobacco caddies were exhibited bearing the mark of the United States inspector, purporting to contain so much of a particular brand of tobacco. When these boxes reached the thirty-second collection district of New York, it turned out that instead of containing tobacco they contained bricks, ashes, and rubbish. Though it was palpable that the tobacco the boxes should have contained had been fraudulently put on the market in the district of Indiana, and the United States cheated of its revenue, yet Congress believed that notwithstanding this the sureties upon that bond ought to be relieved, and it was done.

Some distiller cheats the Government. It is a clear case that he has put his illicit distillation upon the market, perhaps by hundreds of barrels, but it turns out that some of his friends—not one implicated in the fraud—is his surety. Although the Government has lost the revenue the bond was taken to secure, it would be very hard it is said to exact payment from a man in no wise implicated in the fraud, and hence he is relieved by an act of Congress.

Somebody who is the custodian of the public funds, and I presume, as is assumed by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. MCMAHON,] the insurer of the safe-keeping of the public funds, by the rascality of a clerk or the ingenuity of a thief, loses the money; and because the custodian is not to blame, notwithstanding his legal liability, notwithstanding he took the office with the burden, assumed the responsibility, entered into the contract, gave the bond to reimburse the Government in the event this loss was incurred, Congress in its generosity relieves the principal and relieves his sureties. And so it is in all these cases.

Now, as I understand the law it is this, at least it has been so adjudged by the supreme court of my own State: that the treasurer of a county or the treasurer of the State when he receives the fund is chargeable with it, and can only be relieved by accounting to the county or the State for it dollar for dollar. Neither in case of burglary nor of accident by fire or flood, nor by the act of the public enemy, is he relieved. He can only be relieved by accounting for the money, paying over the money, paying it out on the warrant of the auditor, or paying it to his successor in office, and I believe that ought to be the rule as to all the officers of the Government. We pay these men who assume these responsibilities liberal compensation for the duties they undertake to perform.

Mr. SAPP. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BROWNE. Certainly.

Mr. SAPP. Something has been said about the liability of bailees. Is it not true as a legal principle that bailees for hire are responsible for everything? Are they not absolutely insurers except as against the acts of God and the public enemy?

Mr. BROWNE. The gentleman is correct in his statement as to bailees for hire. But I was putting the question on the ground of public policy. I say it is public policy, and it is due to the Government and due to the people that when we have compensated men for the responsibilities they assume, when they have contracted to account for the moneys in their hands, they should be held absolutely liable, excepting, I will say, in extreme and extraordinary cases, when the Government may exercise generosity.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BROWNE. With pleasure.

Mr. BOWMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana then mean that if the funds are destroyed by fire, by the blowing up of the safe by night with gunpowder, or by other inevitable and unforeseen accidents, the man should still be held responsible?

Mr. BROWNE. I mean precisely what I attempted to say. The rule ought to be that the custodian of the public funds should be held an insurer of the people's money that goes into his hands.

Mr. CARLISLE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BROWNE. I ask the gentleman to allow me to finish the point I am now making, and I will then hear his question. I say that ought to be the rule. I say, at the same time, that extraordinary cases may arise that address themselves so strongly to the sympathy of the people's representatives that relief might be given. But they ought to be extraordinary cases, and they ought at least to come within the class of cases referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOWMAN.] They ought to result from inevitable accident, and there ought to be no shadow of negligence about them. I will now hear the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. CARLISLE. Suppose a case like this, where the officer who is sought to be held responsible for the safe custody of the money has not the appointment of his subordinates. Now, if there were any negligence at all in this case it was not the personal negligence of the assistant treasurer but the negligence of his subordinates over whose appointment or selection he had no control whatever.

Mr. BROWNE. That changes to some extent the question, but only so far as the case may address itself to the liberality of the legislative power. Let me give the gentleman from Kentucky a case, which occurred within my own State, and in which there was a decision of the supreme court of Indiana. A county treasurer received money in his official capacity. It was placed in a safe provided by the board of county commissioners. He was ordered by the board to keep the money thus deposited; and in putting the money there he was acting in strict obedience to the requirements of the board, doing county business. Subsequently his office was entered by burglars. The safe was bored into in the night-time and was blown to pieces by gunpowder. There was not the slightest evidence of negligence on the part of the county treasurer. The money was abstracted, and subsequently, in the suit brought upon his bond against him and his sureties, they were held to be liable by the court, and that decision was affirmed by the supreme court. And it is the rule of law to-day in the State of Indiana that the treasurer of a county is absolutely responsible for the funds committed to his keeping, notwithstanding they may be lost by theft or by flood or fire, or other inevitable accident. And notwithstanding the compensation of these officers is by no means large, we have found no trouble in Indiana in getting very respectable gentlemen to accept that office, with all the responsibilities imposed upon it by the law and by the decision of the supreme court of the State.

I did not intend, Mr. Chairman, to discuss this question so long. I simply desired to assert a principle. This Government ought to lay it down—it is the only rule of safety—that custodians of its funds and custodians of its property shall be absolutely responsible for the return of the money and the property intrusted to them. It is the only rule of safety. Reference has been made to a number of cases where relief has been given by past Congresses; and it would be exceedingly difficult, in my judgment, to refer to cases in which relief of that kind has been refused by Congress.

Of the thousands of dollars, I might say of the millions, of the public funds that have been lost in this way very little has ever been accounted for. And if we go on as we have begun it will be understood by every officer of the Government who accepts the trusts that may be imposed upon him that he is simply to be reasonably diligent, and if any clerk steals the money in his keeping, or if any thief steals it, or if he loses it in some mysterious way which he is unable to comprehend—perhaps finally it may go so far that if he happens to invest it in some important speculation, to take a corner in the Chicago wheat market, or in any other way loses the money of the Government, and is, unfortunately, unable to pay it himself, and the loss must fall upon his sureties, innocent men, then the Government will relieve him and them from the loss, and neither he nor they will be held to any responsibility whatever.

Now, if you leave these gentlemen to understand that the Government will hold them to a strict accountability there will be fewer losses in the future than there have been in the past. If you will make these Government officers understand that Congress will refuse relief, or, if it gives any at all, it must be in a strong case, where there is neither taint of fraud, shadow of dishonesty, nor suspicion of negligence—if you have that understood, then men will not permit their thousands and thousands of dollars to lie loosely on their tables or counters in the reach of thieves when there is a safe within five feet of them, you may take my word for it.

If we have established the precedents which have been referred to it is time that we should reverse them and establish a new order of things. We have gone far enough in that direction. I do not say it in any spirit of unkindness, but it is unfortunately the fact that there is scarcely any iniquitous thing that can come before a legislative body anywhere by which money is to be taken from the treasury in favor of which some precedent may not be quoted.

Mr. LAPHAM. It is undoubtedly true, Mr. Chairman, that a public officer is liable for the loss of funds intrusted to his care, whether that loss be by fire, or by theft, or from any other cause. Why is this so? It is because the officer executes to the Government a bond, conditioned that he will account for and pay over all such moneys intrusted to his care. It is because his official bond is without exception of loss by fire or by theft. In other words, it is because "it is nominated in the bond."

And yet the object of an official bond is not to guard against the destruction of trust funds by fire; not to prevent thieves from "breaking through" and stealing them. The object of an official bond is to secure personal fidelity on the part of the official, a faithful discharge of official duty on his part, and an honest administration of his affairs as an officer. When he has done that he has done all that in fact was intended to be secured by requiring of him a bond with sureties, except such sureties are required in order to indemnify the Government against loss in case of the failure and bankruptcy of the principal.

When you come to the question of a loss of trust funds in the hands of an official by an act in which he was in no sense a participant, and for which he is in no sense responsible, his case should be treated, and always has been treated, precisely as the case of a personal or private agent who has given no official bond.

Now, suppose a person intrusts to his agent moneys for the purpose of being disbursed, and those moneys, without the fault or neglect of the agent, are taken from him by larceny or destroyed by the casualty of fire. There is no rule of law which will justify the principal in such case in holding his agent responsible for funds thus lost or thus feloniously taken from him. On the contrary, the rule of the common law and the rule of common sense is, that if the agent has fully performed his duty, has taken reasonable care and precaution in protecting the property of his principal and in the discharge of his duty, he is not liable to his principal. It is for his neglect and want of proper care only that he can be made liable by the principles of the common law. What constitutes want of proper care in such cases depends very much upon the circumstances of each case. More care and diligence should be required in relation to a package of money than would be demanded in relation to a bale of goods.

It is true, I repeat again, that an officer must be held liable, if he has given a bond, no matter how faithfully he has performed his duty, unless he is in some way relieved. That is the precise foundation of all the acts of Congress which have provided relief to public officers in this class of cases.

The true question in every such case is, do the facts show that the public officer who asks to be relieved was free from any fault or neglect on his part? If that be the fact in this case, if the committee who have examined the case have arrived at the conclusion as a matter of fact that there was no negligence on the part of the officer, and the evidence in the case justifies that conclusion of the committee, then there ought to be relief granted in this case, as there has been in every other case of like character.

This whole case turns upon the simple point whether this officer was free from any fault on his part. I cannot subscribe to the doctrine advanced by some gentlemen that unless he was guilty of gross negligence he is entitled to compensation. If the officer has been guilty of any want of proper care and reasonable caution that neglect affords just ground for denying his claim to relief.

I put this class of claims and the relief which should be granted on them upon the analogous theory of the common law, that where a person asks damages at the hands of another by reason of the alleged negligence with which the other is charged, he must in all cases come into court with clean hands and show that he was free from any negligence on his part contributing to the injury of which he complains. So a public officer who is primarily liable, who has given his bond to account for the moneys which he receives, must be compelled to account for them unless he establishes that without any fault on his part, with entire fidelity on his part to his official obligations and trust, the funds which have been placed in his hands have been in some way taken from him or destroyed by casualty beyond his control. If the facts in this case meet the rule as I have endeavored briefly to state it, then I am in favor of voting for this claim. Unless they come up to such standard the bill should not in my judgment receive the sanction of the House. The committee, as I remember the reading of the report, acquit the claimant of all blame for the loss of the money in question, and acting upon that theory I shall support the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation?

The question being taken, it was decided in the negative—ayes 62, noes 72.

GEORGE EYSTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2796) for the relief of George Eyster.

The Clerk was proceeding to read the bill, when

Mr. O'NEILL moved that the committee rise.

Mr. BRIGHT. I hope the committee will not rise. We might sit awhile longer, as we have a holiday to-morrow.

The motion of Mr. O'NEILL was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. KENNA reported that the Committee of the Whole, having had under consideration the Private Calendar, had directed him to report, with a recommendation that it be not passed, the bill (H. R. No. 1542) for the relief of Charles Clinton, of New Orleans, late assistant treasurer at New Orleans, Louisiana.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move that the House adjourn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. TALBOTT, for two days, on account of important business.

MARINE HOSPITAL SERVICE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair, on behalf of the Speaker, asks unanimous consent for the correction of an erroneous reference. Yesterday a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury relative to the marine hospital service was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. It should have gone to the Committee on Commerce; and that reference will now be made, if there be no objection.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. DUNNELL that the House adjourn, it was agreed to; and accordingly (at three o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday next.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

By the SPEAKER: The petition of Lucretia Mott, Maria Mott

Also, the petition of George W. Silcott and others, for an appropriation to improve the Little Kanawha River, in West Virginia, by locks and dams—to the Committee on Commerce.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, January 19, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting papers concerning the payment of the first installment of the annual compensation of James B. Eads for the maintenance of the channel at the South Pass, Mississippi River, for the quarter ending October 30, 1879; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Commissary-General of Subsistence, suggesting the propriety of having the building for the libraries of the several bureaus of his department exempted from the operation of the act of February 26, 1879; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of Major Godfrey Weitzel, Corps of Engineers, on the superintendence, management, and repair of the Louisville and Portland Canal for the year ending December 31, 1879; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the Auditor of Railroad Accounts, relative to a deficiency of $750 for traveling and incidental expenses of his office for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War calling attention to a letter of his predecessor, of the 22d of May, 1878, recommending an appropriation of $10,529.49 to complete the purchase of Ringgold Barracks, Texas, under the decree of the district court of Starr County, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 3108) amending the charter of the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 3559) for the relief of L. H. Hershfield & Brother;

A bill (H. R. No. 2518) for the relief of Nelson Lyon and Jeremiah S. James; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3562) donating condemned cannon and cannonballs to the Soldiers' Monument Association of Birmingham, Connecticut.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. No. 3496) directing the removal of obstructions from the harbor at the Delaware breakwater; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 156) to correct an error in the "Act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes."

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 14th instant, approved and signed the following act and joint resolution:

An act (S. No. 819) to authorize the laying of a telegraphic cable from the mainland in Rhode Island to Block Island; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 58) touching the Hot Springs reservation, in the State of Arkansas.

The message also announced that the President had, on the 16th instant, approved and signed the act (S. No. 62) for the delivery to Samuel Lord, jr., receiver, of certain bonds now in the Treasury of the United States.

THE GENEVA AWARD FUND.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I desire to ask the attention of the honorable Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, to a petition which I am about to present.

I present the petition of Rufus A. Willis and 22 others, citizens of Massachusetts, praying for immediate action in regard to the Geneva award. These petitioners are, some of them, ship-owners, others merchants, others the assignees of estates which are in bankruptcy; some of them persons very extensively known in the business world in their part of the country. The claims which they represent against the sum of money in the Treasury of the United States received from Great Britain under the Geneva award are claims sufficient in amount, in many instances, to be large and competent fortunes for the support of an entire family. They claim that the money which is their due has been in the possession of the United States for about seven years, and that they have so far failed to obtain from Congress any decision of the justice of their claims.

All the members of the Judiciary Committee, without exception, have had occasion in the past to investigate the question as to the principles upon which the remains of the Geneva award ought to be distributed. Most of them, if not all, have expressed publicly in debate their opinion. A large majority of the present members of the Senate have considered and have discussed, at one time or another, this question. Bills have been introduced in past Congresses, which have passed one branch or the other, to dispose of this question. They have failed by reason of the lateness of time, so that when the House of Representatives passed a bill, the Senate did not dispose of it, or when the Senate passed a bill, the House of Representatives did not dispose of it. It is, therefore, manifestly necessary if this question is ever to be disposed of, that it shall be disposed of by some measure, reported from the committee which has charge of it, early in the first regular session of a Congress.

I desire to say that many other petitions to the same effect will be presented from claimants in Massachusetts within a few days; and for the satisfaction of the petitioners I inquire of the honorable chairman of the Judiciary Committee whether it will not be in the power of his committee to report at an early day, and before the general business of the country presses upon the attention of the Senate, a measure disposing of this question?

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I quite concur in the opinion that the Government ought to distribute this money to the persons who are entitled to it; but in order to do so, we have to agree upon some proposition for its distribution. So far Congress has never been able to agree, and no committee has ever been able to arrive at a unanimous report. The first bill which became a law, providing for the court of commissioners of Alabama claims, which was passed upon the report of a majority of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, and concurred in by the House, excluded from the list of claimants the very persons—artificial persons, it is true—who, in the judgment of the minority of the committee, had as plain a right to that money as any Senator on this floor has to the house which he owns and in which he lives. That bill passed. There was no question but that the persons provided for in that bill were entitled to their pay; everybody agreed to that, and they have been paid, with the exception of a few cases here and there where some sailor or other person was not in time in presenting his claim; but those cases are very few indeed; in fact but one such case has come to my knowledge.

Then there is a surplus remaining, after paying the claims provided by the law and adjudicated by the court of commissioners of Alabama claims. What is to be done with that? Why, sir, no committee of this body or of the other House has ever been able to come to a unanimous conclusion upon that subject. The two Houses have never been able to come together upon that subject. The matter is now before the Judiciary Committees of both Houses. We have before the Senate Judiciary Committee a number of bills that have been referred to us by the Senate, a great multitude of petitions, and some resolutions, I believe, upon the subject. There has been no fault upon the part of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate in considering this subject. They have considered it at every session. They considered it and reported a bill at last winter's regular session. Since then the membership of that committee has undergone some change. Three new members have been placed upon the committee.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the honorable chairman if it is not true that each of those gentlemen whom he designates as new members has made a very elaborate speech upon the subject, in his place as a Senator, in favor of one mode of distributing this award? One of them, the honorable Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CARPENTER,] I am quite sure has, and I think the others have done so.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator does not refer to the same members that I do. The Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. LAMAR,] who has been added to the committee, has never, so far as I know, made any speech upon the question. He may have done so, but I am not aware of it.

Mr. HOAR. He was a member of the House when the matter was reported upon there.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] I am sure has never made any remarks upon the subject. The Senator from Mississippi has not been able to take his seat at this session, and the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] whose constituents are so deeply interested in this question, owing to ill-health has been able to do scarcely any business at all in the committee at this session. Under these circumstances we have not been able to determine upon a bill. I can only say that we shall take the subject up as soon as we possibly can and work upon it until we arrive at some conclusion, until we agree or agree to disagree, which is quite as likely as anything else according to our former experience. There is no intention on the part of the committee to delay the consideration of the question, for there is not a member of the committee who does not feel, as everybody else feels, that this money ought to be distributed to those who are entitled to it, and that Congress ought to have learning enough and sense enough to find out who they are.

Mr. HOAR. I did not mean in what I said to impute any laches to that learned and able committee, but it is true that the report from that committee, to which the Senator from Ohio alludes, made to the last Congress, was made at so late a day that it was impossible for the Senate to take up and dispose of the question before the final adjournment on the 4th of March. It is also true that nearly or quite every member of the committee, and a majority of the members of the Senate, have considered carefully this question heretofore. It is not therefore a matter like a question before the Committee on Claims, which involves the examination of private rights or the investigation of facts anew, it is not like a question of framing a new legal mechanism to accomplish some object, which requires a new and careful consideration by the committee. The Senate will deal with the question, perhaps, as intelligently in the absence of a report as in the presence of a report from the committee; and I give notice, without imputing any laches to the committee, that if the failure to make an early report shall hereafter appear to be caused by the failure of the members of that honorable committee to agree among themselves, I shall submit a motion to discharge them from the attempt to agree, and to bring the bill directly before the Senate for its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONKLING subsequently said: I learn that a moment ago, when I was not in the Chamber, an inquiry was made touching the Geneva award bill, so called, and the action of the Committee on the Judiciary thereon. The honorable Senator from Ohio, the chairman of that committee, was kind enough, I understand, to say that a willingness had existed on his part to defer action upon that bill for some convenience of mine. I am greatly obliged to that honorable Senator for the willingness thus expressed, but I wish to say, allusion having been made to the subject, that my position in the committee touching the Geneva award bill has been so often, and I hope so plainly, expressed, as it has been in the Senate both by vote and otherwise, I should not feel that I ought to ask a moment's delay in action upon that subject, even though I were not able at the time to be present. I am always ready to vote upon the question, it being one which has been discussed and considered much, and I am sure the honorable Senator from Ohio knows of me, as I know of him very well the position which is held by us both.

Mr. THURMAN. What I said could not have conveyed the idea that the consideration of this subject had been postponed in committee at the request of the Senator from New York, for no such request was made; but the Senator from Mississippi being absent and the Senator from New York being in ill-health, and the committee having a great deal of other business to attend to, have not seen fit to take that matter up so far, but no doubt will do so at a very early day.

Mr. CONKLING. The honorable Senator will pardon me for having fallen into any little inaccuracy. I happened not to be present at the moment and received only in general from him the remark which he made. I thought the Senate might get the impression, or possibly those beyond the Senate interested, that delay had occurred at least in consequence of my absence from a meeting of the committee, and I only wish to say that I hope there will be no delay in respect of me, as I am ready always to vote upon the question.

Mr. HAMLIN. I present the petitions of A. J. Bird and other claimants, who allege that they have suffered losses in consequence of the so-called confederate cruisers, and praying for immediate action by Congress in relation to the Geneva award fund, and that such legislation may pass as will bring relief to them and to a large class of persons similarly situated. I move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I present the petitions of G. W. Brown and others, citizens of Rockland, Maine, referring to the same subject, who pray for immediate legislation, that opportunity may be given to the parties interested to bring their claims before some properly constituted tribunal. I move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, presented the petition of Fernando J. Moreno, late United States marshal for the southern district of Florida, praying compensation for providing for fourteen hundred and thirty Africans captured from Cuban slavers on the high seas by United States steamers and delivered into his custody in the year 1860; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of A. J. Murat and others, citizens of Apalachicola, Florida, praying for an appropriation by Congress for the improvement of the Apalachicola River and Bay; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DAWES. I present the memorial of Nathaniel Spooner, Eben Howes, and R. T. G. Candage, a committee of the trustees of the Marine Society of Boston, urging upon Congress the necessity, in the interests of commerce and of humanity, of an appropriation by Congress, in accordance with the recommendation of the Chief of the Engineer Department, for the dredging and deepening of the Scituate Harbor in that State, so as to make it available for a harbor of refuge. I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES presented the memorial of Henry A. Weeks and others, soldiers of the late war and citizens of Massachusetts, and the petition of P. A. Sweet and others, soldiers of the late war, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CARPENTER presented the petition of Mrs. Emma A. Hatch and others, citizens of Fond du Lac, Fond du Lac County, Wisconsin; the petition of Mary J. Plumer and others, citizens of Warsaw and Weston, Marathon County, Wisconsin; the petition of C. E. Fleming and others, citizens of Amherst, Portage County, Wisconsin, and the petition of H. A. Ancutt, M. D., and others, citizens of Jenny, Marathon County, Wisconsin, praying for an amendment to the Constitution providing that the right of suffrage shall be based on citizenship, and that citizens, native or naturalized, shall enjoy the right equally without any distinction founded on sex; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FERRY. In connection therewith I may be permitted to offer a joint resolution covering such an amendment. As it is short and of universal interest, I ask that it be read at the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be laid on the table, and announced under that order of business.

Mr. FERRY presented the memorial of Christopher F. Lanbirch and others, soldiers of the late war, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KIRKWOOD presented the petition of Augusta Clark and others, heirs of John Clark, deceased, of Johnson County, Iowa, praying for the passage of a law authorizing the payment to them of certain moneys improperly withheld from the deceased as register of the land office at Iowa City, Iowa; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented the petition of Thomas G. Corbin, captain on the retired list, praying to be restored to the active list of the Navy, with the rank of commodore; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. McMILLAN presented the memorial of A. Bradley and others, owners and agents of steam and sail vessels on the northern lakes, Superior, Michigan, Huron, Saint Clair, Erie, and Ontario, representing the owners of five hundred and eighty-three vessels at different ports, at an average season capacity of ten trips and 6,355,740 tons, remonstrating against the construction of a swinging bridge over the Detroit River at the city of Detroit; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of Hannah Roche, of the city of Washington, praying for the passage of a special act granting her a pension on account of services rendered by her daughter during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SLATER presented the petition of the Board of Trade of Portland, Oregon, praying Congress for an appropriation of $150,000 for the improvement of the Lower Columbia River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of A. S. Lockwood and others, actual settlers on The Dalles, Oregon, military reservation, praying for the passage of an act authorizing the sale of that reservation to those settlers at a fixed price per acre; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented the petition of H. Villard, president of the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, praying Congress to enact a law that the duty hereafter imposed on steel rails shall be specific at a rate not exceeding $10 per ton; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BUTLER presented the petition of John Merryman, president of the American Agricultural Society, praying for the passage of a law granting to that association a charter; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. CALL presented the petition of B. M. Williams and others, citizens of Columbia and Alachua Counties, Florida, praying for an appropriation of $20,000 for the opening of the Santa Fé River in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. McPHERSON. I present the memorial of Albert Sichel, of the city of New York, calling attention to certain loose and faulty methods connected with the internal revenue, particularly in applying foil wrappers to tobacco. As it is a very important matter, and as grave charges are preferred in the memorial, I ask that it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial will be reported, the Chair hearing no objection.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the memorial.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think it necessary to read that long paper.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey has asked that the memorial be reported at length. Does the Senator from Iowa object?

Mr. ALLISON. If we have all the petitions that are presented here by individuals upon different topics read at length we shall have very little else in the RECORD.

Mr. McPHERSON. I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Finance, and I invite their attention to the subject.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the honorable the Senate of the United States of America:

The undersigned, Albert Sichel, a citizen of the United States and a resident of the city of New York, begs leave to submit to your honorable body for its consideration his objections to the existing mode of printing and supplying foil wrappers for tobacco with United States revenue-stamps printed thereon.

Section 3369 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides for the manufacture of tobacco-stamps; directs that they shall be forwarded to the collectors of internal revenue; regulates what amount of stamps each collector shall keep on hand, and imposes upon the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the duty to prescribe proper and effective modes of cancellation. As to revenue-stamps printed on foil wrappers for tobacco these provisions are utterly disregarded, and the manner in which these stamps are now made, supplied, and canceled makes fraud upon the revenue an easy matter, and renders detection almost impossible.

These stamps are made by John J. Crooke, of New York, under the terms of two contracts entered into by himself and the Government. One, dated March 2, 1875, is for the printing of stamps for one-ounce packages of tobacco; the other, made in 1879, is for stamps for larger packages.

To form a correct idea of the abuses to which the present system is subject, it is necessary to consider how these stamps are made, how they reach the manufacturers of tobacco, and how they are canceled.

1. How are these stamps made? They are printed in the city of New York under the supervision of one agent of the Treasury. The same agent has been employed in the same capacity, in the same building, for about nine years. He not only acts as the agent for the Government, but also manages the printing business for the contractor. He employs, pays, and discharges workmen, buys supplies, and does other work for the contractor which is entirely incompatible with the duties of a Government agent charged with the protection of the revenue against every one, particularly against the contractor.

It is utterly impossible for this agent, even if there should exist on his part any desire so to do, to properly fulfill his duty; since one man cannot, in the nature of things, control a business so complicated as that carried on in connection with the printing of these stamps. Upon the same premises the stamps are made, the foil for them is manufactured, and a large printing business is done, employing the same presses alternately for private work and Government stamps.

While the Government maintains in the Treasury building at Washington an extensive and costly establishment for the manufacture of stamps, and for the supervision of the work by an intricate system of checks and counter-checks, it permits the same kind of work to be done in New York under the sole control of one officer.

2. How are these stamps supplied to manufacturers of tobacco?

Section 3369 of the Revised Statutes directs that "such stamps shall be furnished to the collectors requiring them, and each collector shall keep at all times a supply equal in amount to three months' sale thereof."

Stamped foil wrappers are not shipped to collectors of internal revenue, but are sent from the place where they are printed direct to the manufacturers of tobacco upon an order of a collector, and no collector keeps any supply on hand as the law makes it mandatory upon him to do.

It is therefore clear, since the collectors are excluded from any control over the stamps, that by collusion between a manufacturer of tobacco and this one Government official at the stamp-printing office in New York fraud upon the revenue can be practiced without any probability of detection.

3. How are these stamps canceled?

The object of canceling a stamp is to indicate by marking or defacing it that it has been used, thereby preventing its subsequent use. On the foil wrapper in question there is printed a small circular sign or ring, purporting to be the cancellation, bearing the name of the manufacturer for whom the wrapper is intended and a fictitious date of cancellation. The stamp and this so-called cancellation are printed by one and the same impression, so that the stamp has never existed uncanceled. A stamped wrapper can without difficulty be taken from a package and used again, without showing any trace of its previous use.

Attached hereto is one of these stamped wrappers, and the best proof of the inefficiency of the cancellation will be found in the fact that it is impossible to see whether this wrapper has been used or not.

There is no excuse for the present system. It is in clear violation of the law. It exposes the revenue to fraud, both in the manufacture and distribution of the stamp, and in the liability of its repeated use; and has not even the palliation of being the best the Department has at its service, as the stamps printed at the Government offices in Washington are in every respect preferable. They are better made, and therefore not so easily counterfeited; they are supplied according to law, and under the regulations of the Department they must be so affixed that in opening a package of tobacco the stamp is perforce destroyed. The same looseness which pervades the entire system of making, supplying, and canceling stamped wrappers is also noticeable in the form of the contracts.

The contract of March 2, 1875, does not even designate in what city or State this stamp-printing establishment should be located; nor does it exact from the contractor any bond for his compliance with its terms.

For manufacturers of tobacco there can be no legitimate advantage of any magnitude derived from the system. It is true they save the labor of affixing and canceling the stamps; but the expense of printing upon foil is greater than that of printing upon paper, and this difference must, if not entirely balance, necessarily reduce that advantage to an insignificance. The defects and the illegality of the system have been repeatedly pointed out to the Department, but it has not seen fit to abolish it.

And your petitioner prays that your honorable body take such action in this matter as in its wisdom it may deem just and proper.

And your petitioner will ever pray.

ALBERT SICKEL.

Mr. ANTHONY presented the petition of Daniel Houlihan, of Rhode Island, praying to be allowed arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BALDWIN presented the memorial of A. Woodward and 22 others, soldiers of the late war and citizens of Michigan, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of H. J. Matthews and 98 others, citizens of Wayne County, Michigan, praying for the passage of a law authorizing the payment to soldiers of the difference between the value of greenbacks and gold at the time they performed their services; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BLAIR presented the petition of Thomas Vose, president of the Boston, Concord, and Montreal Railroad Company, praying for a reduction of the duty on steel rails from $28 to $10 per ton; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WINDOM. I present the petition of Anna B. Underwood, Harriett B. Sargent, Mary Cary Hulett, J. M. Underwood, A. F. Wilson, C. F. Young, and others, citizens of Wabasha County, Minnesota, praying for the following amendment to the national Constitution:

ARTICLE XVI.

The right of suffrage in the United States shall be based on citizenship and shall be regulated by Congress, and all citizens of the United States, native or naturalized, shall enjoy this right equally, without any distinction of sex.

I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I also present the petition of William F. Bacon, sergeant-major of the Thirteenth Illinois Cavalry, and 246 others, stating briefly that they were soldiers in the late war of the rebellion and enlisted in the Army of the United States for the preservation of the Government, and served honorably and faithfully in the same, and were promised certain bounties on condition that they volunteered for the suppression of the rebellion. "Having done so, we were unfortunately taken sick, losing our health, which a great number of us never fully recovered, and were discharged from the United States Army upon a surgeon's certificate of disability, thereby causing part of us to lose all our bounty, and a part nearly all, which, because of such discharge, was not our fault, and wholly beyond our control. We, therefore, ask your honorable body to pass a law granting full bounty to all soldiers discharged for diseases contracted in the line of duty on a surgeon's certificate of disability, the same as if discharged for wounds received in action or after having served the full term of enlistment. The petitioners desire to say that they consider this but an act of justice due to this class of soldiers, and they respectfully urge upon Congress the passage of the law referred to." I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARLAND presented the memorial of T. C. Pepkins and others, citizens of Hot Springs, Arkansas, remonstrating against alleged burdensome assessments which the Hot Springs commission made on their lots; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. GROOME presented the petition of the heirs at law of Captain Lambert Wickes, deceased, of the United States Navy, who served during the war of the Revolution, praying for the passage of a law authorizing the payment to them of certain moneys due to the deceased on account of prizes; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the petition of John N. Pennell, late private in Company A, Fifth Regiment Maryland Volunteers, praying for the passage of a law for the equalization of bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of Peter Yarnell, late private Company D, Twelfth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, praying to be allowed arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GORDON presented resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of colored citizens in South Carolina, depositors in the Freedman's Savings-Bank, in favor of the passage of a law to provide for the repayment by the United States Government of all the unsatisfied claims of depositors against that bank; which was referred to the Select Committee on the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a petition praying Congress to pass an act requesting the President of the United States to invite all the governments of the world having maritime commerce to appoint agents to represent such governments in a convention of all such nations, to be held in Philadelphia on the 4th day of July, 1880, for the purpose of maturing and presenting a plan for the construction of a free ship-canal across the Isthmus of Darien, of such dimensions as will admit the passage through it of all ships, small or great, of all the nations of the earth; the construction of such canal to be paid for in proportion to the tonnage of each nation uniting in its construction, and to be kept in repair thereafter by each nation paying therefor in proportion to the tonnage of each nation passing through such canal. This petition is numerously signed by leading representative men of Saint Louis, among them Colonel D. P. Rowland, president of the Cotton Exchange, Hon. I. H. Sturgeon, Nathan Cole, E. O. Stanard, Craig Alexander, Webb M. Samuels, and many others. I ask that the petition may lie on the table until action shall have been taken upon the resolution offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GROOME] to raise a special committee to consider the subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will lie on the table for the present.

Mr. ALLISON presented the petition of John W. Kellum and others, citizens of the sixth congressional district of Iowa, praying for the speedy passage of a bill introduced in the House of Representatives authorizing the payment of the difference between gold and silver at the time of payment of soldiers in the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CONKLING presented the petition of H. A. Vaughan & Co. and others interested in the shipping business, praying the passage of the bill (S. No. 939) to amend the law relative to the seizure and forfeiture of vessels for breach of the revenue laws; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of the Friends' Temperance Union of the Society of Friends, of New York, authenticated by the officers, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of the Bullion Club of New York, in favor of restricting from circulation the emission of paper money below the denomination of $20, and praying that coin may by force of law be used in lieu of the smaller denominations of notes; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of F. M. Bell and others, citizens of New York, soldiers in the late war, praying for the passage of a bill for the equalization of bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CONKLING. I present a similar petition, much more numerously signed by citizens of New York who were soldiers and marines in the volunteer forces of the United States, making the same prayer. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I present also a memorial of 168 honorably discharged soldiers of the United States Army engaged in the war for the Union, citizens of the State of New York, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) for the examination and adjudication of pension claims, assigning their reasons therefor. I move that this memorial be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL presented the petition of James E. L. Taylor, William Taylor, William Vanatta, James M. Phillips, Nathan Fisher, and others, of Knobnoster, Missouri, praying for the passage of a law for the equalization of bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented additional papers in the case of Millie E. Hays, to accompany the bill (S. No. 930) for the relief of Millie E. Hays, widow of John Hays deceased; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PLUMB presented resolutions of the city council of Wyandotte, Kansas, in favor of an appropriation by Congress for the improvement of the Missouri River above Kansas City; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of William H. Alferd and others, citizens of Kansas and soldiers in the late war, praying for the passage of a law granting them the difference between the value of greenbacks and gold at the time of payment for services rendered the Government; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of D. Bishop and others, foremen of the military prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, praying for the payment of arrearages of pay due them for services performed; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. VEST presented the petition of William Barlow and 55 others, citizens of Bates County, Missouri, praying for the passage of a law for the equalization of bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of John A. Scudder and others, citizens of Missouri, Iowa, and Minnesota, praying for the passage of a law granting compensation to the widow and heirs at law of Captain H. M. Shreve for the use of his patent for a snag-boat; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BAYARD presented the petition of Victor du Pont and 135 other citizens of Wilmington, Delaware; the petition of Henry Eckel and 27 other citizens of Wilmington, Delaware; and the petition of I. Wilkins Cooch and 35 other citizens of New Castle, Delaware, praying for the passage of a law for the withdrawal of the compulsory legal-tender power of United States notes; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HEREFORD presented the petition of S. A. Childers, late second lieutenant Third Regiment West Virginia Cavalry Volunteers, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McPHERSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Wallis Pattee praying for a pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 620) granting a pension to Jacob Nix, of New Ulm, Brown County, Pennsylvania, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 617) granting an increase of pension to William H. Hale, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 582) granting a pension to John N. Snider, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 64) extending the provisions of the first section of an act entitled "An act fixing the rate of interest upon arrearages of general taxes and assessments for special improvements now due to the District of Columbia, and for a revision of assessments for special improvements, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1879, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 169) making an appropriation for filling up, draining, and placing in good sanitary condition the grounds south of the Capitol, along the line of the old canal, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. WITHERS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 920) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of the District of Columbia," approved June 12, 1860, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of James King, late private in Company B, Second Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1044) granting a pension to James King.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Susan Jeffords praying for a pension, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1045) granting a pension to Susan Jeffords.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 991) granting a pension to D. H. Myers, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of John Flynn, of Bangor, Maine, praying for an increase of pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Virginia Grove, of Pensacola, Florida, praying that a pension be allowed to Missouri Hiner, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. THURMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3034) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Macon, Georgia, and to transfer certain counties from the northern to the southern district in said State, reported it with amendments.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 39) granting an increase of pension to James H. Reeve, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following petitions, reported adversely thereon, and the committee were discharged from their further consideration, namely:

The petition of Elizabeth Cassidy, praying the passage of a law granting her arrears of pension;

The petition of Frederick Wedemeyer and 32 others, praying for a pension for soldiers who have served twenty years, irrespective of disability;

The petition of James Reynolds, of the Soldiers' Home at Dayton, Ohio, praying a pension; and

The petition of John M. Seppey and other citizens of Logansport, Indiana, praying for an increase in the rate of pension now allowed for certain permanent specific disabilities.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 507) to increase pensions in certain cases, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CARPENTER. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back the bill (H. R. No. 1492) to amend section 688 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to writs of prohibition and mandamus, without amendment and with a recommendation that it pass. It has but a single section and I ask for its present consideration.

The bill was read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understood that is just reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Reported this morning.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think owing to its importance the bill had better go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill goes over under the rule.

Mr. CARPENTER subsequently said: Mr. President, as there is some misunderstanding about the report made on House bill No. 1492, I ask leave to withdraw the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is so ordered; the report is withdrawn.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. SLATER. I move that the reference of the bill (S. No. 932) for the relief of the sufferers by the wreck of the Government transport bark Torrent be changed from the Committee on Naval Affairs to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SAUNDERS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1046) granting an increase of pension to the widow of Major Thomas T. Thornburgh, late of the United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1047) for the relief of the Louisville and Jefferson County Southwestern Association, of Louisville, Kentucky; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1048) for the relief of Thomas Doak; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1049) to amend section 2447 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to the issue of patents for private land claims confirmed by act of Congress; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1050) for the relief of Thomas G. Corbin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BLAIR asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1051) granting an increase of pension to Stephen D. Smith; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PADDOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1052) to extend the land laws of the United States over the Territory of Alaska; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1053) to amend an act entitled "An act to grant additional rights to homestead settlers on public lands within railroad limits," approved March 3, 1879; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1054) making appropriation for a military wagon-road from the Niobrara River, in Nebraska, via Rosebud agency, to Fort Meade, Dakota Territory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BUTLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1055) for the relief of Charles C. Duncanson and Washington B. Williams, auctioneers, of Washington City, District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WALLACE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1056) donating six condemned iron cannon to John D. Musser Post, No. 66, Grand Army of the Republic, of Muncy, Pennsylvania, to build fence around soldiers' monument in the Muncy cemetery; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1057) granting a pension to John B. Butler; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1058) for the relief of Walker A. Newton; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. EATON (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. 1059) for the relief of George D. C. Hibbs; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. VEST asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1060) to incorporate "The Interoceanic Transit Company," and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1061) for the relief of Helen M. Fiedler; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. McDONALD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1062) amending section 3022 of the Revised Statutes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GARLAND asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1063) for the relief of William J. Gamble; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1064) for the relief of Henry M. Rector; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator who introduced that Rector bill state what it is. I think last year it was a bill for a private land matter that was before the Committee on Private Land Claims. I understood just now that it was referred to the Committee on Public Lands. If it is like the same matter that was before the Committee on Private Land Claims last year, I suppose it had better be considered by that committee again. I do not know, however, that it is the same case.

Mr. GARLAND. The bill I have just introduced has never been introduced before, and I will state that while it is in the nature of a private land claim, it refers to a general subject which is now before the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am entirely satisfied.

Mr. PLUMB asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1065) for the relief of the heirs or legal representatives of Robert J. Baugness, deceased, late private of Company I, Thirty-seventh Illinois Volunteers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MORGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1066) to grant certain public lands in Alabama in aid of the Warrior and Tennessee Rivers Railroad; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. KERNAN (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1067) for the relief of John H. Walker, captain United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1068) for the relief of William Henry Ward; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. GORDON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1069) for the relief of Samuel Noble; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FERRY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 65) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. FERRY. I ask that it be read in full.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the following article be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of the said Legislatures, shall be valid as part of the said Constitution, namely:

ARTICLE XVI.

SECTION 1. The right of suffrage in the United States shall be based on citizenship, and the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States, or by any State, on account of sex, or for any reason not equally applicable to all citizens of the United States.

SEC. 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

The joint resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PLATT. I ask leave to introduce a joint resolution relating to an interoceanic canal, and as it is a subject which attracts public attention and excites public interest, and the resolution is short, I desire to have it read at length for information.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 66) relating to an interoceanic canal; which was read twice, as follows:

Whereas an improved and cheaper maritime communication between the Atlantic and Pacific sea-boards of the United States by means of a ship-canal through some portion of the Central American isthmus has become important to the commercial interests of this country; and

Whereas Congress deems it to be necessary and expedient that the national and public interests in such a communication should be secured, rather than merely private and speculative ends: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the President be requested, if he shall deem it expedient, to communicate to the governments of the principal maritime nations of Europe the desire of this Government to secure such public interests, and to invite the co-operation of such governments in the selection of a route of isthmus ship transit which shall be found to subserve most largely the general interests of all the maritime nations, and also to communicate to such governments the desire of the Government to come to a mutual understanding with reference to the neutrality of such an interoceanic transit when it shall have been opened by the enterprise and capital of their respective citizens.

The joint resolution was ordered to lie on the table.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills received from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

The bill (H. R. No. 3108) amending the charter of the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia;

The bill (H. R. No. 3559) for the relief of L. H. Hershfield & Brother—to the Committee on Finance;

The bill (H. R. No. 2518) for the relief of Nelson Lyon and Jeremiah S. James—to the Committee on Patents; and

The bill (H. R. No. 3562) donating condemned cannon and cannon-balls to the Soldiers' Monument Association of Birmingham, Connecticut—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. MORGAN, it was Ordered, That the petition for a grant of lands to aid in the construction of the Tennessee and Warrior Rivers Railroad be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

On motion of Mr. McMILLAN, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of the heirs of Asbury Dickins, deceased, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. COCKRELL, it was Ordered, That the papers in the claim of Frances A. Robinson, administratrix of John Robinson, deceased, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to state in this connection that there are a large number of bills pending before the Committee on Claims where there are no papers, where the papers are still on file in the Secretary's office, and no orders have been taken to have them referred to that committee.

On motion of Mr. GORDON, it was Ordered, That the memorial and other papers relating to the claim of Samuel Noble be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

On motion of Mr. INGALLS, it was Ordered, That leave be granted for the withdrawal from the Senate files of all papers pertaining to the claims of Irwin & Phillips and Joseph C. Irwin.

SPANISH-AMERICAN CLAIMS COMMISSION.

Mr. WALLACE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed to communicate to the Senate the number and names of the claimants before the Spanish-American commission for compensation for wrongs to American citizens and their property in Cuba, with the amount of each claim and the total thereof, and also the number of claims adjudicated and settled by said commission, with the names of the claimants and amount of each claim so adjudicated and settled; and if the same have been paid, when and to whom paid, and also in what cases there has been a disagreement between the arbitrators, and whether these disagreements have been submitted to the umpire, as provided by the convention establishing the commission; and if not so submitted, the reasons therefor; and also when said commission began its session, how many days in each year it has been in session, and the total amount of money expended by the United States for salaries and expenses of the said Spanish-American commission to the end of the last fiscal year.

EDUCATION OF NAVAL OFFICERS.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to communicate to the Senate the report of Professor James R. Saley on the foreign systems of education of naval officers.

TRAINING OF SEAMEN.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to communicate to the Senate the report of Lieutenant-Commander F. E. Chadwick on the foreign systems of training seamen for the Navy.

ADDITIONAL MESSENGER.

Mr. VOORHEES submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate be, and is hereby, authorized to employ an additional messenger, whose duty it shall be to transact all such business with the different Departments of the Government as may be desired by the Senators, and shall receive the same compensation as other messengers.

REFUNDING THE NATIONAL DEBT.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that the funding resolution submitted by me on the 13th instant, and on which I submitted some remarks on Thursday last, and intended then to have had referred to the Committee on Finance, be taken from the Calendar and referred to that committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be taken from the Calendar and referred to the Committee on Finance unless there be objection. The Chair hears none, and the resolution is so referred.

SUFFERERS BY EXPLOSION AT BRIDESBURGH ARSENAL.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 128) for the relief of Edward Shields and others.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which requires the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $8,000, in such proportions as he may deem just and equitable, to the following-named sufferers by the explosion at the United States arsenal at Bridesburgh, Pennsylvania, on the 7th of August, 1875: Edward Shields, Mary Willis, Michael Farrell, Ellen Butler, Henry Steger, Hugh McLaughlin, William McMillan, Henry F. Deardon, Alfred Altemus, Alexander Ross, Nicholas Zillier, Rudolph Deal, Samuel Vanzant, and John M. Klotz.

Mr. THURMAN. What is the amount appropriated by that bill?

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Eight thousand dollars.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN W. CHEEKS.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I also ask unanimous consent to take into present consideration Senate bill No. 468.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 468) for the relief of John W. Cheeks. It is a direction to the Secretary of War to remove the charge of desertion from the name of John W. Cheeks, formerly a coporal in Company D, Thirty-third Regiment of United States Infantry.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, December 9, 1879:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 468) for the relief of John W. Cheeks, have had the same under consideration, and beg to submit the following report:

It appears, from the papers filed with this case, that John W. Cheeks enlisted on the 14th day of April, 1864, in Company D, Thirty-third Regiment United States Infantry, for three years, and was discharged on the 20th day of June, 1867, on account of expiration of service, his discharge certifying that his character was good. During this term of enlistment, and while holding the rank of corporal, his company was stationed at Mobile, Alabama. In August, 1866, he applied to the commanding officer for a furlough, which was refused. After this refusal he handed over his arms to the first sergeant of his company and absented himself, remaining away from his company one month and six days.

He re-enlisted on the 1st day of July, 1867, and served in Company D, Eighth Regiment United States Infantry, for three years, during which time he was appointed to the position of sergeant, and was discharged on the 1st day of July, 1870, his certificate of discharge bearing the inscription, "character, excellent."

He again re-enlisted on the 1st day of July, 1870, in the same company and regiment, for the term of five years, and was discharged in consequence of paragraph 7, standing order No. 78, dated War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, Washington, April 2, 1872, his discharge again certifying that his character was good.

On the 24th day of October, 1876, he applied, through his attorney, to the Secretary of War to have the charge of desertion, which appeared on his record, removed, giving as a reason for the removal of this charge that he (Cheeks) had not deserted, but that he was simply "absent without leave," and stating that he had been summoned home by his father to see his sister, who was at the point of death and who died before he reached there; that very soon after his arrival at home he was taken with small-pox, which prevented him from returning to his company as soon as he had intended, and that after he got well he voluntarily returned and reported to his commander. He further states that he had never been tried upon the charge of desertion, but was very soon afterward promoted to the rank of sergeant, and at the end of his term honorably discharged with a good character.

The Secretary of War, in answer to a subsequent letter of the attorney of Mr. Cheeks, wrote as follows:

"WAR DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON CITY, January 3, 1877.

"SIR: Your letter of the 27th ultimo, relative to a previous application for removal of the charge of desertion against John W. Cheeks, Company D, 33d Infantry, has been carefully considered, and I have respectfully to state that while no proper ground seems to exist for a reversal of the decision of the Adjutant-General by this Department, it is thought the mitigating circumstances and attending facts of his restoration to duty without trial, to serve out the time lost, and finally his honorable discharge, are for the accounting officer to consider in connection with any claim the soldier may bring for bounty, &c., and that the decision of the Supreme Court, referred to by you, is for the accounting officer's attention, but cannot affect or change the record here.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"J. D. CAMERON,
"Secretary of War.

"J. H. WALL, Esq., 1411 G Street, City."

The fact, as stated, that he handed his arms to his sergeant before leaving and voluntarily returned to his company, and that he was not tried for desertion, is not, in the judgment of the committee, sufficient proof that he was not a deserter, nor is it sufficient to warrant the Department in removing the charge. The fact that he was not tried was simply an act of negligence on the part of his commanding officer, and does not in the least excuse him for absenting himself from his company in the manner he did. That he served faithfully during the balance of this enlistment and re-enlisted twice afterward, each time receiving an honorable discharge with an excellent character, is, in the opinion of your committee, sufficient to warrant Congress in authorizing the proper officer to obliterate the charge of desertion from the record, but this could not, in the judgment of your committee, be done without an act of Congress.

We, therefore, taking all the attending circumstances into consideration, recommend the passage of the bill.

The Committee on Military Affairs reported the bill with an amendment to add:

That no bounty or allowance of any kind shall be paid to this soldier on account of removal of desertion, in addition to what he has already received.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To fill the vacancies occasioned by the death of the late Senator Houston, of Alabama, in the Committees on Privileges and Elections, on Claims, and on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, the Chair appoints his successor, Mr. PRYOR.

DEPUTY COLLECTOR AT SEAFORD.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2790.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2790) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint a deputy collector at Seaford, Sussex County, Delaware, and for other purposes.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a written report?

Mr. BAYARD. There is not. I will say that the bill does not add an officer to the list nor does it cost the Government a farthing. The same officer who is to be designated deputy collector hereafter is now there as an inspector.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. B. CAMPBELL.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask the Senate to consider Senate bill No. 317, reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 317) for the relief of Captain J. B. Campbell. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Treasury to pay a certain judgment in which Hugh Waters is plaintiff and J. B. Campbell is defendant, obtained in the United States circuit court for the district of Oregon, amounting, at the time it was rendered, to $2,100.50, and the further sum of $191.35 for court and witnesses' fees in defending the suit, the judgment having been obtained against Campbell and costs incurred by him while acting in the line of his duty as captain in the United States Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSPORTATION OF ANIMALS.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, I now call for the special order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey calls for the consideration of the special order. The special order of the day is the bill (S. No. 206) relative to the transportation of animals, which is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Mr. President, the transportation of live stock to the sea-board is such an important interest in this country that any measure, no matter what may be the object of the persons offering it, which imposes conditions upon that transportation should be scrutinized by the Senate before it becomes a law. It would seem, at the first view, that the interests of the parties concerned would insure good conduct in this transportation. The shipper is interested in having the cattle reach New York in good health and spirits, and with as little loss of weight as possible, while the carrier is interested to the same end because he well knows that unless proper facilities are furnished to secure it another line of communication will be sought by the shipper. Notwithstanding this, it is a lamentable fact that live stock were fearfully abused, and that they reached New York very often in a condition unfit for food. The health of the community was involved in this matter; humane people were shocked at it, and they asked the intervention of Congress. Upon their representations a bill was passed in 1872. Now, the inquiry is whether that law is better or worse than the present bill, and I will throw out a few suggestions upon this point.

The amendment to section 4386 of the Revised Statutes is in two particulars. As the law stands, where cattle are carried in a common car they must be unloaded, after they have been upon the car, every twenty-eight hours for water, rest, and food, for a period of at least five hours. It is proposed to strike out the word "five" and insert "seven," so that seven hours shall be the period for which cattle shall be on the ground to rest. The existing law allows this to be omitted where the company is prevented from so unloading by storm or other accidental cause; this bill confines it to cases of "unavoidable cause." I do not think the "unavoidable causes" provision is any improvement on the phraseology in the present law; but about that I am not captious at all, and I think seven hours for rest are required, so that I have no objection to that amendment.

Section 4387 is only amended in one particular.

> Animals so unloaded shall be put into pens, and shall be provided with an abundance of good sound food, and properly watered.

The words "put into pens" are the new words here. I think the words "properly fed and watered" good phraseology for a court to construe; but, probably, the words "put into pens" might not be construed by the courts as requiring parties to do what is in view.

But, sir, the main objection to this measure is in the amendment to section 4388. As the law now stands, all cattle transported from the western country to the sea-board must be unloaded every twenty-eight hours, unless they are carried in cars, boats, or other vessels in which they can and do have proper food, water, space, and opportunity to rest. The law as it now stands requires cattle to be unloaded every twenty-eight hours, unless they are carried in cars or vessels where there is an opportunity to feed them and to water them, and where they have space and opportunity to rest. This amendment to section 4388 does away with this entirely, for it provides:

> Any company or persons operating any railroad, or owner or custodian of or person having control over such animals, whose duty it may be to perform any of the duties mentioned in either of the two preceding sections or two following sections, who shall knowingly and willfully fail to comply with any of the provisions thereof, or who shall knowingly violate any such provisions, shall be liable for and forfeit and pay a penalty of not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars: Provided, however, In all cases when animals in transit from one place to another be transported in cars, boats, and other vessels in which said animals do have daily proper food and water, the provisions in regard to their being unloaded shall not apply.

"Space and opportunity for rest" are left out here. This must have been for a purpose which the honorable Senator in charge of the bill will be able to explain.

Then there is a further provision that "in no case shall animals be confined in cars for a longer period than sixty consecutive hours;" but there is no provision that they shall be kept off the cars any particular length of time at all. In the case of common cars they must, according to the existing law, remain off the cars for a period of seven hours, but under this bill they can be unloaded from the cars and put upon the cars again. I intend to offer an amendment on that point. If a steer can be fed and watered only at intervals of twenty-eight hours, and if you keep that steer on the cars for sixty hours, why should not that steer have rest for seven hours?

Then, again, cattle require to rest, certainly as often as once in twenty-eight hours to lie down, to go to sleep. There is no provision for that in this bill. As I understand it, these improved cars are not constructed so that steers can lie down to rest, as is often the case on boats.

Mr. McPHERSON. In some cars they can; in others they cannot.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Then I should say that the law as it now stands is better than this bill makes it. The law as it now stands says that they shall be unloaded every twenty-eight hours unless they are carried in conveyances of some kind by which there is an opportunity to feed and water them and also for them to have rest.

Then, again, why should these cattle be kept for sixty hours upon a car if they cannot lie down? Is not that cruelty? It may be said, and was said here before, that it required sixty hours to transport them from Saint Louis to the sea-board. I do not care how many hours it takes to transport them from Saint Louis; we are discussing this subject in a humanitarian point of view; and I hold that no steer should stand on his legs for over forty-eight hours, and that that is too long altogether, and that the law as it now stands, which says they shall be unloaded for rest every twenty-eight hours unless provision is made for their lying down, is better than the present bill.

This legislation is leveled at transportation by the common cars, and I take it for granted that there are certain patents which are used now in cars for the transportation of cattle which the railroad companies will be compelled to use hereafter if you pass this bill as it is now. These cars, as I understand, are cars that have stalls in them. I doubt whether cattle can be transported as well where they are stalled in that way as they can be upon cars where the cattle stand together and rest upon each other. I do not believe they would be jolted as much. If there are sixteen cattle in a common car where there are no stalls, I do not think those cattle would be nearly as much jolted as if they were in the stall cars.

Mr. President, this whole bill is leveled at the transportation by common cars; the penalties are in the first two sections and the two last; they are not aimed at transportation by the patent cars. It seems to me that if humanity requires cattle to be unloaded every twenty-eight hours, not only for water and food, but for rest, then humanity is shocked if they are carried in cars for sixty hours without an opportunity to rest, and here there is no provision that they shall be unloaded for rest for any length of time whatever.

Mr. McPHERSON. I should like to have the Senator offer an amendment making provision for that.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I shall do that. On boats they have an opportunity for rest; on cars by the present law they must be unloaded, as I said before, every twenty-eight hours unless the mode of transportation furnishes an opportunity for rest.

As I said before, these penalties are mainly in at the two first sections which prescribe the mode of carrying by common cars; and it would seem to me, although I know that my friend has no such object in view, that this was for the purpose of getting certain patent cars in common use.

Then, again, the mode of collecting the penalties is entirely changed, and I think it is not changed advantageously at all. The penalty, as the law now is, must be sued for in the name of the United States and recovered in the district where the cause of action arose or where the defendant may be found doing business. By this bill it is to be recovered by an informer who is to get for what he does not only full costs of suit, but that which will include all cost and necessary charges. That will swell up the costs. The informer will employ lawyers and run about the country, and this will swell the amount of the "necessary charges" to an unconscionable sum, it seems to me. I am opposed to the whole system of informers, and in my opinion there is no necessity for that provision in this bill. It may be said that the officers of the humane societies will go around and attend to the prosecutions. Then they should not be allowed to recover "full costs" and "necessary charges," which means everything that they pay counsel, all their traveling expenses and hotel bills. Certainly the Senate of the United States cannot possibly be in accord with such a provision as that.

Then, again, this section allows a suit to be brought in the circuit where the cause of action originated. For instance, if the cause of action originated in Minnesota, as Colorado is in the same circuit with Minnesota, you could compel the defaulting party to answer in Colorado. That certainly was not intended by the committee, or if it was it surely cannot receive the sanction of the Senate. Certainly the suit should be brought where the cause of action originated or where the carrier is transacting business or has his domicile. Colorado, Arkansas, Missouri are in the eighth judicial circuit. The cause of action may accrue in Minnesota, and the party may be sued under this bill in Arkansas or Colorado.

It seems to me that these objections to the bill are well taken, and I now leave it to some of my other friends to add to them if they can.

Mr. HEREFORD. I have not risen, Mr. President, for the purpose of making any speech against this bill, but simply to give very briefly a few of the reasons why I cannot support it. I am opposed to this bill in toto; I am opposed to the original law which it seeks to amend. Section 4387 of the Revised Statutes as amended in this bill will read:

> Animals so unloaded shall be put into pens, and shall be provided with an abundance of good sound food, and properly watered during such rest by the owner or person having the custody thereof, or, in case of his default in so doing, then by the railroad company, or persons operating any railroad, or owners or masters of the vehicles, or boats, or vessels transporting the same, at the expense of the owner or person in custody thereof; and such company or persons operating the said railroad, owners, or masters, shall, in such case, have a lien upon such animals for food, care, and custody furnished, and shall not be liable for any detention of such animals for such purpose.

Now, Mr. President, I ask where have we the constitutional power to enact such a law as that? What power has Congress to give to a railroad company or to a spy or an informer the authority to determine what is "an abundance of good sound food?" I take it that the owner of the cattle, who is shipping them to market for the purpose of profit, for the purpose of getting them to market in the very best possible condition, is more interested in that subject than any railroad company, than any paid spy or informer; and, laying out of this case the question of humanity altogether, self-interest would induce the owner of cattle to see that they had a sufficient abundance of good sound food and that they were properly watered. Suppose the owner of these cattle should say, "They have had so much food and so much water; I think that is sufficient;" and suppose the spy or informer should disagree with him and should file an information, the cattle are to be detained, and in that way the owner is prevented from getting them to market for twelve, twenty-four, or thirty-six hours, and meanwhile the cattle have fallen in price.

Again, this same bill says that the party furnishing this food, and furnishing this water, and furnishing these pens shall have a lien upon the cattle "for food, care, and custody furnished, and shall not be liable for any detention." Suppose that the case is tried before a court and jury and it should be decided against this paid spy or informer, no damages can be recovered from him for thus improperly detaining these cattle, for the law expressly provides that he shall not be liable for the detention.

Again, section 4388, as proposed to be amended, will read:

> Any company or persons operating any railroad, or owner or custodian of or person having control over such animals, whose duty it may be to perform any of the duties mentioned in either of the two preceding sections or two following sections, who shall knowingly and willfully fail to comply with any of the provisions thereof, or who shall knowingly violate any such provisions, shall be liable for and forfeit and pay a penalty of not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars.

Information is to be given by a man, as said by the Senator from Illinois, who recovers his share of the $100 or $500, as the case may be. As was well said by the Senator from Illinois, I am and always have been opposed to this whole system of spies and informers in this form of government of ours. It is contrary to the spirit and genius of it.

Again, section 4389, as proposed to be amended, will read:

> The penalty imposed by section 4388 shall be recovered by any person who will sue for the same, by action of debt or information, in any court having jurisdiction, with full costs of suit, which shall include all costs and necessary charges which he shall or may have expended or incurred in and about or for the purpose of the suit.

Not only the necessary fees of witnesses, clerks, and marshals, but the bill adds thereto "and necessary charges" of the informer are to be recovered. What are those "necessary charges?" He has gone over the country to gather up witnesses and he has employed attorneys. These are "necessary charges," of course, and they are to be added to the costs of the suit. I am opposed to that also.

Then, again, I am opposed to the provision running all through this bill amendatory of the law as it now stands, causing these suits to be prosecuted in the United States courts. It is fundamentally wrong. The United States courts now have greater and more extensive jurisdiction than they should have, I think, for the good of the people. The United States courts are all the time encroaching upon the jurisdiction and power of the State courts, and I think it is time we should come to a halt, and that a man transporting his cattle for twenty-eight or thirty hours who incurs these penalties should not have suit instituted against him in the United States courts and be dragged one hundred, two hundred, or three hundred miles, as the case may be, from his home and from where the cases are, to be heard. All this I am opposed to; it is vexatious, costly, tyrannical, an invasion of the rights of the people in the manner of thus transporting their cattle from one point to another.

In section 4389, as proposed to be amended, it is made "the duty of all United States marshals, their deputies and subordinates, to take cognizance of any and all violations of the three preceding sections and of the next section which may be brought to their notice or knowledge upon oath or affirmation of any person or persons, and shall immediately report the same to the United States district attorney having jurisdiction, who shall immediately proceed to prosecute the same as herein provided."

I say, Mr. President, that I am opposed to forcing the people of the United States to go too often into the United States courts. They prefer to be tried before a judge that has been elected by themselves and that is near to their homes, not to be dragged off hundreds of miles from their homes to the place of trial in the United States courts. In some of the States these courts are held hundreds of miles from where the parties reside; it is so in my State, it is so in many other States; and the witnesses are to have mileage for going one, two, three, or four hundred miles, and the informer must have his expenses of traveling, for that certainly will be a part of the "necessary charges."

Again, going back a little in this bill, it says these cattle must be "put in pens." Who is to construct the pens? If this bill shall become a law we shall have all along the line of our railroads pens constructed, either by outsiders or by the railroad companies, and the cattle must be put into these pens, and the owners must pay for having them thus put into these pens. Why put them in these pens at all? If the owner of the stock is the best judge of the matter; if he thinks they can be equally as well watered, and equally as well fed without being placed in pens, why compel him to pay the expense of putting them in pens, thus built and constructed by the railroad companies or by these same spies and informers? These pens are not to be built free. Somebody has to build them, and there are going to be charges for putting the cattle in them, and the owners will be charged for taking them off the cars, and charged for putting them back on the cars, as well as for the use of the pens.

I agree fully with one thought that seems to run through this bill, and that is that cattle should not be confined too long on the railroad cars, and I think that in the course of time the owners of the stock and the railroad companies will regulate that matter properly for themselves, as their interest clearly requires them to do.

Mr. President, we are legislating too much. They that are governed least, in my judgment, are governed best. That government which bears most lightly by its laws on the people is the best government, and the people who bear the least infliction in the shape of statutory law will be the most attached to their state and to their national government.

I say again, in conclusion, Mr. President, that I am opposed to nearly every single provision in this bill and in the original law, and I would leave it to the owners of the stock and to the railroad companies to regulate the matter among themselves. I would not leave the cattle in the hands of the railroad companies alone or in the power of paid spies and informers. I am opposed also to putting the railroad companies in the power of these spies and informers. Both in the interest of the men who are the owners of the cattle and of the men who are the owners of the railroads, I object to the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I desire to give notice of an amendment. I propose to strike out from the word "provided" in line 52 down to and including the word "apply" in line 56.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I ask leave to offer an amendment. On page 3, line 47, I propose to strike out "either of the two preceding sections or two following sections" and insert "any of the sections of this act." Then in line 55, at the end of the word "water," I propose to add "space and opportunity to rest;" then in line 58 to strike out the word "sixty" and insert "forty-eight;" then after the word "rest" in line 59 to add the words "for a period of at least seven consecutive hours." Then on page 4, I wish to strike out lines 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, and 72 to the end of the word "suit," and then on lines 78 and 79 to strike out the words "circuit or."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments of the Senator from Illinois will be reported separately.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 47, it is proposed to strike out the words "either of the two preceding sections or two following sections" and insert "any of the sections of this act."

Mr. MCPHERSON. I accept the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next amendment is, in line 55, after the word "water," to insert "space and opportunity to rest."

Mr. MCPHERSON. I ask to have that amendment passed over. Perhaps we shall not disagree on many others.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to passing over the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next amendment is, in line 58, to strike out "sixty" and insert "forty-eight;" so as to read: "forty-eight consecutive hours."

Mr. MCPHERSON. I wish to have that passed over also.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 59, after the word "rest," it is proposed to insert "for a period of at least seven consecutive hours."

Mr. MCPHERSON. That I accept.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next amendment is, on page 4, to strike out all from the word "penalty," in line 66, down to and including the word "suit," in line 72, as follows:

> The penalty imposed by section 4388 shall be recovered by any person who will sue for the same, by action of debt or information, in any court having jurisdiction, with full costs of suit, which shall include all costs and necessary charges which he shall or may have expended or incurred in and about or for the purpose of the suit.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I have no objection.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I will prepare something to come in there afterward.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. In lines 78 and 79 the words "circuit or" should be stricken out. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I desire to offer an amendment, to come in at the end of the bill, after line 143:

> And any person interested in the humane treatment of animals may ride, at his own risk of personal injury, upon the trains of cars transporting animals upon any railroad within the United States on the payment of the regular rate of fare demanded upon passenger trains, in order to see that the provisions of this and the preceding sections are complied with; and the refusal of any railroad company or person operating any railroad to permit said person to ride on such train for the purpose herein specified shall be liable to the penalty mentioned in section 4388.

Mr. THURMAN. How are railroad companies to verify that a person is "interested in the humane treatment of animals?" Every tramp who wants to ride, or every person, whether he is a tramp or not, may say he is interested in the humane treatment of animals. I do not know who is not. If you put such a qualification as that, and require a railroad company, under a penalty, to find out whether a man who wants to ride on a freight car is interested in the humane treatment of animals, and, if it decides wrong, to be subject to a penalty, I fancy that there will be a great deal of trouble in the courts. Perhaps the companies would not take any risks. Is not a butcher a man interested in the humane treatment of animals? Some people might say, "in the old time England would not let a butcher sit on a jury on a homicide case, where the punishment was capital; ergo, a butcher shall not ride on this car." I think the butchers, of all people in the world, would be the most interested in the humane treatment of animals, because they want good meat for their customers to eat, but some railroad men might think otherwise. It seems to me that will not do. Strike out all that about interested in the humane treatment of animals, or else do not offer the amendment at all.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. In the amendment to section 4389 the words were stricken out from the words "the penalty," in line 66, down to the word "suit," in line 72. I ask that these words be now inserted at that place:

> The penalty created by this act shall be recovered by civil action in the name of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. MCPHERSON.]

Mr. MCPHERSON. I wish to say with respect to that amendment that while I am not very particular in regard to the adoption of the amendment, there appears to be a necessity that some amendment of the kind should be incorporated in the bill. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio how it is possible to convict any railroad company that would load a train of cars with live stock, say in the city of Chicago, and transport them from there to the city of New York of a violation of the law unless some person can be present all the time while that live stock is in transit. A train of cars loaded in the city of Chicago starts easterly. The agents of the railroad corporation or the stock-shippers are not required to give testimony to criminate themselves, and there is no evidence to convict them upon unless some person interested in the humane treatment of animals has the right to ride upon their train, as the amendment specifies, on the payment of the regular rate of fare demanded in ordinary passenger trains for the purpose of knowing whether the provisions of the law have been complied with.

If there is any legal objection to it, if it is placing the railroad companies in any position that is unjust or arbitrary, I for one shall not ask that it be adopted. I ask that this bill shall be amended and perfected in the interests of humanity and in the interests of good, sound, healthful meat food for the people, and I am willing to adopt any reform, any amendment, that may seem to be a betterment of the bill. If the Senator from Ohio is of the opinion that it would be onerous on the railroad companies, I do not wish to press it, because I do not desire to impose on the railroad companies or on the stock-shippers or on anybody engaged in this transportation any onerous duty or responsibility. But the demand of humanity is in this case that the cruelty now practiced upon live stock in transportation shall be either mitigated or removed. And if there is any way the Senator from Ohio can suggest by which a railroad company can be convicted of an offense for a violation of this law without allowing the privilege of riding on the trains to a person for the purpose of observation, then I will willingly adopt any substitute which he may offer for the amendment I have already proposed. If a better one can be offered, then I will withdraw this amendment with the consent of the Senate, and will proceed to answer the objections urged by the honorable Senator from Illinois.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand the amendment to be withdrawn?

Mr. McPHERSON. I withdraw it. It was offered with no disposition on my part to afflict railroad companies or anybody. I do not suppose very many people would elect to ride on a freight train, pay the regular rates of fare, and occupy what is called a caboose car for transit between one point and another, in preference to a passenger car. I think the opposition the Senator from Ohio makes to it is not exactly sufficient to reach the case. I think the honorable Senator from Ohio would scarcely apply to a railroad company at any of the depots along the line, for the privilege of riding between two given points, suffer all the inconveniences that he would be required to suffer upon a stock train, and put up with the imperfect accommodations the car offered him, when he could ride on a passenger train at the same price. If he would do it, then, perhaps, there is objection to the amendment and I had better withdraw it. I think he is the only man in the United States who would do it. Have I permission to withdraw the amendment, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator has the right to withdraw it.

Mr. McPHERSON. Now, as to the objections urged by the Senator from Illinois. He raised an objection, I believe, to section 4387, as amended in the first line of the bill, for which he offered no amendment.

Animals so unloaded shall be put into pens.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. No, I said "put into pens" were the only real words there added to the present law; to the other words I had no objection.

Mr. McPHERSON. In order that that objection may be removed, I move to strike out those words, so that if the owners wish to turn them into the streets they shall have entire privilege to do so.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I think the bill is better for having those words in.

Mr. McPHERSON. The Senator seems to be satisfied and I shall not propose the amendment.

Now, after the amendments I have already agreed to which have been offered by the Senator from Illinois, we come down to the proviso beginning in line 52. The Senator asked the question, why is there any modification in the proposed bill to the existing law in that particular? The Senator avers in the same breath that to keep cattle on their feet sixty consecutive hours is an absolute cruelty. Will the honorable Senator look at the statutes and see that in the existing law there is no requirement to unload them at all? You may run them from Kansas City to the city of New York without unloading them at all. Under the view taken by the Senator this must be an improvement on the present law, for this bill restricts the time of confinement in cars to sixty hours. It must therefore be more humane than the law we seek to amend.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I beg the Senator's pardon. This section 4386 says they shall be unloaded every twenty-eight hours, except when the animals are carried in cars, boats, or other vessels in which they can and do have proper food, water, space, and opportunity to rest——

Mr. McPHERSON. Very true.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. If they have space and opportunity to rest. That is what I ask.

Mr. McPHERSON. I will say in answer to the Senator's objection that practically it is one of the greatest absurdities in the world to think that a drove of cattle can be put into cars, given space and opportunity to rest, and profitably transported from the West to the East under such rules as the railway companies make for the stock-shipper. To illustrate: they say to the stock-shipper, "You may load twenty thousand pounds of horned cattle in a car, and we will charge you so much per car-load. If you put in that car only sixteen thousand pounds of horned cattle you will be compelled to pay the full price of a car." The Senator will readily see that it is almost impossible in active competition that less than twenty thousand pounds shall be loaded in a car. When you put twenty thousand pounds of cattle in a car and say they shall have space and opportunity to rest, it is simply a positive absurdity.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Then the law of 1872 enacts that they shall rest every twenty-eight hours.

Mr. McPHERSON. It provides they shall be unloaded for feed, water, and rest, unless you feed and water in the car, exactly and precisely as this bill does. This bill provides that animals shall be unloaded from cars for rest each sixty hours, while the present law makes no limit whatever as to time.

Let me read the section to which I refer.

Provided further, In no case shall animals be confined in cars for a longer period than sixty consecutive hours without unloading the same for rest.

Now let me state to the Senator the reason why that clause providing for sixty consecutive hours run under certain contingencies was adopted. It is known to almost every Senator on this floor, particularly those who represent the large stock-producing States of the West, that we have great points of distribution, to wit, Cincinnati, Saint Louis, and Chicago; they are extreme western points east of the Mississippi River. Eastward of them we have other points of distribution, to wit, Pittsburgh and Buffalo. If you load a train of cattle in the city of Chicago and start to Pittsburgh or Buffalo you can reach Pittsburgh or Buffalo within forty-eight hours, as proposed by the Senator's amendment; but if you start them from Saint Louis you cannot reach Pittsburgh or Buffalo within the forty-eight hours. To confine this restriction to forty-eight hours would be an invidious distinction as between those two shipping-points as against the city of Saint Louis; in other words, it would be legislation in the interest of Chicago against the interest of the city of Saint Louis, and that, too, without excuse, as experience has proved that if you properly feed and water in the cars sixty hours is not too long a run. Now let me state again what I have already stated, that the great lines of railroad which have heretofore opposed any legislation upon this question are to-day ready to carry out the provisions of this bill, provided there is no invidious distinction as between railroad lines in the transportation.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Would it be agreeable to the Senator to let me say a word now?

Mr. McPHERSON. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator has said in his argument now, as well as in one the other day, that the trunk lines, as we understand the term, agreed to this bill if any bill is to pass. I believe I quote the Senator correctly. I thought it proper to ask what trunk lines have agreed to it; for I have heard the president of one of the trunk lines within a very few days say he was not in favor of it. I therefore wished to interrupt the Senator to ask his attention to that point. Two of the great trunk lines, to wit, the Pennsylvania Central and the New York Central, start and end in the same State; but all the others, which are their competitors, go through different States. Consequently this bill reaches two of them, and the other two it does not touch.

Mr. McPHERSON. How can that be?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My friend can hardly ask that.

Mr. McPHERSON. I should like to have an explanation on that point, certainly.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. In the ninth line the bill specially says "from one State to another." Two of these great trunk lines begin and end in the same State while two of them change States two or three times. Again, in the eleventh and twelfth lines the same words are used, "from one State to another." That certainly gives two of the trunk lines a decided advantage over the other two; and in that particular I can readily see why the two which are solely in one State would say "Let us have this bill," and I can also see very readily why the other two lines would say no.

Mr. McPHERSON. If the objection of the honorable Senator is distinguished for anything it is for its absurdity. If this bill means anything it means that the poor, defenseless, dumb brute through that long line of suffering from the West to the East shall be protected by its provisions, be it in one State or covering the territory of all of them over which the cattle are carried.

Mr. CARPENTER. I ask if the provision in the nineteenth line does not apply to cattle being transported from one State to another, instead of to railroads running from one State to another. Suppose a railroad is engaged in carrying passengers from Chicago to New York, is not that commerce between the States?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. But the Senator from New Jersey who has charge of the bill has answered that question. In this argument he has stated that at Pittsburgh and at Buffalo there are great depots for changing cattle, and the cattle changed owners there.

Mr. McPHERSON. Whether they change owners or not, they are the same cattle.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. How does any man know they are the same cattle? They have changed owners. The cattle that belong to the Senator to-day belong to me to-morrow, and I start them from that point; they are not billed, they are not manifested, they are not known except from that particular point. It is a well-known fact that at Pittsburgh, for instance, there are large pens which receive cattle for sale. There are markets there two or three times a week. Two persons from different States bring their cattle there, they are driven into the pens, and to-morrow or next day or next week C D buys A B's cattle and he puts them on the road to New York or Philadelphia, as the case may be, and he is in one State the entire time. If he puts them on one or the other two lines which are competitors, they go through two or three different States.

Mr. McPHERSON. I certainly am at a loss to understand the point of the Senator's argument. I do not see how he has changed the cattle, even although they have changed owners. I do not see but that it is the same property in transportation, and being carried over lines of railroad that are interstate railroads, it makes no difference if they change owners every fifteen minutes from the time they leave the West until they arrive in the East.

The point he tries to make with respect to two great lines of railroad having their point of shipment and their point of destination both within the territorial limits of the same State, I do not see that that is going to affect the result. The bill applies to cattle in transit from the West to the East. Take the State of Pennsylvania, for instance, over whose territory runs the great trunk line of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. It transports more than three-fourths of the cattle it carries across the territory of New Jersey to New York. The road begins in Pennsylvania and ends in New Jersey. What right has the State of Pennsylvania, or what right has the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, to impose cruelty in Pennsylvania on cattle transported over that line and belonging to a citizen of New Jersey?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The owners will look out for that.

Mr. McPHERSON. If the owners are so immaculate as you are inclined to make them, they are the most maligned people in the world.

The Senator speaks also of the New York Central Railroad. I am not the defender of the New York Central Railroad or the Pennsylvania Railroad. I have no interest in railroads or in anything that appertains to the matters involved in this bill; but I do object to a railroad being criticised without any cause whatever. The New York Central Railroad transports to-day perhaps three-fourths of all the supply of live stock that goes to the New England States. They cross the territory of New York State from Buffalo to Albany, and are there placed upon cars and sent all through New England. I say to my friend that three-fourths of all the live-stock business done on that line of railroad comes entirely within my idea and construction of this bill.

Now, as to the point that it is not within the province of this bill to punish parties owning roads operating within a single State, this is very true if the point of shipment and point of destination are both within the jurisdiction of the State. I suppose it is very consoling to the Senator that there is one condition of circumstances under which inhumanity to the brute creation cannot be punished. But let me remind the Senator State laws can reach such a case, and many of the States have passed laws much more restrictive than this one.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then I would leave it to the States themselves. While the Senator was speaking, I thought of this case: for instance, a man drives his cattle into the pens at Pittsburgh or Allegheny City, from Pennsylvania, probably, or from Ohio, just across the river, if you choose. There are two competing roads from that point where the cattle start for the East. One of the roads is obliged to unload them in twenty-eight hours or use a certain kind of car, while the other road, running as it does solely in one State, not going out of it except for a few miles where my friend lives in New Jersey; they are so near the end of the journey when they reach his city that they could hardly stop the train before it got there. But take either Buffalo or Pittsburgh, and take the cattle driven in there, never having been on a railroad car before; the Senator readily sees the advantage one trunk line has over the others, because in one case they are bound to unload and in the other case they go through without being unloaded.

My idea of this whole question is that the present law is equal to if not better than this bill.

Mr. McPHERSON. I desire to answer the honorable Senator from West Virginia by simply saying to him that if the interests of humanity and of good, healthful meat food for the people is to be based upon a consideration of the profits or losses of railroad companies, it is a sad commentary upon our common humanity. Here we have a bill that proposes to be general in its provisions and universal so far as this country is concerned, and there is no idea, so far as I am concerned, that the bill gives one railroad an advantage over another, but it places all exactly on an equality. The fact that they were not on an equality was the reason why we sought to amend the present law. To illustrate, there was no provision in the existing law that required railroads doing business and forming connections with the Canada roads to obey the law. What was the result? If we had undertaken to enforce the existing law in our own country, it would have forced the cattle transportation through the Province of Canada, to the entire detriment and injury of our own lines of road.

And now, Mr. President, with respect to the section that the Senator from Illinois asks to have amended. He says he wants to put in the words "space and opportunity to rest." Now, let me tell the honorable Senator this one fact, that cattle cannot rest in cars; they may lie down and they may get up, it is true; they can get a certain amount of rest, but still not in the full meaning of the term "space and opportunity to rest." We propose that under a new and improved mode of transportation of live stock there need be fewer delays in its transportation than under the old system and in the old cars by the use of improved cars. But the ghost of a patented palace car is hovering around him.

Suppose you start from your home in Illinois with a car-load of cattle. You are supplied with a bucket; at every station you stop at, or once every twenty-four hours, you take your bucket and water your cattle and feed them. I want to know if in your opinion you have not observed all the requirements of this bill. This bill says you shall give them food and water once in twenty-four hours. If you give it to them in a bucket, or if you give it to them in a pail, or however you give it to them, you have performed all the requirements of the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. But there is no opportunity. The humane society first agitated this question on the ground that cattle were treated badly. I say that no steer can, on its feet, stay sixty hours without being injured. Allow me to suggest that if it happens that a stock-train can run from Chicago to Pittsburgh in forty-eight hours, and could not run from Saint Louis there in less than sixty hours, are we to legislate for Saint Louis when common humanity requires that the steer should not remain cooped up so long? Now, the common cars must be unloaded every twenty-eight hours. When you have extended it to forty-eight hours you have stretched the matter. I do believe that every steer ought to have the opportunity of lying down to sleep once in twenty-four hours.

Mr. McPHERSON. I confess I wish they might, but I must deal with practical realities, not theories.

I ask if there is no necessity for unloading cattle in less than sixty hours in case you feed and water them every twenty-eight hours, why compel it to be done? The practice and the experience of the public shows that there is no necessity for doing it if you water and feed them once every twenty-four hours, as the bill requires. I hope it will not be urged that there are such things as palace cars when I say to you that of my own knowledge there is not a single patented and patentable device necessary for any railroad company upon the earth to use in the transportation of animals under each provision of this bill. All it requires is simply a trough placed in the car for the reception of the food, and any man who will undertake to say that there is any invention in simply placing a trough in a car is asserting what seems to me arrant nonsense.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Will the Senator from New Jersey allow me to ask him if there have not been patents taken out on these cars?

Mr. McPHERSON. Yes; I will answer that question.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Then the question of infringement, to my certain knowledge, takes a wide range.

Mr. McPHERSON. In 1858 a patent was issued to a man named Robinson for a car in which he put pipes of a certain device to carry water. The patent was granted to him. It has expired. To-day it is the property of the public, and is the key to everything else, so far as I know. And yet there was no invention in his device, and I think the courts would have so held. It consisted in a simple trough placed in the car with pipe attachments to distribute water. What had been done before a thousand times for other, yet like purposes, certainly cannot be called an invention.

There may be little combinations of patents here and there with respect to certain things about it that it is not necessary a railroad company should use at all. To show more fully the exact condition of affairs I will state to the Senator this fact: Two years ago the British Humane Society and a board appointed by Parliament took into consideration the inhuman treatment of animals in transportation in England. They offered a premium of £400 for the best device for feeding and watering animals while in transit. That premium was given to the device which I have described to the Senate. This patent was issued to Mr. Robinson, and it expired more than four years ago. All the person did who won the £400 was to apply the device to the particular kind of car in use in England, but it was not patented there and could not be, and is now in use on all the railroad lines of England. Out of fifty-six competitors with as many differing devices seeking this prize, it was decided in favor of an American invention, and now the property of the public. Therefore if the public can get the best without cost, why talk about those of no value.

Our International Humane Society which met at Chicago a few months ago, after they had investigated the whole subject, came to the conclusion that improved cars were the only way in which reforms could be made in transportation. They offered a premium of $5,000 for the best device for carrying live stock and feeding and watering them in the cars. I understand, from a reliable source, that there is scarcely a patent that had ever been issued by the Patent Office but has already applied for this premium of $5,000. The intention of that society is to pay for it themselves by a private contribution among people who have some Christianity and humanity in their composition, and then offer it as a gift to any railroad company who will use it. Thus it will be seen what the poor defenseless railroad companies can and will not do in aid of this humane movement private capital proposes to do.

When you undertake to say that there is something in the shape of a patent car that we intend to impose upon the people, it is the simplest nonsense in the world, because the bill does not state any such thing. It states, first, that it is inhuman to deprive an animal of food and water on a hot, dusty July day for more than twenty-eight hours, and therefore you must remove them from the cars and water and feed them. But it says another thing: that if inventive genius can or has devised a car where that very same thing can be done without the delay incident to and attendant upon unloading them, then you may run them for sixty consecutive hours. The great cruelty consists mainly in the fact that the animals are deprived of water. I have known cattle put upon the cars in Chicago and run through to the city of New York, and confined for four days in the month of August, without one particle of food or water. I want to know if the Senator from Illinois, or any other Senator, believes that remedial legislation in this matter can be much longer postponed without absolute criminality on the part of the law-making power?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Here is the law, which provides that they shall be unloaded every twenty-eight hours.

Mr. McPHERSON. I say it is a nullity.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. A nullity! Any law will be a nullity unless you enforce the penalty.

Mr. McPHERSON. We do not try to enforce it.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Why will this bill be enforced if it becomes a law?

Mr. McPHERSON. Simply for this reason: Here is a provision in the bill that there shall be no invidious distinction in favor of a railroad in the neighboring province of Canada and against the railroads in our own country. It will be enforced because there are provisions in the bill under which it can be enforced. The old law was so loose and faulty in its construction that it could not be enforced.

The Senator from Illinois states another matter. He says it is cruel to keep cattle without rest for sixty hours. I want to state the fact that in the transportation of live animals across the ocean—and you know that has become a very important article of export—I have known, if the testimony of men is worth anything at all, of cattle being placed upon shipboard to stand for five days and nights without offering to lie down.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senator whether it is proposed under this bill to ship cattle to foreign countries?

Mr. McPHERSON. I claim that under the provisions of this bill cattle would go to the sea-board as quickly as possible, and that all cruelty would be at least vastly mitigated if not removed; that they would go through cheaper, and that the cost of transportation would be very much lessened; and I claim that when they get to the sea-board they would be in a much more healthful condition to ship to foreign countries than they could be under the present system. Let the Senator not forget to remember that our export trade starts from the great West instead of the sea-board.

With regard to another point I wish to ask the honorable Senator from Illinois, or any other Senator upon this floor, if he is willing to strike from this bill the provision which is to enable a western producer to send his cattle to the New York market at from $15 to $20 per car less than can be done under the present system?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I am not contending about the cost of transportation. The Senator may know all about that; I do not know anything about it. I say that the ordinary mode of transportation requires the cars to be unloaded every twenty-eight hours, and that any improved mode that extends the time to sixty hours without the cattle being unloaded is wrong.

Mr. McPHERSON. The improved mode does not require it. As I have stated to the Senate the reason why it does not require it is because practically what cattle need is water. They need some food it is true.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. They need rest.

Mr. McPHERSON. They need rest it is true; but we propose to amend by this bill the existing law which provides that they need not be unloaded by providing that they shall be unloaded every sixty hours for the rest demanded by the honorable Senator.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Does not the existing law provide that they shall be unloaded every twenty-eight hours unless there is opportunity in the conveyance to feed and water them, and to give them rest?

Mr. McPHERSON. That will be left to the Senator's own judgment. As I have already asked, is it not a positive absurdity to talk about rest in a car-full of cattle?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. They must be taken off the car for that purpose.

Mr. McPHERSON. I want to state a point to the Senator from Illinois that I undertook to state to the Senate. I said before that if inventive genius had created a way of doing this work better than it had been done before, and if the Congress of the United States should say that in their judgment anything that inventive genius might do to assist it might be used, as can be done under the provisions of this bill, first, as to a limit of cruelty, what is the objection to simply saying if you can do it you may do it? It does not impose any particular kind of car upon the railroad companies, or upon the people, or upon the shippers; but if a car can be provided, be it palace or hovel car, that will carry food from the farm of the honorable Senator from Iowa or of his constituent, whose corn may cost him to raise ten cents per bushel upon the productive soil of that State, he starts to market with a quantity of corn that represents a cost of ten cents per bushel, and he goes clear to the New York market, feeding his stock as he goes along whenever they need it; whereas if he were forced to unload at the different stock-yards upon the line he would pay $1.50 a bushel for the same corn. I want to know, then, if there is any reason why this reform should not be introduced and carried out. Is there any reason why legislation should not be made to say that inventive genius may be employed; that reforms may be introduced if the public like them, if the railroads like them and will apply them—and no compulsion whatever? Then, if there is no necessity for unloading the stock, as I claim there is not under sixty hours, if you feed and water them, why, then, impose any restriction upon doing that?

Mr. CARPENTER. I wish to ask the Senator in regard to the proviso commencing in line 52:

Provided, however, In all cases when animals in transit from one place to another be transported in cars, boats, and other vessels in which said animals do have daily proper food and water, the provisions in regard to their being unloaded shall not apply.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The words in the old law, "space and opportunity to rest" are left out here.

Mr. CARPENTER. The words "space and opportunity to rest," which are in the old law, and which are as necessary as the provision which the Senator has inserted, are left out here. But the precise question that I want to be enlightened about is, who is to determine whether a particular car has the proper convenience for daily food? A train of cars starts, for instance, from Kansas City to New York. It goes through Missouri, in the first place, in which State there are one or two judicial districts; it goes through Illinois; it goes through Indiana; it goes through Ohio, and so on. Now, who is to determine whether the car in which those cattle are put has the proper convenience called for by this section or not? It is of course a question of fact, one to be determined by a jury in each case. The result might be that in Missouri it would be held to be a proper car, that in Illinois it would be held to be an improper car, and so on. The verdict might be different in regard to cattle upon the same train and the same car in every district through which the train passed. You will have a question of fact forever open, which goes to the foundation of your whole proceeding, and you will have that as a question of fact which may be settled various ways in the different districts through which your train passes. Now I ask, how is that to be controlled?

Mr. McPHERSON. I am very much surprised that the Senator raised that objection. I thought I had sufficiently answered that in my reply to the Senator from Illinois. I claim that the word "convenient" is not used in the bill at all, or anything like it.

Mr. CARPENTER. "Proper" is the word.

Mr. McPHERSON. If that word implies more than it ought to imply strike out the word "proper;" say "food and water."

Mr. CARPENTER. That would be the most inhuman thing ever heard of.

Mr. McPHERSON. Simply say "food and water."

Mr. CARPENTER. To say "food and water" would not be half as good as the old law.

Mr. McPHERSON. I said to the Senator from Illinois, if he takes a pail, or a tub, or a bucket, and gives every animal water in that car, and every animal food in that car, every twenty-four hours, every requirement of the bill is complied with. Then you talk about conveniences in cars. I do not know anything about cars, or conveniences in cars. If we can get a car in which animals can be transported, as I know we have them, because they are in use every day upon the railroads with perfect success, then, I say, I do not think we ought to have these monopolies of pens.

Mr. CARPENTER. It is a misfortune of mine that I am called on to vote upon a subject that I know nothing about. I thought the Senator from New Jersey was thoroughly informed and could inform me, and it was for that reason that I put him the question. He produces a bill here and says it is proper; and if people do not like this or do not like that, strike it out. I do not like the bill, and would strike it all out if the Senator would give me permission. But the precise point upon which I wanted the Senator's information, and I have good reason to know that he is a pretty sound lawyer, having felt his strength recently——

Mr. McPHERSON. I must beg leave to say to the Senator now that I do not know what I have done that I should be liable to any such suspicion. I certainly am not a lawyer, but confess I would be willing to-day to bear the reproach for the advantages it would confer.

Mr. CARPENTER. To be perfectly candid, I do not think so either. I acquit the gentleman of any such suspicion. [Laughter.] But I want to know how the question is to be settled whether a particular car is within or without this provision. Here a train starts with certain cars. If they are proper cars—that is to say, if the cattle can be properly fed in those cars—they are not within this section at all; if they cannot be properly fed, then they are within the section. Now, who is to determine it? Your whole proceeding is to rest there upon a matter of opinion, about which no two men whom you could find might agree.

Mr. McPHERSON. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CARPENTER. Certainly.

Mr. McPHERSON. I put to the Senator from Wisconsin a question that I asked the Senator from Illinois. If I should water a train of cattle at any point upon the road with a pail or bucket, if I should give each one proper food and water, a sufficiency of good sound food and an amount of water to satisfy their thirst, then will I have complied with the provisions of that section. I await his answer.

Mr. CARPENTER. My trouble with this whole subject is that I do not know anything about it.

Mr. McPHERSON. Then the Senator ought not to debate a question about which he claims not to know anything, and that, too, on the black side.

Mr. CARPENTER. I am not debating it, I am inquiring. I am sitting at the feet of the Senator from New Jersey with the docility of a child; I ask him for light and can get none. That certainly is not my fault. The Senator may be as effulgent as he pleases; I am inquiring for information. I said in advance that I did not know anything about it, but I had to vote upon it, and wanted to get some information. I applied where I was certain it could be found, to the Senator from New Jersey, who has charge of this bill. Now, I want to be informed, for I am not trying to inform anybody or debate anything.

Mr. McPHERSON. I can give the Senator from Wisconsin no information further than I have given, certainly upon that point. I will read the provision of the bill to which he refers, and then if there is a man, woman, or child in the United States, other than himself, who will put that construction upon it I shall be somewhat surprised:

Provided, however, In all cases when animals in transit from one place to another be transported in cars, boats, and other vessels in which said animals do have daily proper food and water, the provisions in regard to their being unloaded shall not apply.

I certainly cannot understand what there is to answer in the matter. I do not know that I have anything further to say upon the bill. I did not expect to be met by any objections. This bill was completed as is well known, at least it was perfected, as I supposed, by the Senate during the extra session in May last. The bill was amended, and I thought thoroughly and satisfactorily amended. I am willing, as I said at the outset of my remarks, to accept anything in the way of amendment that will not destroy the object we have in view, which is to provide good, healthful food and to do away with the inhumanity of the case; but I certainly must object to the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois on line 52; and I object, for the reason I have stated, to the amendment offered in line 58, inserting "forty-eight hours," because there is no necessity for it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I presume that it will be impossible to conclude the consideration of this bill this evening. A large number of amendments have already been adopted. It would certainly be very desirable that those amendments as adopted and the bill as it now stands should be printed and placed before the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. There are amendments offered, not yet voted on, that ought to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was going to move that the bill, with the amendments already adopted, be printed, and then that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ALLISON. Let all the amendments offered be printed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator from New Jersey dropped a remark to which I should like to have an answer made before he takes his seat.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator from Missouri withhold his motion for a moment?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to ask the Senator who has charge of the bill a question. He said a moment ago in his remarks that this bill would bring cattle to market in a better condition and for $15 a car less than under the present law. Will the Senator be kind enough to explain how that is? I did not know that this bill had anything to do with the price of transportation.

Mr. McPHERSON. I will answer the question of the honorable Senator. I say that under the operation of the bill, if the improved mode of transportion was adopted——

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Now, what is that improved mode?

Mr. McPHERSON. The improved mode of transportation is the improved cars which under the proviso in line 52 may be employed in transportation. I say that if the improved cars which are to-day in use upon some of the railroads in this country are employed generally in transportation, all the profits now charged by the stock-yard monopolies along the line of every railroad would be saved; and they are monopolies, because they have the exclusive privilege of feeding live stock at an extortionate rate. I say that in the mode that we propose to adopt if we can, if we can convince the railroads of the country, as I believe we can, that they should adopt it, the producer in any western State would be able to take the corn he raises at ten cents a bushel, put it in the car and start to market without being subjected to the imposition of stock-yards along the line of the railroad.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then the whole of it is in the new car. The whole of the Senator's answer is that if the new car which is proposed to be introduced is provided this good result will be produced.

Mr. McPHERSON. If it is not employed the provision would not be operative, most certainly.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then the idea is that the railroads are to have a new car, and in that way they are to save something by carrying along the food. In that way $15 a car, I understand, would be saved. That is entirely new. All the railroads are now supplied with cars, and I suppose they would dislike very much to have to do away with them at once. That would be the case at least with very many of the roads. I should like to ask a further question, in regard to the monopoly of the pens. If I understand the Senator's bill correctly, it not only creates but establishes additional pens. The existing law says nothing about pens. You may keep your cattle anywhere you think proper. The present bill specially provides for pens. In that particular there certainly would be more pens and more monopolies under the proposed law than there are under the existing statute.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, there are two objects sought to be accomplished by this bill, and they are both very important and I will say very noble objects. One is to prevent cruelty to animals; the other is to prevent the sale of diseased food, to provide as far as possible that the food of the people, where that food has been transported over railways, shall be healthy food. No one can deny the importance of both these objects, and no one will say that they do not commend themselves to his most favorable consideration. I think we are indebted to the Senator from New Jersey for the labor he has taken to accomplish these objects. But while we sympathize with him in the efforts he has made, do not let us lose sight of the means by which he attempts to accomplish his purposes. We must not be carried away by our sympathies so far as not to investigate the means that are to be employed to accomplish these worthy objects. This bill has been amended so much, and without, as I verily believe, one-fourth of the Senate knowing what the amendments are, for without their ever being put to a vote it was announced that they were agreed to, nobody objecting, that I for one do not know how the bill now stands. Therefore I was glad to hear the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri that the bill should go over until to-morrow and that it should be printed as now amended. I think it ought to be so printed in order that we may consider it intelligently.

Before that is done, however, I wish to call the attention of my friend from New Jersey to one or two things connected with this bill, and which it seems to me will require the bill to be considerably amended. First, however, I wish to say that this bill stretches the commercial power beyond anything that has ever been passed by Congress, unless it is the law to which this is an amendment. What is the first provision of this bill?

No railroad company within the United States, whose road forms any part of a line of road over which cattle * * * are conveyed from one State to another, or the owners or masters of steam, sailing, or other vessels carrying or transporting cattle, * * * shall confine the same in vehicles, railroad cars, boats, or vessels of any description for a longer period than twenty-eight consecutive hours without unloading the same for rest.

"No railroad company within the United States whose road forms any part of a line of road over which cattle are conveyed from one State to another." Obviously that means to include a road, however short it may be, entirely within a single State, if over that road, it being connected with other roads, cattle are transported from one State to another. Take for instance, the Columbus and Xenia road, in the very heart of the State of Ohio. It is a road fifty miles long, running from the capital of the State to the city of Xenia. It is connected both east and west with other railroads, so that you can travel over it in going from New York to San Francisco, because its connections are such that it is one part of a great line of railroad or of lines of railroad which connected together traverse the entire continent. There is an Ohio corporation whose road is fifty miles long, and that Ohio corporation, entirely operating within the State of Ohio, is within the purview of this bill, or the bill is worth nothing at all; for if this bill is to be confined to roads which lie partly in one State and partly in another State the bill is of no use or very little use at all, such roads being so few. Therefore, in order to be effective, it must include every road, however short it may be. Nay, more, it will include any means of transportation, however short, although it should simply be a street railroad, if that railroad should carry over it stock from one depot to another. It would include, for instance, the transport of cattle from the Ohio and Mississippi depot, at the west end of Cincinnati, to the Little Miami depot at the east end, a transit of about a mile, or a mile and a half.

Mr. McPHERSON. May I interrupt the Senator to ask him a question?

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly.

Mr. McPHERSON. Is the Senator aware of the fact that the State of Ohio has upon her statute-book to-day a law more restrictive in its provisions a great deal than the law we propose to pass relating to this same matter?

Mr. THURMAN. What the State of Ohio has on her statute-book has nothing in the world to do with the power of Congress to pass this bill; and if she has a law more restrictive than this, more effective than this, it would be an argument against passing this bill, I think, so far as Ohio is concerned.

But let me show to what extent this bill carries our power to legislate under the provision of the Constitution, "to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States." The principle of this bill will include every drayman who draws a load from one depot to another. Every drayman who draws a load from the Ohio and Mississippi depot in Cincinnati to the Little Miami depot, or from the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton depot to any other depot is brought within the principle upon which this bill rests. If you can regulate these railroads as this bill regulates them, and, as it is claimed by some, that you can regulate their fares and freight charges and the like, then you may do it in regard to the draymen who haul freight from one depot to another, although it may be but a quarter of a mile.

Now, I am not going to argue that constitutional question. I only throw out these suggestions that those who have studied, that those who are interested in, that those who want to interpret the Constitution correctly on this subject may give the subject their best reflections before a vote is taken on this bill. Having done that, Mr. President, I now have something to say upon the particular provisions of this bill. In the first place, it is provided in the first section of the bill that no railroad company, and so on, shall transport cattle, &c., "for a longer period than twenty-eight consecutive hours without unloading the same for rest, water, and feeding for a period of at least seven consecutive hours, unless prevented from so unloading by unavoidable causes. In estimating such confinement the time during which the animals have been confined without such rest on connecting roads or lines of transportation from which they are received shall be included; it being the intent of this section to prohibit their continuous confinement beyond the period of twenty-eight hours, except upon contingencies hereinbefore stated."

The first thing that strikes one is, how is a company receiving a cargo of cattle to know whether those cattle have been transported twenty-eight hours already without rest? Take a cargo coming on the Union Pacific Railroad to Omaha. The cattle are then transferred to the road from Omaha to the Mississippi River, whatever may be the name of the road. How are the people on that road to know whether those cattle have been transported more than twenty-eight hours on the Union Pacific? When they cross the Iowa line, how is the company in Illinois to know in the case of cattle going to Chicago? It does seem to me that something more definite on this subject is necessary, or otherwise you visit the companies with penalties when they could not by the use of any reasonable diligence acquire the information which was necessary to enable them to avoid the penalties.

Then let us go to the next section. I believe the words "which shall include all costs and necessary charges" have been stricken out on the motion of the Senator from Illinois, and so I shall say nothing about them.

Mr. McPHERSON. I think that was settled in a way satisfactory to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. THURMAN. Then it is said:

It shall be the duty of all United States district attorneys to prosecute at once all violations of this section and the three preceding sections.

I do not know, looking at this bill, whether this is restrictive or not. I do not know whether it is the intention of the framers of this bill that all prosecutions shall be by the district attorneys, or whether it is intended to allow anybody to prosecute, and also to make it the duty of the district attorneys to prosecute when they have the information. That is an obscurity in the bill that I think ought to be removed.

Then in the next section we come to another provision, that where the company, or an owner or custodian of the property, or the like, has caused these cattle to be furnished with food and water and rest, he shall have a lien on the cattle for repayment of the expenses thus incurred, which lien shall be enforceable by petition in the district court of the United States. But what I ask my friend is, what is to become of the cattle while this lien is being enforced? There is no provision here. What is to become of them? I do not know how they are to be provided for.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suppose the Senator thinks the cattle would get lean before he got his lien attended to. [Laughter.]

Mr. THURMAN. I think it very likely. A lien on a perishable article—and I suppose cattle must be considered perishable, as they will starve if they are not fed—a lien upon live stock to be asserted must be accompanied by the clearest provisions so as to give it effect, so as to protect not only the cattle from suffering, but so as to protect the owner from loss by shrinkage of the cattle or by keeping his cattle away from the market.

Mr. McPHERSON. May I ask the Senator a question right there?

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly.

Mr. McPHERSON. Are there any railroad companies to-day in the United States that feel under obligation to discharge a quantity of freight, deliver it up to the shipper or freight owner, without payment of the charges and freight, payment of whatever may have accrued and the freight that may be due on the merchandise? Is there any harm, therefore, in providing in this bill that a railroad company shall have a lien on the animals for food, care, and comfort furnished when the owner and shipper of the animals himself refuses to do it?

Mr. THURMAN. Let us see what this section is. Here is the section that gives the lien.

SEC. 4287. Animals so unloaded—shall be put into pens, and shall be provided with an abundance of good sound food, and properly watered during such rest by the owner or person having the custody thereof, or, in case of his default in so doing, then by the railroad company, or persons operating any railroad, or owners or masters of the vehicles, or boats, or vessels transporting the same, at the expense of the owner or person in custody thereof; and such company or persons operating the said railroad, owners, or masters, shall in such case have a lien upon such animals for food, care, and custody furnished, and shall not be liable for any detention of such animals for such purpose.

It applies to unloaded animals—

The first thing that strikes one here is a mere oversight. It gives the owner of the cattle himself a lien on his cattle for the food that he furnishes, and says that the owner of the cattle himself shall not be liable for their detention.

Mr. McPHERSON. You can provide for that, I suppose.

Mr. THURMAN. Of course, that is a mistake. It was not intended to say that the owner himself should have a lien on his own cattle, but there is a provision that the company or person operating a railroad or the master or owner of a vessel, where the cattle have been unloaded, and are supplied with sufficient food and water, shall have a lien on the cattle for repayment of the expenses thus incurred. I do not care for that; that is right enough, but when you propose to answer how he shall recover that, as you do in the subsequent section, that it shall be by a petition filed in the district court holden within the district where the food, care, and custody have been furnished; when you have said that the railroad company is not to put this on the charge for freight and transportation at its terminus, and require the consignee to pay it before he has the cattle, but that it shall be enforced in West Virginia, or in Ohio, or in Pennsylvania, or in Indiana, or in Nebraska, and not enforced at the end of the transit by simply adding it to the charges of the consignee, then you introduce a new thing totally unknown to the law, and a thing fraught with infinite difficulty. You stop the cattle right there; you do not allow the railroad company to take them on to the terminus, and say to the consignee "Pay these costs and charges before you get your cattle," but you stop the cattle in West Virginia, or in Nebraska, or in Iowa, and say "Here in the district court we will recover the $50 or the $100 for which we have a lien on these cattle."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Would the Senator from Ohio give way for a motion for an executive session?

Mr. THURMAN. I will with great pleasure, for there are but few Senators listening to what I say. I hope the bill will be printed as amended, and that it may come up to-morrow.

I want my friend from New Jersey to be impressed with the fact that I sympathize fully with him in the thing sought to be done and that I do not make the criticism of this bill in any spirit of hostility to his object, but I want his means to be constitutional means and I want them to be adapted to the end in view.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator from Vermont yield to me one moment to make an observation? Let me say to the Senator from Ohio, or any other Senator who professes to be friendly to the objects of this bill, as he professes to be, that, if there are any informalities or anything wrong with respect to the collection of penalties or the machinery by which the bill is to be worked, if they will prepare their amendments and have them ready to-morrow morning I should like to have them presented. If there is objection to the bill on the ground of unconstitutionality, which has been suggested by the Senator from Ohio, I have nothing to say. If the bill be an unconstitutional one no Senator so minded will vote for it; but with respect to the machinery by which the provisions of the bill are to be carried out and enforced, I should like to have the Senator from Ohio propose such amendments as will perfect the bill, if not now perfect, and if I can consistently accept them I will.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now ask general consent that this bill with the amendments which have been adopted and proposed (it being shown in the print that they are amendments adopted or proposed) be reprinted for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) Is there objection to that order? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Will the Senator allow me to occupy a moment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will yield two minutes to my friend from Iowa.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I move to take from the Calendar Senate bill No. 315, granting a pension to Henry Stanley Wetmore.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have the report read in that case.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. There is a report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a favorable report, and I suppose no one will insist on the reading of it in a pension case.

Mr. COCKRELL. I cannot tell until I hear the report read whether this is a case where a pension ought to be granted. I do not think the law has ever recognized the right of one case on the docket to be pensioned, and I should like to have the report read so as to know whether this is that case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the Senator is right in his point. Every Senator ought to understand what he votes on. That being the case, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty-six minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and six minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 19, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of Friday last was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at eighteen minutes past twelve o'clock; and this being Monday, the first business in order is the call of States and Territories, beginning with the State of Maine, for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference to their appropriate committees, not to be brought back on motions to reconsider. Under this call resolutions for information from Departments and memorials and resolutions of State and territorial Legislatures may be presented for reference and printing.

MONUMENT TO GENERAL MORGAN.

Mr. TUCKER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3584) to erect a monument at Winchester, Virginia, over the grave of General Daniel Morgan, of revolutionary memory; which was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. To what committee does the gentleman wish the bill referred?

Mr. TUCKER. To the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

The SPEAKER. Such bills have generally gone to the Committee on the Library. There is no Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. TUCKER. I prefer to have it go, then, to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

The bill was accordingly so referred, and ordered to be printed.

LEWIS JOHNSON & CO.

Mr. HUNTON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3585) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Lewis Johnson & Co. $210, the amount of certain coupons of bonds of the District of Columbia, due the 1st of January, 1878, the same having been lost or destroyed; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. WEAVER. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object to proceeding with the call of States and Territories?

Mr. WEAVER. I do.

INDEXING THE RECORD.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent to present a report at this time from the Committee on Rules in relation to indexing the RECORD, and simply to ask that it be printed in the RECORD to-morrow morning, so that everybody can see it, and recommitted.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The report is as follows:

Mr. STEPHENS, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred on December 19, 1879, a resolution relating to the methods of indexing the current publications of Congress, respectfully report:

That the provisions heretofore made for indexing the publications of Congress seem to have been based on the popular idea, expressed in the words of Johnson, that index-making is "a task that requires neither the light of learning nor the activity of genius, but may be successfully performed without any higher quality than that of bearing burdens with dull patience, and beating the track of the alphabet with sluggish resolution."

We are gratified, however, to believe that the publication of the reports of this committee on the General Index of the Journals of Congress (Report H. R. 52, third session, Forty-fifth Congress, and Report H. R. 23, second session, Forty-sixth Congress) has had the effect of calling the attention of members to the real nature and importance of index-making, awakened some interest in the subject of indexing the publications of Congress, and developed an appreciation of the fact that the want of a proper system of indexing has detracted very greatly from their value and use.

In this view the committee have given careful consideration to the resolution referred to them, and in reply to the first inquiry, "whether the system adopted by them for the General Index of the Journals of Congress can be applied to indexing the current publications," most unhesitatingly report not only that it can be applied but that in their opinion its application would result in the saving of a large amount of money annually and very greatly enhance the value of the publications. The system was adopted after a long and careful review of the various systems of cataloging and indexing, and the critical approvals it has received (see Report H. R. 23, second session, Forty-sixth Congress) have confirmed the judgment of the committee. It is also worthy of consideration that the application of a uniform system of indexing, based on well-established principles, would enable the compilation of general indexes at stated periods hereafter a matter of very little trouble and expense.

The value of anything, it has been observed, is best known by the want of it. Agreeably to this idea, the value of a proper index to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will probably be very thoroughly appreciated.

The Journals are not published until after the close of each session of Congress, and contain simply a statement of proceedings. The RECORD is published daily during the session and also collated and issued after the close of each session; it contains the debates and all the proceedings of both Houses in detail, together with the debates and proceedings in Committees of the Whole. Consequently the RECORD is the publication most generally used and referred to for information, and the committee have therefore given special attention to it in considering the resolution referred to them.

The preparation and publication of the RECORD costs about $350,000 for each Congress, and it does not require argument to impress the fact that all possible provisions should be made to insure benefits from it commensurate with the expenditure of such a large sum of money. It is obvious that to fulfill the purposes of the RECORD its index should be made on a system so thorough that nothing could escape it, and so simple that no person could fail to readily find any information desired from it. To what extent the present method of indexing falls short of these requirements is within the experience of every member. In fact, the indexes of the RECORD, as now made, "are simply huge masses of undigested material, showing great industry in their preparation, but in which the want of a proper system of arrangement bears evidence of a want of appreciation of the purposes of the index and an absence of study of any of the systems of indexing."

Our investigations have satisfied us that the defects of the index of the RECORD mainly arise from the absence of any provisions of law for having it prepared. It appears that in the absence of such provisions the work of preparing the index is paid for by the number of thousand ems of printed index produced, and that, without reference to the peculiar qualifications required for the work, it is committed to such person as offers to prepare it at the least price per thousand ems. It would be difficult to conceive a more vicious system. It is obvious that this system simply offers a premium to making as large an index as possible, and that method, system, phraseology of entries, form of arrangement, and everything necessary to be considered to make a good index would naturally be sacrificed to producing as many thousand ems of printed matter as possible. This is the key to all the defects of the index of the RECORD that are now so generally complained of. The climax of the absurdity of the system is reached in the following index entry, which we quote:

"That the rules of the last House of Representatives shall be the rules of this House until otherwise ordered, with the following amendments thereto, namely: Rule 76 shall be amended so as to read as follows: 76. It shall be the duty of the following committees to take into consideration all executive communications and such other propositions as may be presented and referred to them by the House, namely: The Committee on Appropriations, matters relating to the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses, and for sundry civil expenses of the Government, except matters relating to the Department of Agriculture, which shall be referred to the Committee on Agriculture; the Committee on Foreign Affairs, matters relating to consular and diplomatic expenses; the Committee on Military Affairs, matters relating to the expenses of the Army and of the Military Academy, and for fortifications; the Committee on Naval Affairs, matters relating to the expenses of the Navy and the Naval Academy; the Committee on Indian Affairs, matters relating to the expenses of the Indian Department; the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, matters relating to the expenses of the Post-Office Department and for mail transportation by ocean steamers. In preparing bills of appropriations for other objects, said committees shall not include appropriations for carrying into effect treaties made by the United States; and where appropriation bills shall be referred to any of the foregoing committees for their consideration which contain appropriations for carrying a treaty into effect, and for other objects, they shall propose such amendments as shall prevent appropriations for carrying a treaty into effect being included in the same bill with appropriations for other objects. Rule 77 shall be amended so as to read as follows: It shall be the duty of the several committees mentioned in Rule 76 within thirty days after their appointment at every session of Congress commencing on the first Monday of December, to report the general appropriation bills, namely: The Committee on Appropriations, bills for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses, for all deficiencies, and for sundry civil expenses; the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the bill for the consular and diplomatic expenses; the Committee on Military Affairs, the bills for the expenses of the Army and of the Military Academy and for fortifications; the Commitee on Naval Affairs, the bill for the expenses of the Navy and the Naval Academy; the Committee on Indian Affairs, the bill for the expenses of the Indian Department; the Committee on Invalid Pensions, the bill for the payment of invalid and other pensions; the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, the bills for the expenses of the Post-Office Department and for mail transportation by ocean steamers; the Committee on Agriculture, the bill for the expenses of the Department of Agriculture. In case any of said committees shall fail to make such report within said time they shall report the reasons of such failure. And said committees shall have leave to report said bills (for reference only) at any time. In all cases where appropriations cannot be made specific in amount the maximum to be expended shall be stated, and each appropriation bill when reported from the committees shall in the concluding clause state the sum total of all the items contained in said bill. The following additional rules shall be a part of the rules of this House, namely: 167. All private bills hereafter introduced which have been printed by order of either House of the preceding Congress shall not be again printed at the expense of the Government until after a reference to a committee and report thereon with a favorable recommendation. 168. All private bills granting pensions shall hereafter be presented with an accompanying petition of the claimant, and both petition and bill shall be deposited in the petition-box and referred to the appropriate committee without printing, which committee shall consider all such petitions and bills, and shall report from time to time a general bill which shall include therein the names of all persons whom said committee shall find to be entitled to pensions, and accompany each bill with a report upon each case included therein, briefly stating the facts thereof; which general bill and accompanying report shall, when reported to the House, be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar."

Measured by the standard of Sir Henry Thring, that "an index is perfect in proportion as it is concise in expression," we doubt if a more extreme example of what an index entry should not be can be found in the history of index-making since the art of printing has been practiced.

We have been curious to investigate the other results of this system, and we find the significant facts exhibited below, which show a regular increase in the size of the index as compared with the matter indexed.

SHORT SESSIONS.

Second session, Forty-third Congress: Record, 2,478 pages; index, 219 pages, or 8.8 per cent.

Second session, Forty-fourth Congress: Record, 2,821 pages; index, 341 pages, or 12 per cent.

Third session, Forty-fifth Congress: Record, 2,694 pages; index, 426 pages, or 15.8 per cent.

First session, Forty-sixth Congress: Record, 2,632 pages; index, 439 pages, or 16.6 per cent.

LONG SESSIONS.

First session, Forty-third Congress: Record, 5,954 pages; index, 366 pages, or 6.1 per cent.

First session, Forty-fourth Congress: Record, 6,393 pages; index, 697 pages, or 10.9 per cent.

Second session, Forty-fifth Congress: Record, 5,400 pages; index, 759 pages, or 14 per cent.

There has been no change in the form or system of the index during this time to account for or justify this increase in size, but simply an increased experience and ingenuity in making the entries as prolix as possible, and repeating them in as many places and under as many different forms as practicable. If the system is continued much longer the index will become an abridgement.

It is evident from what we have stated that at least six hundred superfluous pages have been added to the index of a single Congress, which have not only made the indexes superlatively bad, but also entailed a very serious waste of money. From one of the reports of the Public Printer (Senate Miscellaneous Document 23, Third session, Forty-fifth Congress, page 17) we learn that the cost of printing and publishing 7,279 pages of the RECORD was as follows: Composing-room, $60,787.32; press-room, $53,924.18; folding-room, $15,057.93; stereotype-room, $2,969.24; bindery, $25,278.53; miscellaneous items, $3,351.13. Omitting the cost of binding and miscellaneous items as expenses that would not be materially affected by the number of pages, we find that the direct cost of the superfluous pages has been $18.23 a page. Making a full allowance for expenses that would not be reduced by reducing the number of pages, it would appear to be a moderate estimate to say that the cost of printing and publishing the superfluous pages of the index is not less than $5,000 a year.

Having thus considered the faults of the present indexes of the RECORD, and discovered their cause, the committee submit the following observations on the means to improve both the method and system of indexing:

To determine how it should be indexed it is first necessary to consider for what purposes the RECORD is published. These purposes are so obviously two distinct purposes that we will consider them separately.

First. The RECORD is published to permanently preserve for reference a complete report of the speeches, debates, and proceedings of Congress in detail, not only when acting in its legislative capacity, but also when sitting in Committees of the Whole. To fulfill this purpose it is obvious that its permanent index should be an index of the debates and proceedings in detail and not, as it now is, simply a superfluously enlarged repetition of the indexes of the Journals. Bills frequently contain provisions on a variety of subjects, not indicated in their titles, on which important debates occur; dimly remembered thereafter only as a subject that had engaged the attention of Congress, and with no knowledge of the title of the bill on which such debate occurred, it is impossible for the inquirer to obtain the information he desires. Debates are also frequently illustrated by tables of statistics and valuable information, no reference to which is now made in the indexes, and members year after year are forced to plod through the same toilsome work to collect information already collated and which should be available to them without loss of time.

Second. The RECORD is published daily during the session, in order that it may be available in conducting the business of Congress, afford members information necessary for their guidance, and furnish the public with an official statement of the daily proceedings. It is obvious that so far as these purposes are concerned the large amount of money expended in the daily publication of the RECORD is almost absolutely wasted. After Congress has been in session a few weeks the accumulated numbers of the RECORD are nearly valueless, as they present such a bulk of matter, and the task is so hopeless, that no member attempts to use them to learn the condition of any business pending. It is evident that the daily issue of the RECORD can only be made valuable by publishing indexes periodically during the session, perhaps even as often as twice in each month.

In view of the facts which we have recited, the committee have arrived at the following conclusions:

First. That the permanent index of the RECORD should be made on the system adopted for the General Index of the Journals of Congress, and should be an index of the contents of the RECORD, and not simply of its general subjects.

Second. That an index of the RECORD should be published at frequent and stated intervals during the sessions of Congress.

The committee have further considered the means by which these recommendations can be best carried into effect.

We are satisfied that the defects and abuses which we have shown have been partially due to the fact that the work of indexing has not been done by any officer of Congress or person who could be held officially responsible for its proper execution. We therefore believe that one of the first requisites of reform is to place the work in the hands of a responsible officer.

Indexing is the work of a specialist, and to properly index the proceedings of Congress there must be added to the ordinary qualifications of an expert a thorough knowledge of the rules and methods of proceedings in Congress and a familiarity with the wants of members in using the index. The labor of making the index will of course require the services of a number of persons, who need not necessarily be expert indexers, but the directing mind of the work must be specially qualified for it.

To fulfill both the requisites we have named, that the work should be done by a sworn officer and one who is a specialist, we are constrained, with a view to economy, to recommend that for the present the preparation of the indexes of the RECORD be placed under the direction of the indexer employed to prepare the General Index of the Journals of Congress. We regard the General Index as a work so much needed that nothing should be allowed to retard its progress; but on investigation we find that the work, instead of being retarded by the arrangement we suggest, will be greatly expedited, as the indexer can, during the recess, use on the work of the General Index the persons employed during the session on the indexes of the RECORD, and thus both works be accomplished at the least possible cost. We are also of the opinion that under such an arrangement not only would the index be greatly improved, but that it would be so much reduced in size that, on the basis of cost reported by the Public Printer, we estimate that not less than $5,000 a year would be saved in the cost of printing and publishing it.

Although the direct saving of $5,000 a year is an object deserving thoughtful consideration, the committee nevertheless are so strongly impressed with the benefits that would be derived from the publication of periodical indexes during the session that they submit the following observations on that point: From the reports of the Public Printer we learn that there was paid to the persons employed in preparing the index of the RECORD, from October 1, 1875, to June 30, 1879, the sum of $18,154.37, which is an average rate of a little over $4,800 a year. We are satisfied that under the arrangement we suggest this sum need not be increased to secure the additional work of preparing indexes every two weeks during the session. We have also shown that under the system now practiced the index has increased to double its original proportions. It is therefore evident that if this superfluous increase is cut off by indexing on a proper system what it now costs to print and publish the superfluous pages would exactly cover the cost of printing and publishing periodical indexes.

We therefore submit the following resolution, and recommend that it be adopted:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the House, after the present session of Congress, indexes of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD should be prepared and published every two weeks during the sessions of Congress; that the said indexes should be prepared under the direction of the indexer employed to prepare the General Index of the Journals of Congress, and that he should be allowed an additional compensation of $—— a year for the said work, and that the Joint Committee on Printing should be authorized to employ such clerical assistance as may be required on said work at a cost not exceeding $—— a year.

RECEPTION OF CHARLES STEWART PARNELL, ESQ.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 13, 1880.

MR. SPEAKER: The undersigned, on behalf of the Clan na Gael Association, present their compliments, and have the honor, through you, to earnestly and respectfully solicit the illustrious body over whose deliberations you preside to confer upon the undersigned and the Irish patriotic organization they represent the distinguished honor of accepting this invitation to be present at the delivery of an address on the present suffering in Ireland by Charles Stewart Parnell, esq., member of the Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, on the 2d of February next, and in such place in Washington as will best suit the convenience of the honorable the House of Representatives.

The lively sympathy with the suffering people of Ireland so recently and cordially manifested by the House of Representatives, and the deep-seated love of justice which inspires their deliberations, encourage the undersigned to entertain the hope that the occasion referred to will be honored by the presence of the House.

We have the honor to remain, most respectfully, your obedient servants,

ED. O'MEAGHER CONDON,
RICARD O'S. BURKE,
Committee on Invitations.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the invitation extended to this body to hear the address of Hon. Mr. Parnell, a member of Parliament, to be delivered in this city on the evening of February 2, on the distressed condition of Ireland, be accepted.

USE OF THE HALL.

Mr. COX. I propose the following resolution, to follow that of the gentleman from Ohio:

The Clerk read as follows:

In response to the invitation just presented and accepted, requesting the House to agree to take part in the ceremonies to be observed in the reception of Mr. Charles Stewart Parnell, a representative of the Irish people, for the delivery of an address on Irish affairs, and because of the great interest which the people of the United States take in the condition of Ireland with which this country is so closely allied by many historic and kindred ties: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Hall of this House be granted for the above purposes on the 2d day of February next, and that the House meet on that day and time to take part in said ceremonies.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, has the call of the States been concluded?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to introduce several bills for reference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman whenever he can. There are a great many members in the same situation with himself.

Mr. COX. I demand the previous question on the resolution which I have introduced.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the House indulge me for a moment? I could not hear the resolution when it was read on account of the disturbance in this part of the Hall.

The SPEAKER. It will be read again, but the difficulty in hearing on the part of members lies at the doors of members themselves.

Mr. HAWLEY. I was trying to hear, but could not.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I desire to suggest to my colleague that he fix the hour in the evening, so that we may not be deprived of the opportunity to legislate on the second day of February. I am in favor of the resolution, but would like the occasion to be at a time when it would not interfere with the business of the House.

Mr. COX. I will say to my colleague that the hour will be hereafter arranged.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I think it had better be settled in the resolution itself.

Mr. COX. There will be no difficulty about fixing the hour.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I suggest that we fix the hour at eight in the evening or half past seven.

Mr. STEPHENS. Say half past seven.

Mr. COX. I will adopt the suggestion of my colleague and say half past seven in the evening.

Mr. SCALES. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. I do not know whether I understand the resolution or not; but are we to understand from it that this House as a legislative body is to receive Mr. Parnell?

Mr. COX. This House meets under Rule 155 for certain purposes when any ceremonies take place; that is all. It is simply to attend the ceremony, no legislative business whatever to be attended to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the rule to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

155. The Hall of the House shall not be used for any other purpose than the legitimate business of the House, nor shall the Speaker entertain any proposition to use it for any other purpose, or for the suspension of this rule: Provided, That this shall not interfere with the performance of divine service therein, under the direction of the Speaker, or with the use of the same for caucus meetings of the members, or upon occasions where the House may, by resolution, agree to take part in any ceremonies to be observed therein.

Mr. COX. I insist on the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The resolution comes within the terms of the rule, and therefore the Chair has recognized the gentleman from New York for its introduction.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York whether Mr. Parnell, for whom I have a high respect, is here in any official capacity?

Mr. COX. He is here in many senses as a representative of the Irish people, to present the terrible condition of that people to those of this country who are interested in them. Of course the gentleman must know as well as I do he has no official position; he is a member of Parliament, but he does not come to this country on a mission, except as he comes from his people as a citizen of Ireland and a representative of her interest, and in many ways of her terrible sufferings. I hope the House will not fail to pass this resolution with unanimity.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The House has already with entire unanimity adopted the resolution that the members will be present on the occasion of the delivery of this address by Mr. Parnell. As I understand the object of my colleague, it is that the address may be delivered in this Hall, not to interfere with the legislation of the day. I hope there will be no objection to the use of the Hall, but that it will be adopted with the same unanimity we have already shown in accepting the invitation to listen to the address of Mr. Parnell.

Mr. COX. The resolution is written to conform to Rule 155, and I insist on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. HAYES. Is discussion in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. HUMPHREY. How is this allowed to interfere with the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. This proposed proceeding is fixed for the evening, and therefore does not interfere with a morning hour, unless such morning hour should be in the evening. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREY. I wish to inquire why this resolution is allowed to interfere with the call of States for the introduction of bills?

The SPEAKER. The Chair presented the communication which came to him officially.

Mr. KELLEY. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the morning hour was dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. No, it was not dispensed with, but the morning hour expired, and the regular order was demanded so that several of the States were cut off, and among the others the gentleman's own State.

Mr. STEELE. I wish to be heard.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman from New York allow me to ask him a question? I call attention to that feature of the resolution which requires the House to meet here as a body——

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, have I the floor or not?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from North Carolina in one moment.

Mr. COX. I will say to the gentleman from Connecticut that the resolution, I believe, is drawn in the only way in which it can be made to conform to the rule.

Mr. STEELE. I hope my young friend from New York [Mr. COX] will listen to me as well as he did to my colleague, [Mr. SCALES.]

Mr. COX. I am sorry my back was turned on the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STEELE.] I could not help it from the position of my seat.

Mr. STEELE. I hope you will never turn your back on me.

Mr. COX. Never, never. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEELE. You must never do that again. [Laughter.] I only wish to say, by the courtesy of my young friend from New York, that although I have very great sympathy with the Irish race, and with every race on the face of the earth, I think that to adopt this resolution would be to establish a bad precedent.

Mr. HAYES. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for. The gentleman from New York demands the previous question.

Mr. COX. I certainly do. And in reply——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has no right to reply. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAYES] demands the regular order, which is a vote on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. COVERT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COVERT. Will it be in order to move the reference of this resolution to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

The SPEAKER. It will be if the previous question is voted down.

The question being put, there were—ayes 96, noes 43.

So the previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. The main question has been ordered, and the question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NEGOTIATION OF COMMERCIAL TREATIES.

Mr. KELLEY. I move that the rules be suspended and that the House pass the resolution which I send to the desk; and upon that I call for the yeas and nays.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this House that the negotiation by the executive department of the Government of a commercial treaty whereby the rates of duty to be imposed on foreign commodities entering the United States for consumption should be fixed would, in view of the provision of section 7 of article 1 of the Constitution of the United States, be an infraction of the Constitution and an invasion of one of the highest prerogatives of the House of Representatives.

Mr. SPRINGER. That resolution ought to be unanimously adopted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 58 members voting therefor.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is it competent to move to lay that resolution on the table?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. WILSON. It is an invasion of the rights of the treaty-making power of this Government, if I understand it. This subject is now being considered by the Committee on Foreign Affairs; this resolution should go there and be reported upon after careful examination and study. The courts have defined the limit of the treaty-making power, and I am opposed to rushing through this House grave and important questions without examination. When the Committee on Foreign Affairs shall report it will be time enough to act.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BRIGHT. I ask that the resolution be again read.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. WILSON. I desire, with the consent—— Cries of "Regular order!"

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Nobody ever proposed such a thing.

Mr. KELLEY. I call for the regular order. The gentleman from New York is out of order in attempting to debate.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. The Clerk will call the roll.

The first call of the roll was made, and resulted as follows:

Before the names of those members were called who, being within the bar before the last name on the roll was called, now desired to vote,

Mr. HUNTON said: Mr. Speaker, the hour of two o'clock has arrived.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Virginia as soon as the roll-call is completed.

Mr. HUNTON. The hour has arrived at which, under the rule, the Committee for the District of Columbia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does that interfere with the announcement of the result of the vote on the resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY?]

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The roll-call is not yet completed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has repeatedly held that the right of the Committee for the District of Columbia to take the floor at two o'clock on the third Monday of the month, under the rule, will interrupt any business, even the call of the roll. The Chair would appeal to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] to allow the roll-call to be completed; it will take but a few minutes.

Many MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. KELLEY. What will be the condition of my resolution, should the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] now insist upon taking the floor for his committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has always held that the Committee for the District of Columbia had the right at two o'clock on the third Monday of each month to interrupt any pending business, even a roll-call.

Mr. KELLEY. The Chair will pardon me. My question, with all due respect, was this: What will be the position of this matter, should the gentleman from Virginia insist upon the floor for his committee?

The SPEAKER. The resolution would go over until Monday next.

Mr. KELLEY. Suspending the roll-call now?

The SPEAKER. Certainly, unless the chairman of the Committee for the District of Columbia [Mr. HUNTON] is willing that the roll-call be now completed.

Mr. HUNTON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUNTON. When will this roll-call be completed, if I insist upon my right to claim the floor at this time for the Committee for the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can claim his right, and allow the roll-call to be completed.

Mr. HUNTON. When?

The SPEAKER. Immediately.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I would inquire of the Chair if it is in the power of the Committee for the District of Columbia to waive its right to the floor at two o'clock to-day for any special business, and then to repossess itself of the floor whenever it may please?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the rule to be read, which will answer the question of the gentleman.

Mr. KELLEY. I understand that the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTON,] on behalf of the Committee for the District of Columbia, is willing to waive his right——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the rule to be read in reply to the question of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN.]

The Clerk read as follows:

The third Monday of each month, from the hour of two o'clock p. m. until the adjournment of that day, shall, when claimed by the Committee for the District of Columbia, be devoted exclusively to business reported from said committee; and said committee shall henceforth be omitted by the Speaker in the regular calls of committees.

Mr. BLACKBURN. My inquiry of the Chair is this: should the chairman of the Committee for the District of Columbia waive his right under the rule to claim the floor now, will it be in his power, if objected to by any member of this House, to repossess himself of the floor again to-day on behalf of the Committee for the District of Columbia?

The SPEAKER. It would be; the Chair has often recognized the committee for that purpose after two o'clock.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Is it not in the power of any member of this House to call for the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will notice the language of the rule: "When claimed by the Committee for the District of Columbia."

Mr. REAGAN. That means the original claim of the committee, which is now made.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I submit whether it will not be my right, as it will be the right of any member of this House, to object to the Committee for the District of Columbia yielding the floor now and resuming possession of it again after this or any intervening business has been disposed of?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Virginia does not claim the floor exactly at two o'clock——

Mr. BLACKBURN. Which he now has done.

The SPEAKER. As provided for in this rule, and thereby permits this roll-call to be completed, the Chair would recognize the gentleman in his right as chairman of the Committee for the District of Columbia whenever he rose for that purpose after the roll-call was completed.

Mr. HUNTON. Allow me to ask the Chair another question. If I shall claim the floor now for the District of Columbia Committee, as I have done, when will the roll-call be completed on the resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY?]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is as well able to answer that question as the Chair. The Chair supposes that it would take, perhaps, ten minutes to complete this roll-call.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Would not the roll-call go over until Monday next?

The SPEAKER. If the floor is now claimed absolutely by the gentleman from Virginia the pending business will go over until Monday next, or when business of like character shall again be in order.

Mr. COX. There never has been an order of this House or a ruling by the Speaker which did not give the Committee for the District of Columbia the absolute right at once to take the floor at two o'clock on the third Monday of the month for the transaction of this business.

The SPEAKER. The words "when claimed by the Committee for the District of Columbia" are in the rule.

Mr. COX. Allow me to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] that this whole subject of treaties affecting the tariff legislation of Congress has been referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which committee is now investigating it. I think it might as well go over for some intelligent legislation.

The SPEAKER. The question of intelligent legislation is one for the House, not for the Chair to determine.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to ask a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KELLEY. At what point will the roll-call be resumed, when this question shall again come up?

The SPEAKER. Where it is now left off; members who have not voted will be called.

Mr. KELLEY. And they will have to vote upon their honor that they were present?

Mr. HUNTON. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] will be deprived of the vote on his resolution for but a week, I must insist upon my right to claim the floor now for the business of the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield the floor or claim it?

Mr. HUNTON. I claim the floor.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. HOOKER. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOOKER. Has it not been ruled both by the present occupant of the chair and by his predecessor that when the roll-call has begun it cannot be interrupted by other business, whether it be a special order fixed by the House or an order under the rules?

The SPEAKER. The business of the District Committee is the only exception. The Chair has uniformly held that under the language of the rule this committee has the right, on the day assigned to it, to claim the floor absolutely at two o'clock, because the rule says that this day after the hour of two o'clock shall be "devoted exclusively" to that business. The Chair has therefore ruled and now rules that if the floor is claimed by the District Committee at two o'clock it does interrupt a pending roll-call, and the roll-call will be concluded when the character of business to which it relates shall be again in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wish to put a parliamentary question. If during the progress of this legislative day the District Committee should cease to occupy the floor——

The SPEAKER. Then the pending business—the conclusion of this roll-call—will come up immediately.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then this roll-call may be concluded to-day?

The SPEAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask that the vote as far as taken be reported in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. That will be done, of course.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. PAGE. I would like to introduce a bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain anything except a motion to adjourn, which, as he understands the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. O'NEILL,] does not press. The chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia to call up the business of the Committee for the District of Columbia. The unfinished business coming over from the last District day, the third Monday in December last, is the bill (H. R. No. 2328) to provide for the settlement of all outstanding claims against the District of Columbia, and conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear the same, and for other purposes. On the passage of this bill the yeas and nays were ordered. The question will now be taken.

Mr. WAIT. I ask that the bill be read, so that we may understand distinctly what we are voting upon.

The bill, which was read in part, is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims is hereby extended to, and it shall have exclusive original legal and equitable jurisdiction of, all claims now existing against the District of Columbia arising out of contracts, and not barred by any act of Congress or failure to comply with the requirements of any act of Congress, including certificates of auditor and of board of audit, sewer certificates, sewer-taxes, measurements, covered by contracts made since February 21, 1871: Provided, That said Court of Claims shall not take jurisdiction of any claim against the District of Columbia which was not presented to the board of audit under the provisions of the acts of June 20, 1874, and of March 3, 1875, excepting such claims as have arisen out of contracts made by the District commissioners since the passage of the said act of June 20, 1874. Said Court of Claims shall have the same power, proceed in the same manner, and be governed by the same rules in respect to the mode of hearing, adjudication, and determination of said claims as it now has in relation to the adjudication of claims against the United States. When the trial of any claim against the District of Columbia, prosecuted under the provisions of this act, involves the taking and stating of a long account, or the making of measurements or computations involving the services of engineers, said court shall have power to award a reference to a competent referee to take and state such account, or to the engineer commissioner of the District to make and report such measurements and computations; and said referee or engineer shall report to the court the evidence taken by him for the information of said court, and any such referee shall be allowed such compensation for his services as the court may determine, not exceeding $10 per day for time actually employed, to be paid on the order of the court, in money.

SEC. 2. All such claims against the District of Columbia shall, in the first instance, be prosecuted before the Court of Claims, in the same manner and subject to the same rules as claims against the United States are prosecuted therein, or to such other rules as the court shall prescribe. In any case in which the amount in controversy exceeds $5,000, if before trial either party requests in writing a finding of facts by the court, there shall be the same right of appeal, either by the District of Columbia or by the claimant, and subject to the same rules and regulations, as are prescribed by law for appeals on behalf of the United States or claimants against the United States from the judgments of the Court of Claims: Provided, That the prosecution of all such claims shall be commenced in the Court of Claims by the filing of the petition of the claimant, as required by the rules and practice of said court, within six months from the passage of this act; and all such claims against the District of Columbia now existing, and not so filed within said time, shall be forever barred, except in cases of claims owned and held by persons under legal disabilities, in which case such claims shall be in like manner barred unless commenced as aforesaid within six months after the expiration of such disability: Provided, That all certificates, measurements, or other evidence of indebtedness, in the custody of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, shall be deposited with the Court of Claims, upon the application of any claimant. When the validity of a number of claims depends substantially upon a like state of facts, they may be brought before the court in one petition in which all parties are joined, and may be tried together under such rules as the court may prescribe, and such judgments may be entered therein as the court may determine; and cases of like kind may be consolidated and tried together whenever the court so orders.

SEC. 3. The Attorney-General of the United States shall have authority, and it shall be his duty, to defend the District of Columbia against all such claims against said District of Columbia prosecuted in said Court of Claims, and on appeal, in like manner as he is now by law required to defend the United States in said court, with the same power to interpose counter-claims and offsets against claims, and with like power of appeal as in cases against the United States tried in said court.

SEC. 4. All laws now in force relating to prosecutions of claims against the United States in the Court of Claims shall apply, as far as applicable, to the prosecution, practice, hearing, and determination of claims against the District of Columbia authorized to be prosecuted under the provisions of this act: Provided, That motions for new trials shall be made by either party within twenty days after the rendition of any judgment: And provided further, That in the trial of such cases no person shall be excluded as a witness because he or she is a party to or interested in the same.

SEC. 5. If no appeal be taken from the judgment and determination of the Court of Claims in cases provided for in this act within the term limited by law for appealing from the judgments of said court, and in all cases of final judgments by the Court of Claims, or on appeal by the Supreme Court where the same are affirmed in favor of the claimant, the sum due thereby shall be paid, as hereinafter provided, by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That no payment shall be made except upon the presentation to the Secretary of the Treasury of a copy of said judgment certified by the clerk of the Court of Claims, and signed by the chief-justice, or, in his absence, by the presiding judge of said court.

SEC. 6. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to demand of the sinking-fund commissioner of the District of Columbia so many of the 3.65 bonds authorized by act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, and acts amendatory thereof, as may be necessary for the payment of the judgments; and said sinking-fund commissioner is hereby directed to issue and deliver to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount of 3.65 bonds required to satisfy the judgments; which bonds shall be received by said claimants at par in payment of such judgments, and shall bear date January 1, 1875, and mature at the same time as other bonds of this issue; and for the amount found by the court to be due upon any such claim, interest shall be allowed from the maturity of the same, at the rate of 3.65 per cent. per annum; and the gross amount of such bonds heretofore and hereafter issued shall not exceed in the aggregate $15,000,000: Provided, That the bonds issued by authority of this act shall be of no more binding force as to their payment on the Government of the United States than the 3.65 bonds issued under authority of the act of June 20, 1874.

SEC. 7. In all cases prosecuted under the provisions of this act it shall be the duty of the claimant, after the commencement of said actions, to prosecute them in said court diligently; and after any issue of law or of fact shall be joined in any case, the Attorney-General shall have power to place the same on the trial calendar of said court for trial; and in all cases when any case has been reached in its order on the calendar, and the trial thereof has been unreasonably delayed by the claimant, the said court may, on motion of the Attorney-General, on notice to the claimant, or his counsel, attorney, or solicitor, dismiss said claim; and such dismissal or final judgment on any claim shall be a conclusive bar against any further prosecution of such claim before any court or tribunal whatsoever.

SEC. 8. No claim shall be presented to or considered by the Court of Claims under the provisions of this act which was rejected by the board of audit.

Mr. WAIT (before the reading of the bill was concluded) said: I understand from members of the District Committee that the remaining part of the bill provides merely the machinery by which suits can be brought against the District of Columbia. As I called for the reading of the bill, I now, in view of the explanation which has been made to me, withdraw that call.

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HUNTON. I yield to the gentleman for an explanation.

The SPEAKER. How long?

Mr. HUNTON. For five minutes.

The SPEAKER. It will be understood that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] proceeds by unanimous consent for five minutes.

Mr. NEAL. When this bill was under consideration on the third Monday of December last, I made a statement that these claims, as I understood, were in part owned by the First National Bank of New York. I have since ascertained that my information on that point was incorrect; that the First National Bank holds some of the 3.65 bonds, but has no interest in these claims. The claims, as I now learn, are held principally by the persons who did the work, some of whom have mortgaged their property to pay their employés. They now simply ask that they may be permitted by this bill to go into the Court of Claims, and, if the court decides that they have a valid claim against the District, that they shall receive in payment 3.65 bonds, such as have been issued to other creditors of the District. It seems to me that the bill is eminently just and ought to meet the approbation of the House.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 147, nays 45, not voting 99; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I am paired with Mr. REED, of Maine.

Mr. HERNDON. My colleague, Mr. WILLIAMS, is paired with Mr. RYAN, of Kansas.

Mr. MANNING. I am paired with Mr. KEIFER, of Ohio; but understanding that he would vote "ay," I ask to have my vote recorded in the affirmative.

Mr. MONROE. Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, is paired with Mr. PIERCE, of New York.

Mr. BAKER. I am paired with the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. BLOUNT.

Mr. BREWER. I am paired with Mr. LORING, of Massachusetts.

Mr. ELLIS. I am paired with Mr. HARMER. If he were present I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am paired with Mr. HERBERT, of Alabama.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I am paired with Mr. MILES, of Connecticut.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HUNTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGETOWN BRIDGE.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. Speaker, during the extra session of this Congress there was a bill reported from the District Committee to establish a free bridge across the Potomac near Georgetown. That bill was debated, but the House adjourned without completing its consideration. I beg leave now to call it up as unfinished business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. COX in the chair.) That bill is in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and it requires a vote of the House to go into committee.

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir; if the Speaker will excuse me, the House on that occasion decided to consider the bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. That order would prevail, of course, until it is completed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will consult the Journal.

Mr. SAMFORD. The RECORD shows that Mr. HUNTON made a motion to consider that in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and it was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the statement of the gentleman is correct, and the Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H R. No. 1381) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The bill was then read in extenso.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill as it stands before the House now is accompanied by two amendments, recommended by the committee, to strike out the second and third sections.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman from Virginia to admit an amendment at the close of the last section, so as to insert "Detroit, Michigan," among those places where advertisement is to be made for proposals for building this bridge.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is open to general debate, and amendment will be in order as each section is reached.

Mr. CONGER. I ask by unanimous consent that "Detroit, Michigan," be one of the places where advertisement shall be made for the building of this bridge. The bridge company of Detroit is perhaps the most celebrated in the United States.

Mr. HUNTON. I have no objection.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to explain what the committee desire on the subject. The first section of this bill provides for the erection of a free bridge across the Potomac River, near Georgetown. It contains all the features of the bill passed by the Forty-fifth Congress, or this House of the Forty-fifth Congress, and contains all the amendments which were ingrafted upon that bill by the Forty-fifth Congress; so the bill in its first section is as thoroughly guarded as this House, in the Forty-fifth Congress, could possibly make it.

The Committee for the District of Columbia, I believe with unanimity, have instructed me to amend this bill by striking out the second and third sections. Those two sections provide for the discretion in the Secretary of War, instead of building a free bridge to lease the present Aqueduct Bridge in lieu of any free bridge to be built. If these amendments recommended by the committee prevail, then the bill will stand just as it passed the House in the Forty-fifth Congress without a division, and provide simply for the erection of a free bridge across the river Potomac at or near Georgetown.

And I beg leave to say here just one word for the information of the House, that this bridge, if erected by the Government, will offer free ingress and egress to the people of the District of Columbia at the only point of the river where there is a toll-bridge at the present time. Other bridges leading into and from the District of Columbia have heretofore been toll-bridges, but they have all been bought by the Government and made free except this one.

The object of this bill is to put that bridge upon the same footing with the other bridges leading into the District of Columbia. It was very fully discussed in the extra session of Congress, and I propose now, unless some gentleman desires to discuss the bill further, that we proceed to read it by sections for amendment.

Mr. SAMFORD. Mr. Speaker, this bill was partially considered during the extra session of Congress, and I believe I was the only member of the District Committee who urged an objection to its passage. I very freely gave my reasons for the objection at that time, and I do not propose now to do more than call the attention of the House to those objections, which I think are well taken.

I do not now, Mr. Speaker, intend to discuss the expediency or the propriety on the part of the General Government of building this bridge, but to call attention to the fact that we have a general law for the permanent government of the District of Columbia, and this bill unwisely annuls salutary provisions of that general law. In that law it is provided that the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, as well as for the improvements in the District, shall be paid one-half by the General Government and one-half by the citizens of the District themselves. It is required in that law, which was passed in June, 1878, not two years ago, that all such matters as this for the construction or repairs of any bridges over the Potomac River, or of any other stream in this District, shall first receive the consideration of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, who are directed to make an estimate and report the same to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall scrutinize it and then transmit it in general estimates of appropriations to Congress for final action. It was contended in the extra session that such a course as that would necessitate the putting over of this bill, and it was desired that it be speedily passed. It was postponed by the action of this House, and these commissioners having had ample opportunity have not only not made any estimate for this purpose but they have studiously avoided mentioning it, even as a public work to be desired.

From their estimates, which are before me, I see they propose to spend during the fiscal year commencing June 30, 1880, the sum of $3,434,312.55, (nearly $200,000 more than during the preceding year;) and of this amount, of course, the General Government is to pay one-half, the other half to be raised by taxation in the District of Columbia. This seems to me to be quite enough for one year for the General Government to pay toward expenses and improvements in this District. You will observe the whole of this $3,434,000 is to be expended in the ordinary expenses of the District and in making other improvements than this bridge. Therefore, to obtain the $140,000 called for by this bill, the Government and the District must each furnish an additional $70,000 over and above the commissioners' estimates. While the General Government might not miss that sum, it will be severe to impose the extra burden on the tax-payers here. They pay one-half that tax by this bill, for, indeed, it is provided that one-half of the cost of the construction of this bridge shall be paid out of the fund to be raised by taxation from the citizens of the District and the other half by the General Government. But this is not an estimate provided by the commissioners, and therefore it is in addition to the estimate the commissioners have already made.

Now, it does not seem to me there is any propriety or necessity for expending by the Federal Government $70,000 for this bridge now, or indeed $140,000, because in my judgment none of it will ever come back, especially when the citizens of this District are clamoring against high taxes already imposed, and when they say the taxes are now more than they can pay. There is no necessity or propriety in this, especially when taken together with the fact that the commissioners' estimates are nearly $200,000 more than for the preceding year. It seems to me, therefore, not to be proper policy, if indeed it is just, to go outside of the estimates of the commissioners and pass a bill of this sort without any reference whatever to the estimates made by the commissioners or the Secretary of the Treasury and ignoring the law of the land. These were the reasons I gave briefly in the extra session, and they are also the reasons which influence me now in voting as I shall against the pending proposition. I am free to confess, Mr. Speaker, that I have no hope of defeating this measure. It is only to do my duty to the House and the country that, as a member of the committee, I call attention to this vicious and extravagant legislation. The responsibility rests with this House.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. Speaker, I will say but a single word in reply to the objection made by the gentleman from Alabama. This same objection was raised to the bill, or a similar bill, in the Forty-fifth Congress by my friend from Missouri, [Mr. BUCKNER,] but upon an explanation to him, and a recital of the organic act, that objection was waived because he found that there was nothing in the objection, as I think, with all due respect to the gentleman from Alabama, he will also find there is nothing in his objection. Now, that act proposes that the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall submit annually, through the Secretary of the Treasury, to Congress estimates for the expenses of the government for the ensuing fiscal year, and to include in that estimate the cost of the repair and construction of all the bridges authorized by law.

Now, there is no law authorizing the construction of this bridge; the very object of this bill is to authorize its construction by law, and therefore there being no authority in the law to construct a bridge, the commissioners could not have estimated the cost of construction. Therefore it will be seen that under the circumstances no estimate could have been received from the commissioners. We have here the passage of the law and the granting of the appropriation in the same bill for the reason stated that the commissioners had no authority to send any estimate to this House for the construction of a bridge when there was no law authorizing such construction, and for that reason the commissioners have not taken it into their estimates at all.

As I stated, an objection was raised once before to this bill. I trust there will be no objection to the passage of it.

Mr. SAMFORD. Mr. Speaker, I will say only a word in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia. A technical construction of the act to which he has referred may sustain the position of my friend that this bridge is not authorized by law, and therefore it could not come literally within the language of the statute requiring this estimate. Though that might be literally so, yet it seems to me a reasonable construction of that law will necessarily lead us to that conclusion which I announced. The wording of the law is this:

The said commissioners shall submit to the Secretary of the Treasury for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and annually thereafter, for his examination and approval, a statement showing in detail the work proposed to be undertaken by them during the fiscal year next ensuing, and the estimated cost thereof; also, the cost of constructing, repairing, and maintaining all bridges authorized by law across the Potomac River within the District of Columbia, and also all other streams in said District.

Now, sir, it is further provided in that very law, in another provision, that these estimates shall be made out, stating in detail the works proposed to be done, and submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury after they have been made out by the District commissioners, and by him approved and sent to Congress. For what purpose? That the District commissioners might say to Congress what works of permanent improvement the taxes of the District would warrant; otherwise we are perfectly at sea. How do we know whether or not the taxes of the District will warrant Congress placing upon the District a tax of $70,000 not asked for in the estimates for appropriations of the commissioners? Especially is this question pertinent when we are advised by them that all the taxes they can raise at the rate allowed will be necessary for other expenses and improvements. Where are they to get the $70,000, the District's half, required by this bill? From taxation? No, that is absorbed for other purposes. But there is no other resource for them to get it. Therefore you will see the force of my remark in the beginning of this discussion, that the Federal Treasury will advance the whole amount, the District will not be able to respond to its half, and there is the end of it.

The gentleman's technical construction is this bridge is not authorized by law, therefore the commissioners could not have estimated for it. But the act requires them to estimate for the construction of bridges, clearly implying that bridges must first be authorized, and the amounts necessary for their construction be estimated by the commissioners before we are called on to act.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it either comes within the provision of that law or the alternative is presented that Congress is acting outside of that law for the purpose of authorizing an expenditure on the part of the Federal Government in favor of the District not provided for within the one-half of the expenses that the Federal Government is required to pay. Therefore, my opinion at this time and which goes to the very gist of the whole matter is that we should first authorize the bridge by a law for that purpose only—considering the propriety of its construction afterward—or we should allow the commissioners themselves to report to this House what permanent constructions of bridges as well as other permanent improvements should be made, and not, as we are doing here, authorize its construction and appropriate therefor in the same bill, without having any estimates of its proper cost.

Mr. WARNER. I would like to ask my friend from Virginia a question.

Mr. HUNTON. I will hear it with great pleasure.

Mr. WARNER. I desire to ask how it is proposed to raise the money for the construction of this bridge? From the District, or from the general revenue of the United States?

Mr. HUNTON. One-half of it from the District and one-half from the General Government.

Mr. WARNER. Like every other District expenditure?

Mr. HUNTON. Yes, sir; that is expressly provided in the bill.

Mr. WARNER. I think it is an improvement that ought to be made.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does not the Government, however, have to pay all of it in the first instance?

Mr. HUNTON. Yes, sir; but it is credited for it in the settlement between it and the District. It is not to be considered in the light of an advance.

Mr. SAMFORD. Will the gentleman from Virginia allow me to ask him another question?

Mr. HUNTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAMFORD. How is the Government ever to get the other half which is to come from the taxes of the District, when the estimates of the commissioners already show there is necessary to meet the expenses of the District $200,000 more than in the year preceding, and when they have not provided and show in their very estimates that the taxes of the District will not provide for this extra $70,000?

Mr. HUNTON. There is no pretense anywhere that I have heard of that the passage of this bill will increase the taxation in the District of Columbia. After this Congress shall have adjourned and made its appropriations for the District of Columbia, then the District commissioners, under the organic act, lay the taxes so as not to exceed a certain limit at which they are now fixed.

Mr. SIMONTON. If I understand the matter correctly, this bridge is not to be merely a District bridge. It is one which connects the District with the State of Virginia. It seems to me, if I understand it, as much for the benefit of the State of Virginia as for the benefit of the District of Columbia. It would therefore seem equitable and right that the State of Virginia should pay its proportionate part. I ask the gentleman who is the chairman of the District Committee if the Government and the District of Columbia alone should pay all the expenses of this bridge?

Mr. HUNTON. I have not the slighest hesitation in answering the question in the affirmative; and I will give the gentleman the reason. There is not a free bridge that comes either from Maryland or from Virginia that has not been built and paid for by the Government of the United States alone. This bill provides that the people of the District of Columbia shall pay half of the cost of this bridge.

Mr. SIMONTON. Let me ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. HUNTON. Let me answer the gentleman's first question, then he can ask another if he desires.

Now in regard to the State of Virginia paying a portion of the cost of the bridge; we have heard that on every occasion when this subject has been up both in the last and the present Congress. But I will say to the gentleman who makes the inquiry, that every drop of water in the Potomac River to be spanned by this contemplated bridge belongs to and is under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States Government. It does not bridge a single drop of water that belongs to the State of Virginia. By the convention between the States of Maryland and Virginia it was decided that the District line and the Maryland line went to the other side of the Potomac River; and the State of Virginia could not proceed one single foot toward a bridge across the Potomac River without the consent of the Federal Government.

Mr. SIMONTON. We will give that consent.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand why it is sought by some gentlemen to impose a burden upon a State at this moment which never was imposed upon a State before in the erection of a bridge across the Potomac River.

Now there are bridges leading from this District into Maryland that have been built by the United States, even bought out by the United States—and if the gentleman desires I can give him a list of them—at an expense of hundreds of thousands of dollars, so as to make ingress and egress from the capital of your country free to all the citizens of the United States. That has been the policy pursued by this Government almost from its foundation, until there is now not a toll-bridge left over any of the streams about this District, except the one at this point. And the object of this bill is to remove a discrimination against the people using that bridge which is not imposed upon the people using all the other free bridges leading into this District.

Mr. SIMONTON. The custom which has prevailed heretofore in regard to the building of these bridges is not the question with me. The only question I desire to have decided is whether it is correct and right and proper that bridges connecting the District of Columbia with the surrounding States shall be built by the General Government when all the other States of this Union must pay for the building of their own bridges. This principle is not a correct one to apply here for the benefit of the States surrounding this District, and not to be applied elsewhere throughout the Union; I think it is unjust. If the States surrounding this District are benefited by the construction of any bridge leading into this District, I think such States should bear a portion of the expense.

Mr. FORT. I desire to say——

Mr. HUNTON. Will not the gentleman allow the first section to be read?

Mr. FORT. I understand that this bill is one that was defeated in this House once before.

Mr. HUNTON. Was what?

Mr. FORT. Was defeated in this House once before; if it is not the same bill it is a similar bill.

Mr. HUNTON. Never.

Mr. FORT. Well, according to my recollection, there was a bill before this House for the purpose of constructing a bridge across the Potomac at or near Georgetown.

Mr. HUNTON. Will the gentleman allow me to correct him?

Mr. FORT. That bill somehow or other did not pass, or else it would not be necessary to act upon this bill now.

Mr. HUNTON. Will the gentleman allow me to correct him? There was a bill almost identical with this which passed the House of the Forty-fifth Congress without a division. That bill was sent over to the Senate, but too late to be acted upon there. It never has been defeated in this House or in the other.

Mr. FORT. The gentleman no doubt desires that this bill should pass. Perhaps it ought to pass. For my part, I feel like appropriating from the national Treasury all the money that this District ought to have; I would not be small in that regard. I have always voted liberally for the District of Columbia. We have here a city that is very expensive, however; and we in the interior pay large sums of money annually to keep up this District, and the more we pay the more we are asked to pay. Nobody seems to think of economy when the District calls for appropriations.

It would seem from the debate that it is proposed by this bill to erect a bridge which the commissioners of this District themselves do not ask to have erected. Now, it is very strange to me that gentlemen who represent this District as its commissioners, who consult the people of the District, one of whom, I believe, resides and has resided for many years in Georgetown, do not recommend that this bridge shall be built. It is exceedingly strange that for the first time we now hear a demand made from the other side of the Potomac that this bridge should be built. I do not wonder at it. I give my friend [Mr. HUNTON] full credit for what he is doing. I think he is representing his constituents in Virginia when he asks that this bridge shall be built.

Mr. HUNTON. I will ask my friend for his authority for that remark.

Mr. FORT. The remark I made——

Mr. HUNTON. The remark that the demand for this bridge comes from the other side of the river.

Mr. FORT. The bill comes from the committee.

Mr. HUNTON. The committee are not from the other side of the river.

Mr. FORT. And it comes from the gentleman who represents the other side of the river, speaking for the committee and at the same time for Virginia. And I will say to him that if I represented the district he does I should certainly be one of the loudest in my demand for the building of this bridge.

Mr. HUNTON. As chairman of the Committee for the District of Columbia I represent the District.

Mr. FORT. Yes, sir; but the gentleman should represent the United States, all the States, and all the districts in all the States when he comes in here and asks that the money of the United States should be appropriated.

But my point is that the commissioners of this District and the people of this District have never asked that this bridge should be built. I hope my friend will take no offense at what I am going to say, because I have already said that he is doing just what I would do if I were in his place, representing a Virginia district. I believe there is a bridge across the Potomac just below the point where he proposes to build this one, a free bridge, one built by the United States, the bridge where the railroads cross. Is not that a free bridge? The gentleman shakes his head, I see. If it is free I hope the gentleman will not shake his head at me when I say it is a free bridge.

Mr. HUNTON. I did not shake my head at the remark that it was a free bridge, but at the remark that the Government built it.

Mr. FORT. It is but a short distance below this proposed site for a bridge.

Mr. HUNTON. The railroad company built that bridge, and is required to keep a pathway alongside the track.

Mr. FORT. The history of this District, as I understand it, shows that the bridge was built before the railroad was built; built by the United States, and afterward the United States granted the railroad company the right of way over that bridge. But be that as it may, it is sufficient for me to know that there is now a free bridge from the city of Washington across into the State of Virginia, into the gentleman's own district, but a very short distance below where it is proposed to build this bridge. One free bridge across the Potomac is enough, so the commissioners of this District seem to think, and the poor people of this District do not want to be taxed to build another just now, as their taxes are already greater than they can bear. Their taxes amount almost to a confiscation of their property.

It is to be remembered also that just above where it is proposed to build this bridge there is now a free bridge, built by the United States, over which the citizens of Virginia can come into the District and the citizens of the District pass into Virginia. This free bridge, just above Georgetown, is a safe new iron bridge, open to everybody. The gentleman from Virginia can tell the House just how far above it is; but certainly it cannot be very far, because it is within the District of Columbia, which is only ten miles square. This new iron free bridge is only a few miles and on the main road. Now, the Government having already built two bridges, both free, one just above and one just below the proposed site of this new bridge, it does seem to me that we can get along a little while longer with the present bridges; and the United States having built two free bridges, Virginia—the gentleman's constituents—ought to do something.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Is the gentleman aware of the distance between the contemplated bridge and the Long Bridge, and between the contemplated bridge and the Chain Bridge? He speaks of a bridge "just above" and another "just below." What does the gentleman call "just above" and "just below?" Is he aware of the distance?

Mr. FORT. I have asked the gentleman from Virginia who represents the Virginia side of the river to state the distance; he ought to answer that question better than I can do. I said that the one bridge cannot be very far below, nor the other very far above, as they are both within the District of Columbia, which is only ten miles square.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. The two bridges are eight miles apart.

Mr. FORT. It may be that they are eight miles apart; it may be that there is no better place to construct a bridge; but that has not appeared here to-day. The fact is known to us all that there is already a bridge at the point chosen as a site for this new bridge. It is a toll-bridge, I know. But there are gentlemen on this floor representing flourishing cities into which or out of which you cannot go without paying toll. I am not in favor of toll bridges or roads or turnpikes. It is an annoyance. Travel ought to be free as possible. But I believe that you cannot get into the city of Louisville, a city that does more business in one day than the city of Washington does in a whole year, without paying toll. The constituents of the gentleman from Virginia, when they desire to come to market to sell their products, can either go a little below or a little above in order to cross the river free, or probably they can pay toll a little while longer and use the bridge already erected rather than saddle new burdens on this tax-ridden people.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if this bridge is absolutely necessary, it occurs to me that when the bridge already there passes away it will be time enough for the United States to agree to pay a portion of the cost of erecting a new bridge. But I agree with the gentleman who preceded me, [Mr. SIMONTON,] that it becomes the great State of Virginia to contribute a portion of the expense of building this bridge.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] says that the State of Virginia does not own one drop of the water that passes down the Potomac River. Well, what if she does not? The soil may be sacred and the water not. The desire of his people is to come into the District of Columbia; and it does not matter to them whether they own the water over which the bridge passes or not. The ownership of the water cuts no figure. Virginia owns the soil on that side and her citizens want to come over to Washington free, and want us to pay the expense.

Mr. Speaker, Virginia is a proud State, as every other State ought to be. She is able to contribute to the construction of bridges where she is almost the only party interested. The gentleman's constituents are able to do so too. There being a free bridge just below the proposed site and another just above, the people of Virginia have to go but a little distance to come to the one bridge or the other. The fact of so small a proportion of the people of Virginia being interested in this bridge is probably the reason why we have not had any proffer of assistance from the State of Virginia in constructing the bridge. This fact, taken in connection with the fact that the people of this District do not ask for this bridge, that the District commissioner resident in Georgetown has never asked it or put in any estimate for it, seems to me a sufficient reason why we should wait till the people of this District or their organized government may be ready to say that they wish the United States to construct this bridge. I do not think it is becoming for us to force this bridge upon them against their wishes.

The general law provides that no such improvement shall be begun until an estimate has first been considered by the District government, and not until the commissioners have ascertained its cost and recommended that the work or improvement should be made.

Now, sir, this has not been done, and I put this point squarely to the gentleman, that the law has not been complied with in any respect. I call for the showing. Sir, this matter is irregular and unlawful, and is not according to the wish of the people of this District, and not recommended or even recognized by the District government.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I take it to be a correct principle in legislation that when the money of the United States is appropriated to any purpose the people of the United States ought to be interested in that appropriation. We have here upon this floor a large number of Representatives—representatives of both parties in the Government, and I ask each member before he votes for this bill to search his memory and see whether there has ever been a demand on the part of his constituents, or any other man's constituents outside of this District, for the support of this measure. Who has asked its passage? Whence comes the demand? Not even the commissioners who have supervision of the affairs of this District have ever come here with an estimate and said "We need this measure." Yet even during the extra session, amid the din and noise of that speaking session, we heard the clamor coming from this committee for another free bridge.

That was the one faint echo rising above the clamor of that session. I repeat, who has asked for this bridge? The District of Columbia, it may be said. But are your constituency interested in it? Are the constituency of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] now occupying the chair interested in it? No, not one of them. It has not been developed that any of them want a free bridge here. It has been shown that there are two bridges leading out of the District across the Potomac River. How many more are needed? How many will suit this District? I say there should be an end of this thing.

A hundred and forty thousand dollars to lay the foundation stones! Who has made an estimate? Who will say that amount will raise the piers of this bridge above the waters of the Potomac? No one. Who has said this new bridge is needed? No one but the District Committee. They say it is a sine qua non of existence here. What is to be the benefit flowing from it? I admit it would offer better facilities for the exit of members from this District. In that way if their constituents were interested in their leaving the capital at all they would be benefited, but in no other way. There should be an estimate as to what it will cost. We should take no step in the dark. After that the question of expediency would come up, and even if the question of cost were settled it is not expedient to build it.

It has been said by the chairman that the Government of the United States owns the waters of the Potomac. Does the Government propose to bridge all its waters? If it does, then farewell to all economy, farewell to retrenchment and reform, for the money of the people will be poured out from its Treasury until it is depleted. Let us pause before we make any such appropriation.

It may be said that this is a small thing; that it does not take a great deal of capital per capita to fill the demand; but that is no excuse for it.

My friend from Illinois asked whether this bill had not been killed once. I answer it seemed to be virtually so during the extra session, but now, like the proverbial cat, it seems to have nine lives, and we have to go to work on it again. [Laughter.]

It is strange that a Congress which can legislate for a great country, for fifty millions of people, cannot manage the affairs of a city of a hundred and fifty or a hundred and sixty thousand inhabitants. Yet, it seems to me, we cannot. We have already this morning done what I believe amounts to saddling millions more of the indebtedness of Washington upon a tax-ridden Government for the benefit of this District, and for the purpose of carrying out this form of extravagance. That is the entering-wedge. One might reasonably suppose that when that could get through, anything else could; and I have some fears myself it may be so. I feel the ground beginning to give way under me when I look back to that; but still I have a hope that at some point we will come where we will be satisfied and pause before we make appropriations which are never to benefit our constituents, directly or indirectly. I think the bill ought to be defeated.

Mr. HUNTON. I now ask for the reading of the first section of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed across the Potomac River at or near Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, at such point as he may select, a substantial iron and masonry bridge, with approaches; and the sum of $140,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the construction of said bridge and approaches, the same to be maintained as a free bridge for travel: Provided, That the said Secretary of War shall construct a bridge upon such plan as shall cost no more than the amount herein appropriated, and which cost shall include the construction of a substantial bridge over the canal, and any and all approaches to the said iron bridge; and no part of this appropriation shall be paid out of the Treasury until contracts shall have been entered into with responsible parties, and with good and sufficient sureties to be approved by the Secretary of War, for the construction and completion of said bridge, including the masonry, iron-work, and approaches, at a cost not to exceed $140,000: And provided also, That a draw of sufficient width to permit the free passage of vessels navigating that part of the Potomac River shall be constructed in said bridge, unless said bridge shall be constructed by the side of, or up the river from, the present Aqueduct, and at the same or greater elevation above the water: And provided also, That the sum which may be expended under this act shall be treated and regarded as a part of the general expenses of the District of Columbia, and the United States shall be credited with the amount which it may pay under this act for the erection of said bridge upon its 50 per cent. of the expenses of the District of Columbia, as provided in the act of June 11, 1878, entitled "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia:" Provided further, That the Secretary of War shall, as soon as may be, fix and determine the location of said bridge, and cause a survey of the river to be made at such place of location, determine the length, width, and height of said bridge, and the length of draw, if one is required, and thereupon advertise for plans and price for the construction of such bridge; such advertisement to be inserted in one or more daily newspapers published in Washington, District of Columbia, New York, Detroit, Michigan, and Cleveland, Ohio, for the space of one week.

Mr. WARD. I have an amendment to propose to the first section of the bill, and that is, to insert the words "Philadelphia, Pennsylvania," after "Michigan."

Mr. HUNTON. That is in regard to the advertising?

Mr. WARD. It is.

Mr. HUNTON. I do not object.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois. I move to insert "Chicago, Illinois."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. After "Illinois," I move to insert "Rochester, New York." We have the best bridge-building company in the world at Rochester, New York.

Mr. HUNTON. I hope the gentlemen will not load down this bill with such amendments. It is not right to put in it every one of the cities of the United States. It does not look like a fair treatment to this bill. I do not mean to say such is the design, but it looks like an undue way of loading down the bill.

Mr. FORT. Well, Mr. Speaker, the question comes up right here, ought not this bridge to be built by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, and not by the Secretary of War at all? They, the commissioners, are liable to very severe penalties for disregarding the law, and they are the proper officers to spend their own money. The Secretary of War is under no restrictions whatever. I do not know what restriction is put upon the Secretary of War in this matter. He will do as he pleases about it. Although I will say that we never had a better Secretary of War——

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. FORT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Is it not a fact that not only in this District but outside of the District such works as this have generally been conducted under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of War? Is not the second longest arch in stone that is to be found perhaps in the world a Government work across the Potomac some eight, ten, or twelve miles above here, a work that was supervised by the Secretary of War nearly a quarter of a century ago?

Mr. FORT. Yes; there is no doubt about that, but in bills making appropriations of public money, say for instance the river and harbor bill, it is not customary to place restrictions upon the Secretary of War to say what newspapers he shall advertise in, or what material he shall use, or that he shall get his stone from the Red Stone quarries, or shall buy it from the granite quarries of Maine. For this reason the gentleman's own question suggests why we should require this bridge to be built by the commissioners. My reason is this: The commissioners of the District of Columbia do not want the bridge built at all. They never sent in an estimate of what the bridge would cost or that they wanted to build it, and if they do not want it they need not build it.

It is the first time I believe in the history of the legislation of this country that we have ever found Congress forcing upon the War Department appropriations for any purpose until that Department had sent in its estimate of what the proposed work would cost. When you propose to clean out the channel of a river or to remove its obstructions, the very first thing you do is to get the Engineer Department to make a survey and send in an estimate, and until that estimate is sent in not a dollar of the public money is ever appropriated by Congress for the purpose of making the improvement.

But, Mr. Speaker, we have met this question here. We propose to force upon the Secretary of War the construction of a bridge which the people do not want, which the commissioners do not want, and which the commissioner who resides in Georgetown, and who is one of the rulers of this city himself, does not want, and then to require the Secretary of War to construct a work without estimates and advertise all over the country for bids for labor and for material.

I understand the piers on which the present toll-bridge rests were built by the Government at the cost of several hundred thousand dollars and that they really belong to the United States. I call upon the chairman of the committee to state how this is.

Now, it is high time that we should know how much this bridge is going to cost, and whether we do not already own the piers now there; what the engineers say about it, what their estimate is; for if we require the Secretary of War to build it we should have an estimate. But if we authorize the District commissioners to build a bridge, then we are proceeding correctly to make an appropriation first. We are not called upon to make an appropriation at all until they come and ask for it. I think that all the places named in this bill should be stricken out except Chicago. That city constructs most of the bridges of the country. There is hardly anywhere a bridge put up not constructed in Chicago. Even the iron city of Pittsburgh comes to Chicago to get bridge-builders to build a bridge across one of their rivers right in the corporation of the city of Pittsburgh. There is no use in advertising in any other city except in Chicago. Adopt my colleague's [Mr. ALDRICH] amendment and it is all-sufficient as to advertisement.

Mr. KELLEY. That must be some particular bridge the patent for which is owned by a Chicago company.

Mr. FORT. Ah, the gentleman from Pennsylvania cannot even get a bridge built across the Allegheny or Monongahela or any other river in his State without coming to Chicago to get it done. It is not worth while to advertise in any other than the Chicago papers.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct some errors into which the gentleman from Illinois appears to have fallen. I do not know what warrant or authority he has for stating that the commissioners for the District of Columbia do not desire this bridge to be built. I am equally at a loss as to the source of his information for the statement that the particular commissioner who resides in Georgetown does not want this bridge built. I have the authority of the Committee for the District of Columbia for stating that the commissioners of this district have been before that committee, approve the estimate, and urge the passage of this bill and the construction of this bridge.

Mr. FORT. One moment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the gentleman will wait I will not detain the House a moment.

Mr. FORT. The gentleman was asked for an estimate, and he said he had none—the District commissioners had done nothing.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am coming to that, if the gentlemen will be patient. I do not know what authority the gentleman has for speaking of this as an effort to impose upon the Secretary of War the discharge of an irksome or offensive duty. I have the authority of one of the gentleman's colleagues here on the floor for stating that upon this very day, perhaps, the Secretary of War has expressed his approval of the very work that is contemplated by and provided for in this bill.

Mr. FORT. It is very remarkable that the Secretary of War should express such an opinion, when that officer never does such a thing. It is always left to the Engineer Department.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am not passing judgment on the propriety of the Secretary of War expressing that opinion.

Mr. FORT. The present Secretary of War is as yet hardly warm in his seat, and has made no survey. He is a judicious man, and knows his duty and will do it. And it is strange that he has rushed down to Georgetown and assumed the duties of the Engineer Corps.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I hope the gentleman is not going to make a third speech in my time. I will answer any question he wishes to present.

As to the estimates: I hold in my hand the estimates that have been, I take it, before the Committee for the District of Columbia, made by two reputable engineers, showing what the cost of that bridge is to be. The commissioners, as the chairman of the Committee for the District of Columbia very properly explained, could not have made, they were not required nor would it have been proper for them in the absence of such requirement to make, an estimate for this work. There is no law in existence authorizing the construction of this bridge. The very bill which is under consideration now, if passed, is to be the law which authorizes the bridge. Unless that or a law carrying such authority is passed, it is neither the duty nor within the power of the commissioners of the District of Columbia to make this estimate.

Here is the simple fact; the case may be stated in a moment: There is a bridge that is not owned by this Government that connects Washington with that part of the State of Virginia lying immediately across the river. Charges are made, statements are heard everywhere, which go unchallenged and uncontradicted as to the exorbitant rates to which passengers are subjected on that bridge. That there is a necessity for a bridge there I take it nobody will controvert. Then when you come to the proposition here for its construction it differs but in one particular from the theory upon which every other bridge has been built here, unless it be a bridge owned by a private corporation or railroad company. There has not been a bridge built by the Government, there has not been a bridge bought by the Government, for which the people of the District have been taxed at all; but the cost of the construction in the one case or the purchase-money in the other has all come out of the Federal Treasury. In that respect, and in that respect alone, this proposition differs from all others; for it is provided in this bill that one-half of the cost of the construction of this improvement shall be defrayed and met by the Federal Treasury and the other half by the taxable property of the people of this District.

There, sir, is the shortest statement that can be given of the proposition of this bill. It is one-half more liberal to the Federal Treasury than any similar work that ever has been constructed or purchased on the confines of this District. I do not see where the bill is amenable to the criticisms or objections that have been urged on any side in this debate.

Mr. FORT. Just one word. The gentleman from Kentucky states that the owners of the present bridge are charging exorbitant tolls.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman must not misstate what I said. I did not say so. I said it was charged, and during my service as chairman of the Committee for the District of Columbia that was charged before the committee and never denied.

Mr. FORT. Then the Committee for the District of Columbia should have looked into that question; and if they found that there was an exorbitant toll or charge imposed on the citizens of Virginia or on the citizens of this District, the Committee for the District of Columbia should have brought in a bill at once; and I must presume they would bring in a bill at once regulating that thing, because unquestionably they have jurisdiction and control over the matter, and I presume the committee want to do their duty.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman tell me how Congress has that jurisdiction?

Mr. FORT. If the Committee for the District of Columbia found that exorbitant tolls were charged, they certainly have been remiss in their duty. They would have been better engaged in providing a remedy for that than in preparing a bill for the building of a bridge which the people of the District do not want.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask the gentleman under what provision of the Federal Constitution, under what section or provision of any law known to this House, has Congress the power to regulate the tolls upon a bridge owned by a private corporation?

Mr. FORT. Oh! I hope the gentleman in this day will not question the right. Sir, I answer that it is under that clause in section 8 of article 1 of the Constitution, which says that "Congress shall exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatever over such District not exceeding ten miles square as may be, by cession of particular States and by acceptance of Congress, become the seat of Government of the United States," and I hope the gentleman will not deny the right to regulate all these things.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I would inform the gentleman that this is not a railroad bridge.

Mr. FORT. Another point is that it is owned in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And owned by private gentlemen.

Mr. FORT. There can be no question but what Congress has the right to regulate such charges and say what shall be a reasonable toll or charge on any bridge within its jurisdiction.

Mr. COBB. This bill makes provision for the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River, and at the same time appropriates money. Now, it is said that it is a necessity that this bridge should be constructed. Let us look for a moment into some of the facts that surround the District of Columbia and the people of the District, and we will find that there are other necessities which are much greater than the necessity of building a bridge across the Potomac River. I call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that to-day the District of Columbia and the people of the United States are paying $35,000 a year rent for public school buildings, and at the same time the superintendent of public instruction tells me that these school buildings are, many of them, all but totally unfit for children of the District to be taught in.

Now, if we have to pay $35,000 a year rent for buildings for school purposes in this District, I ask how much money ought to be appropriated for the building of school-houses here? Would it not be well for this House to consider whether we ought not to build school-houses, and whether the necessity for building school-houses for the education of the children of this District is not tenfold greater than the necessity for the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River, when there are already facilities for crossing that river?

It is further insisted that large sums of money should be appropriated for the purpose of improving the streets of this District. The commissioners of the District ask that more than $700,000 be appropriated, one-half of which is to be paid by the people of the District and the other half by the Government of the United States, to improve the streets of this District. That is a necessity which they say must be provided for. I take it that it is a greater necessity to have the streets in the District of Columbia or in the city of Washington put in proper condition than it is to build another bridge across the Potomac River.

As has been well said, in order to accomplish what is needed in this District it is necessary for the people to pay large sums of money. The property-holders are now so oppressed that they feel the burden, notwithstanding we have assumed to pay fifty cents on the dollar of the expenses of this District. And there is to-day an interest-bearing debt hanging over the people of this District which requires the payment of more than $1,100,000 a year, one-half of which is to be paid by the people of the District.

There was a bill passed a few moments ago providing for the adjustment of claims said to be due to individuals for improving the streets and for other public works in the District; and it is estimated that a large sum of money will have to be provided by the people of the District and by the Government of the United States to carry out the provisions of that bill.

Now, had we not better move carefully, and not expend the money of the people of the United States, and especially of the people of the District of Columbia, who are already greatly oppressed, until we see whether there is or is not a necessity for the bridge to be built, which this bill provides for? There may be a necessity for it. But there are other necessities that are ten times more pressing than the necessity for building this bridge, especially when we take into consideration the fact that the people of Virginia, from the gentleman's own district, can cross over the bridges now erected. It is better that for a few years they should pay pretty high tolls than that the children of this District should go uneducated.

I say to you that with the estimates of the taxable property in this District, and the amount of revenue to be raised from the people during the present year, they will not be enabled to have their educational interests cared for as they should be, without borrowing money, or without the Government of the United States coming forward and through the Representatives of the people here appropriating the money of the people of the United States for the purpose of keeping up the public schools of the District.

I say this bill should be defeated. There is no special demand for it. It is wrong in principle and wrong in fact to impose upon the people of this District a burden where it is unnecessary, when necessary burdens are already being heaped upon them. I trust, therefore, the bill will be defeated.

Mr. KELLEY. I have always felt it to be my duty to vote liberal appropriations for this District, and I never have heard the voice of complaint from any constituent of mine for so voting. They regard the city of Washington as the capital of their country, and desire to see it made what it ought to be, a healthful and a beautiful city.

I am ready to vote any amount of money that may be required for improving the river-front of this District, and for filling up the marshes, and thus adding to the beauty of the city and its healthfulness. I am ready to vote any proper amount for the construction of bridges to connect this District with the State of Virginia.

But I cannot fail to remember that the bridge proposed by this bill is an interterritorial bridge, and that the people of the country or the people of the District, either of them or jointly, should not be made to pay the whole cost of a bridge, the great benefit of which is to be for the State of Virginia. I would not saddle upon the State of Virginia an undue proportion of the cost of constructing this bridge. But I do think that it ought to come in as a third party to bear the expense. And I am quite sure that if that condition be imposed, the voice of Virginia will ask for another location for a bridge than right beside an existing bridge. When the people of Virginia shall come to pay for it they will say, "Put this bridge where it will be useful; put it at some distance from any existing bridge so that it will help open up our country and give more of our people easy access to the District."

Therefore, with an earnest desire to promote intercourse between the District and the farms of Virginia, between the people of Virginia and the people of this District, and having no fear of the frowns of my constituents for having voted generously for the improvement of the District, I shall wait and hear what Virginia wants on this subject, and have her back up her opinion by a tender of one-third of the cost of this bridge.

Mr. SAMFORD. There was a statement by the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] of which I, as a member of the Committee for the District of Columbia, am not informed, and therefore I cannot properly say that I propose to correct it. But if there has been any estimate made, as he says there has been made by the District commissioners, and sent to the Committee for the District of Columbia, I hear of it for the first time to-day.

Mr. HUNTON. The gentleman did not say that the commissioners had made estimates, but that estimates had been made by engineers, which estimates I now hold in my hand.

Mr. SAMFORD. I understood the gentleman to say—and I certainly am not mistaken in this—that the commissioners for the District of Columbia have been before the District Committee urging the passage of this bill. Now, I do not remember that the District commissioners ever have been before that committee to make such an application. If they ever have been there for that purpose I never knew it; and certainly they have not been there in the manner provided by law. They should have been there in a formal manner with the estimates which the law for the permanent government of the District requires. As regards the estimates of engineers, to which the gentleman from Virginia has just called my attention, I have this to say, that the law requires the District commissioners to make their estimates upon examinations made by the legally authorized engineers of the department, and not by engineers who may act in any informal and unauthorized manner.

Now, the objection which I urged at the commencement of this discussion has not been answered. That objection is: that these estimates should be made in the manner provided by law, so that we might not, as has been eloquently said by the gentleman from Indiana, saddle upon the citizens of this District taxation for a work which they have not asked, and for which, perhaps, they are not prepared or able to pay.

But when the objection is urged that it has not been asked for, it is said that the wording of the law requires that the commissioners shall furnish estimates only for those bridges authorized by law. When we point out that this bridge has not been authorized by law, it is said that by this bill it is proposed to authorize it, and at the same time to provide for its construction. Now, it seems to me that such a thing was not in the contemplation of the Congress of the United States in passing the laws for the permanent government of the District of Columbia, for I have no doubt that it was thought by the framers of that law that the United States Government would not be called on for any more than one-half.

I do not subscribe to the doctrine, which is so frequently advanced on this floor, that because this is the capital of the nation (to use the language of others, for I never call it a "nation") we should build it up in a style of imperial grandeur, regardless of cost, and at the expense of tax-payers over the land. I grant that it is necessary to build up a capital which shall comport with the dignity of a free and independent republic; but as to spending the money wrung by taxation from an oppressed people for the purpose of building up this city in a style of royal magnificence, I am opposed to it, and shall always be opposed to it. Notwithstanding I am frequently reminded by the remarks of gentlemen on this floor that the true distinguishment of a statesman, these days, is to spend with a prodigal hand the money of the Federal Treasury.

Many gentlemen, in this House, advocate this bill, of more experience than I, and of equal sincerity and patriotism, and I have confidence in their opinion, but I cannot see it as they do, and I am acting for what I believe to be the interest of those who sent me here.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire to say only a word or two in conclusion of this debate before calling the previous question; for I presume the debate has proceeded long enough.

Gentlemen have said here on several occasions that it is the duty of Virginia to participate in building this bridge. I desire to say that the Chain Bridge leading to the State of Virginia was once a toll-bridge, and the Federal Government bought out that bridge and made it a free bridge without the payment of one dollar by the State of Virginia. This I believe was prior to 1861. If the Federal Government did not require Virginia in the days of her wealth and power to contribute to the building of bridges across a stream which belongs exclusively to the Federal Government, why should gentlemen desire now that the State of Virginia in her poverty should be saddled with a portion of the expense of building this bridge? Do not gentlemen who make this objection know that sparsely-settled neighborhoods interested in a bridge cannot contribute to the building of such a bridge, but that the cities to which approach is effected by bridges build those bridges? That is the invariable practice throughout the country.

There is another reason why the Federal Government and the District government should build this bridge exclusively and why they should build it jointly. The property in this District, as we know, (for it has been stated time and again,) belongs to the people of the District and to the Federal Government in nearly equal proportions according to value; and if this city is to be improved and the price of property enhanced, then the Federal Government is benefited as well as the citizens holding private property.

There is another reason; and I do not mean to detain the House by elaborately arguing this question. The Federal Government is interested because this bridge, if built, leads directly to the largest Federal cemetery within my knowledge. I refer to the cemetery at Arlington. On every Decoration Day particularly, as well as on every other day of the year, there are persons visiting that cemetery who are taxed a high price in passing over the Aqueduct Bridge.

Mr. BARBER. The gentleman will allow me to ask him where this bridge is to be located?

Mr. HUNTON. At or near the present Aqueduct Bridge, leaving it discretionary with the Secretary of War to fix the exact location.

Mr. KELLEY. I believe the proprietors of the Aqueduct Bridge are willing to sell at what this House regarded as a reasonable price.

Mr. HUNTON. At what they regard as a reasonable price. That is another question—a question which was very elaborately considered by the committee.

Mr. KELLEY. I understand that this House acquiesced in the price. The Senate differed by some slight percentage.

Mr. HUNTON. The question has never been before the House in any shape.

Mr. KELLEY. Then the action I refer to was had by the House committee.

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir.

Mr. KELLEY. I believe the proprietors of the Aqueduct Bridge ask $100,000 for the property and franchises.

Mr. HUNTON. There has been no such proposition agreed to by the Committee for the District of Columbia.

I beg leave to say another thing. Across the river, and to be approached by this bridge if the bill becomes a law, there is a fort now held and occupied by the Government where supplies and soldiers are sent. For the transportation of these the Government now pays annually several hundred dollars in toll to this Aqueduct Bridge Company. Thus the bridge is necessary to the Government as well as to the citizens of the United States visiting Arlington. I hope, therefore, that there will be no difficulty on the part of the House in passing the bill.

I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the House is now acting as in Committee of the Whole. The first question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. VAN VOORHIS,] to insert after the words "Chicago, Illinois," the words "Rochester, New York."

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HUNTON. Did I understand the Chair to rule that the previous question did not apply in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question does apply in the House.

Mr. HUNTON. Then I demand the yeas and nays on the bill and pending amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question first recurs on the amendment of the committee to strike out the second and third sections, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That if the Alexandria Canal Railroad and Bridge Company will lease to the United States their bridge over the Potomac River at Georgetown for so long as said bridge shall be maintained upon the terms, conditions, and price as hereinafter specified, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to enter into such lease in behalf of the United States, and refrain from erecting a bridge as in the first section of this act provided. Said lease must contain the following provisions and conditions: the rent, as specified at —— thousand dollars per annum, payable quarterly by the United States, less any deductions for not complying with the terms of said lease as therein provided; that said lease shall continue as long as said bridge shall be kept up for use, but the lessee may at its option declare said lease forfeited in case the lessor fails for a period of thirty days after notice to keep said bridge in a safe and proper condition for public travel; that if said bridge at any time becomes unsafe for public travel, on notice from the commissioners of the District of Columbia, the rent under said lease shall cease, and not recommence until said bridge shall be made safe for public travel, and notice thereof given to said commissioners, and the amount from any suspension of rent to be deducted from the rent thereafter to become due; that said bridge company shall not, during the continuance of said lease, use upon said bridge structure any locomotive or steam-propelling power; that during the continuance of said lease the use of said bridge shall be free to the public and the Government.

SEC. 3. That to enable the United States to fulfill such lease, if made, the sum of —— dollars is hereby appropriated yearly, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for paying such of said rent as may become due, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay the same; and the sums thus paid shall be treated and held as a part of the general expenses of the District of Columbia; and the United States shall be credited with the amount which it shall pay under this act upon its 50 per cent. of the expenses of said District of Columbia as provided in the act of June 11, 1878, entitled "An act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill; and there were—ayes 76, noes 43.

Mr. BRAGG and Mr. MCMILLIN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 114, nays 70, not voting 107; as follows:

On motion of Mr. BLACKBURN, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HUNTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 128) for the relief of Edward Shields and others;

An act (S. No. 317) for the relief of Captain J. B. Campbell; and

An act (S. No. 468) for the relief of John W. Cheeks.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 2790) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint a deputy collector at Seaford, Sussex County, Delaware, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WILBER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 1307) to establish a land district in the Territory of Dakota, and locating the office at Grand Forks.

DISTRICT BUSINESS.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. Speaker, there are only two other matters in the District business, which will not require the consumption of any time, and I hope they will be completed before the adjournment.

UNION DEPOT, WASHINGTON.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 3047) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to designate a proper site for a union railroad depot in the city of Washington, and for other purposes, with amendments.

The bill, which was read, authorizes the commissioners of the District of Columbia to designate a suitable site for a union railroad depot for all the railroad companies whose tracks enter or terminate in said city, at some central point, having just reference to the convenience of access by said companies and the people, sojourners, and visitors of said city, and to all the public interests involved, and report their doings in the premises to the next Congress, on the first day of the first session thereof, with a bill containing such further provisions as they may deem best calculated to give effect to the purpose of requiring all said railroads to use said depot in common, and vacate all other depots, and remove all tracks not necessary for such use.

The amendments are as follows:

First. Section 1, line 10, after the word "premises," strike out to and including the word "thereof," in line 11, and insert the following:

"To Congress within thirty days after the passage of this act."

Second. Page 2, at the end of line 15, insert as follows:

"Provided, That such union depot shall be provided by such railroads free of expense to the Government of the United States or the District of Columbia."

Mr. KLOTZ. I want to ask the gentleman from Delaware whether this is to provide for the commissioners naming a site and directing the matter hereafter to be submitted to Congress?

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. Go ahead; that is right. [Laughter.]

Mr. KLOTZ. Is that correct?

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. Yes.

I now demand the previous question.

Mr. DUNNELL. I trust the gentleman will not call the previous question until he has stated to the House the necessity for this measure; because, Mr. Speaker, it is very easy to see this bill is one that only precedes another which cannot be avoided without very great expense to the Government.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. All this bill contemplates is this: there has been a demand on the part of the people of this District for a change in the railroad accommodations here. It is claimed by many people hat the railroad termini in this District are nuisances, and that there should be here, as in almost every other city in the United States, the same plan adopted by which there should be established what is known as a union depot.

The District commissioners have asked Congress to authorize them to designate some point which would be convenient for the establishment of such a union depot, and the Committee for the District of Columbia in considering this subject have thought it proper that the Government of the United States, as well as the government of the District of Columbia, should be protected against the incurring of any expenses in designating that site. That is all this bill is for, to authorize the District commissioners to select some suitable site for such a union depot, and to report the facts to Congress.

Mr. DUNNELL. It does not occur to me the District of Columbia is particularly suffering from the location of the two depots in this city. I can see no reason for this legislation. The commissioners of this District are urged up to this matter undoubtedly by a set of real-estate speculators. These men are very anxious to have somewhat to do in the selection of such a site. Look the matter, Mr. Speaker, squarely in the face. What demand exists in this city to-day for a union depot? After we have legislated is it in our power to force these roads into a union depot? Is it in our power to compel them to enter into a union depot? Can we compel these railroads to build a union depot and use it? I do not understand that we can.

This legislation is in keeping with a good deal of the legislation that we are asked to pass here in this House. I have voted almost continuously for nine years in the interest of the District of Columbia. I have hardly till this day voted against a proposition coming from the Committee for the District of Columbia. But we voted $140,000 to-day. We are constantly being asked to vote tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands to this District. If we are a reform Congress let us reform in good faith.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. We do not ask Congress to vote one cent in this bill.

Mr. DUNNELL. I say we cannot take this step without taking another, and that other step will cost money.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. This does not bind Congress to take any further steps.

Mr. DUNNELL. It does not bind Congress, but the gentleman knows the power of precedents. He ought to know how much one bill has to do with another that is in the rear and forthcoming.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. Oh, "sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." [Laughter.]

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman from Delaware allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. Certainly.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to know of the gentleman from Delaware if these railway companies, the Baltimore and Potomac and the Baltimore and Ohio, have not already in this District certain vested rights, if the effect of this bill is not to destroy those vested rights, and if you will not have to make compensation under the Constitution of the United States whether you will or no?

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. This bill, Mr. Speaker, has nothing to do with those vested rights. As I said to the gentleman from Minnesota, I will make the same reply to the gentleman from North Carolina, that when future legislation looking directly to the establishment of this depot is brought into the House then it will be for each member of the House to determine that question for himself, as I shall endeavor to do for myself. I call for the previous question.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to ask the gentleman one question.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WAIT. I move the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WARNER. Before that question is put I ask the unanimous consent—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I appeal to the gentleman from Connecticut to withdraw his motion. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. COX in the chair.] Pending the motion to adjourn the Chair desires to submit certain requests.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HILL, for three days, on account of important business;

To Mr. FINLEY, for two weeks, on account of important business;

To Mr. FORSYTHE, for six days;

To Mr. KEIFER, for three days, on account of important business;

To Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania, until the 27th instant, on account of a death in his family;

To Mr. COFFROTH, indefinitely, on account of important business; and

To Mr. GARFIELD, for one day.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair also submits the following requests:

Of Mr. JOHNSTON, for leave to withdraw from the files of the House, the papers in the case of W. P. Burwell, there being no adverse report thereon.

Of Mr. URNER, in the case of John H. McChesney, there being no adverse report thereon.

Of Mr. BLACKBURN, in the case of Bidow & Wilson, there being no adverse report thereon.

Mr. CONGER. I suggest to the Chair that these three requests must be referred, under the rules, to the committees having charge of the several cases.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk informs the Chair that there is no adverse report on these cases.

Mr. CONGER. I know that, but the rule requires the reference of the applications to the committees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rule does not require the reference when no adverse report has been made. The Chair overrules the point of order.

There being no objection, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the three cases above stated.

PENSIONS FOR MEXICAN AND OTHER WARS.

Mr. COFFROTH. Under authority of the House, formerly granted, I submit from the Committee on Invalid Pensions a report to accompany the bill of the House (H. R. No. 3257) granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Mexican and other wars therein named.

The report was ordered to be printed, and was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion that the House adjourn was then agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

By Mr. VANCE: A bill to continue the improvement of the French Broad River in North Carolina—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WELLBORN: Memorial of the Choctaw Nation of Indians, communicated through the governor of said nation, asking for the passage of the bill to extend the jurisdiction of the Federal courts for the northern district of Texas over the Choctaw Nation, and for a provision requiring a term of the court at Denison, Texas—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WELLS: The petition of the National Cotton Exchange, for the amendment of the census laws, so that the Superintendent of the Census may be authorized to publish in advance the acreage and production of cotton in each county and State—to the Committee on the Census.

By Mr. WHITEAKER: Resolutions of the Board of Trade of Portland, Oregon, asking an appropriation of $100,000 for the improve- of the Lower Columbia River—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, papers relating to the claim of R. G. Combe for pay for labor performed in the construction of the United States revenue vessel Thomas Corwin, at Astoria, Oregon—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, papers relating to the claim of the city of Astoria, Oregon, for pay for improving certain streets and the United States custom-house and post-office in said city—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. WILBER: The petition of Julia Casey, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of citizens of Guilford, New York, for circulating the proceedings of Congress in newspapers, furnished free, to every family in the United States—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. CHARLES G. WILLIAMS: The petition of S. C. Carr and 30 others, of Rock County, Wisconsin, for the passage of laws relieving them from the oppression of railroad monopolies—to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

Also, the petition of S. C. Carr and 31 others, citizens of Rock County, Wisconsin, that manufacturers and vendors of patents be alone held responsible for infringements of patents—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. WILLIS: The petition of the heirs of K. Miller, mother of Leonard Albert, deceased, for arrears of pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of Joseph F. Hawley, for additional pay as an officer in the United States Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WALTER A. WOOD: The petition of Timothy Quinn, late major of the First New York Cavalry, for pay for a horse lost while in the service of the United States—to the same committee.

By Mr. THOMAS L. YOUNG: The petitions of Henry Hayes and of Eliza Whitmore, for pensions—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 20, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Adjutant-General and accompanying plans and estimates for permanent buildings, &c., to complete the principal depot of the general recruiting service at David's Island, New York Harbor, and plans and estimates for certain additional buildings at the sub-depot at Columbus Barracks, Ohio; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FERRY presented the petition of D. E. Millard and others, citizens of Michigan, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MORRILL presented the petition of the Right Worthy Grand Lodge of the Good Templars of the United States, signed by the officers, representing sixty-six grand lodges and about forty thousand members, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PLATT presented the petition of the Grand Lodge of Good Templars of the State of Connecticut, signed by the officers, representing over four thousand members, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KIRKWOOD presented the petition of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of the State of Iowa, officially signed, representing between three thousand and four thousand members, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of the Women's National Christian Union, signed by Frances E. Willard, president, and Mary A. Woodbridge, secretary, representing four hundred and seven State and local unions and twenty-nine thousand five hundred and ninety-nine members, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOAR. I also present the petition of George O. Crocker and 78 others, ship-masters, ship-owners, and other citizens of Massachusetts, praying for the passage of a law which shall provide for the further distribution of the Geneva award received by the United States in 1873, and a large portion of which is yet withheld. I move that this petition be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I also present the petition of William T. Soule, mayor of New Bedford, many members of the city council of that city, and 230 other citizens, praying—and I beg the attention of the Senator from Vermont, a member of the Judiciary Committee—for prompt legislation and a speedy decision on the question of the distribution of the Geneva award.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I train under a much better authority than that of the Senator from Massachusetts or the Senator from Vermont, as to the proceedings of the Committee on the Judiciary. I do not see my honorable friend from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] who manages our affairs, present. I beg to state to my friend from Massachusetts and to everybody else that the Judiciary Committee has hitherto endeavored and will continue to endeavor (I think I am safe in speaking for the chairman,) to do its whole duty about everything that is sent to it. But it cannot do everything at once, and in a matter of such great importance as this, where everybody seems to have a different opinion from everybody else, it cannot be expected that we should have the divine gift of coming to an instantaneous conclusion.

Mr. HOAR. Is there any prospect that the committee ever will come to such an instantaneous conclusion?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Senators will ascertain that when we come to make our report.

Mr. PENDLETON presented the petition of R. Thomas and 26 others, soldiers in the late war, and citizens of Guernsey County, Ohio, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 2480) for the relief of the soldiers and sailors who served in the Army and Navy of the United States in the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, and to restore to them equal rights with the holders of Government bonds; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. RANDOLPH presented the petition of the Grand Temple of Honor and Temperance of the State of New Jersey, officially signed, representing a membership of two hundred, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KERNAN presented the petition of John Kelly and others, citizens of New York, praying for the passage of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 49) in relation to United States Treasury notes; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KERNAN. I also present a like petition from Alexander Hamilton and others, citizens of New York, and a like petition from John C. Cook and others, citizens of New York. I move that these petitions lie upon the table, the joint resolution having been reported to the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KERNAN presented the petition of Mrs. Smith E. G. Rawson, of Saratoga Springs, New York, widow of the late Smith E. G. Rawson, praying the extension of a patent for a surgical appliance; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. JOHNSTON presented the petition of the Grand Division of Sons of Temperance of the State of Virginia, officially signed, representing, with the State Temperance Society, fourteen hundred members, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WITHERS presented the petition of the Grand Lodge of Good Templars of the State of Virginia, officially signed, representing five thousand members, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BAYARD presented the petition of James H. Ray and 36 others, citizens of Newark, Delaware, praying for the withdrawal of the legal-tender power from United States Treasury notes; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, presented the petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the State of Illinois, signed by Frances E. Willard, president, and Helen M. Stocking, secretary, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of John B. Eaman, of Chicago, Illinois, late of Company L, Second Illinois Light Artillery, praying to be allowed the difference between the value of greenbacks and gold at the time he received his pay, with 6 per cent. interest compounded semi-annually; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. EATON presented the petition of the Grand Temple of Honor and Temperance of the State of Connecticut, officially signed, representing twelve hundred members, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MORGAN. I present the memorial of John Dampman and 369 others, citizens of Philadelphia, remonstrating against any legislation by Congress having for its object either the curtailing of the quantity or the lessening of the legal-tender quality or the displacement, by bank-notes or any kind of promises, of legal-tender United States Treasury notes or greenbacks now in circulation or issued. I will remark that this memorial has been sent to me by persons whom I do not know, and with whom I have had no correspondence at all.

It is a very extensive memorial and seems to be signed by the workingmen and business men, manufacturers and laborers of Philadelphia. I move that it lie on the table, and that the body of the memorial be printed in the RECORD, without the names.

The motion was agreed to.

The memorial is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The undersigned, citizens and residents of the city of Philadelphia and State of Pennsylvania, do most earnestly protest and remonstrate against any legislation or action by Congress having for its object either the curtailing of the quantity, the lessening of the legal-tender quality, or the displacement by bank-notes or any kind of promises, of the legal-tender United States Treasury notes or greenbacks now in circulation or issued.

Mr. HAMLIN presented the petition of the Grand Lodge of Good Templars of the State of Maine, officially signed, representing seventeen thousand members, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HAMLIN. I also present the petition of William Signer and others, and the petition of F. H. Jorden and a large number of others, citizens of Maine, who are directly interested in the distribution of the Geneva award fund. These petitions are similar to those which have been heretofore presented. I move their reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY presented the petition of the Grand Division of the Sons of Temperance of the State of Connecticut, signed by the officers, representing fourteen hundred members, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WINDOM. I present the petition of John C. Hunter and about 500 other citizens of the Red River Valley, Minnesota, representing that the Red River of the North is part of a great water system of the Northwest, embracing over two thousand miles of navigable water through a country capable of producing one hundred million bushels of wheat annually; that a great and rapidly increasing commerce is springing up on that river between the United States and British North America; that the successful navigation of the river is greatly impeded by Goose Rapids; that Covernment surveys have demonstrated that those rapids can be practically overcome and the navigation of the river rendered permanent at a comparatively small expense, by the construction of a lock and dam; and that the improvement of the river is a public necessity of vast importance to the farming and commercial interests of the Northwest, and they pray for an appropriation for that purpose. I desire to say that I am personally acquainted with the facts in reference to the improvement asked for, and that I believe it to be of the utmost importance. I respectfully ask the attention of the Committee on Commerce to this petition, to whom I move that it be referred.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BALDWIN presented the petition of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of the State of Michigan, officially signed, representing a membership of seventy-six hundred and seventy-eight, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LOGAN. I present a petition signed by many soldiers of Whiteside County, Illinois, praying for the passage of the bill introduced in the other House by General WEAVER to pay to the soldiers the difference between gold and greenbacks at the time of their payment for services during the late war. In presenting this petition I desire simply to say that, of all the pieces of demogogy that have ever been presented to Congress, that bill I think exceeds anything else. I say this for the benefit of the soldiers who are being deceived into signing petitions of this character. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN presented the petition of the Grand Lodge of Good Templars of Illinois, officially signed, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of S. A. Cook, president, and other officers and members of the Woman's Anti-Polygamy Society of Utah Territory, praying for the expulsion of GEORGE Q. CANNON, Delegate from that Territory, from his seat in Congress; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of L. D. White and others, citizens of Illinois, praying for the passage of a law for the reduction of the specific duty on sheet-zinc; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of George W. Parrott and others, soldiers of the late war and citizens of Kentucky; the petition of William Moore and others, citizens of Illinois; the petition of George W. Rice and others, citizens of Ohio, and the petition of Samuel Hayes and several hundred others, citizens of Illinois and soldiers in the late war, praying for the passage of a law for the equalization of bounties; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of John A. Porter and others, soldiers who served in the Black Hawk War, praying for the passage of a law granting a pension to soldiers of that war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BURNSIDE presented the petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the State of Maine, signed by the officers, representing eight hundred and fifty members, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented additional papers relative to the case of Major William M. Maynadier; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, to accompany the bill (S. No. 1029) for the relief of Major William M. Maynadier, paymaster United States Army.

Mr. BLAIR presented the petition of the Cadets of Temperance of the State of Virginia, officially signed, representing four thousand members, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GROOME presented a memorial of L. Marshall Haines and 28 other honorably discharged soldiers in the Union Army during the late war, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) providing for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ROLLINS presented additional papers in the case of Joseph L. Stevens, postmaster at Manchester, New Hampshire, praying for the passage of a law relieving him from liability for the value of certain postage-stamps alleged to have been stolen from his office in 1877; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MAXEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of William B. Guthrey, praying for relief from disabilities incurred by reason of being reported absent from his company without leave, to report it back without prejudice. In connection with this report I beg to call the attention of the Senator from Alabama to the fact that in a letter addressed to me, I having charge of the case, from the Adjutant-General, dated the 9th instant, he says:

It is not thought that his petition is one requiring the action of Congress. If he will present reliable testimony to this office substantiating the averments of the petition, and this testimony can in any manner be corroborated by the record, the charge of absence without leave may be removed.

As the petitioner's remedy may be complete by application to the War Department, the committee ask to be discharged without prejudice to the petition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The committee will be discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. GROOME, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 680) granting an increase of pension to H. Binnamon, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 870) granting a pension to Louis Christopher Tiedemann, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 377) for the relief of Robert Ewing, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PLUMB. Some days since, by direction of the Committee on Public Lands, I reported with certain amendments the bill (S. No. 19) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain and certify the amount of land located with military warrants in the States described therein, and for other purposes, and in behalf of the committee asked leave to present a report at some future day. I now present a written report, and ask that it may be printed, to accompany the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of M. McCollum, of the State of New York, praying an amendment of the pension laws authorizing a soldier who has received a pension for the loss of a limb to receive a further pension for other wounds, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of George A. R. Raum, late first lieutenant commanding Company B, Second Louisiana Volunteers, praying to be granted an increase of pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the memorial.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 335) granting a pension to Simeon Crain, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BOOTH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 645) to authorize Martin V. Nichols to establish and maintain a ferry across the Missouri River at Brulé City, Dakota Territory, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Territories; which was agreed to.

MILLERS' INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION.

Mr. BAYARD. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance to report back without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 3518) to authorize the importation of articles for exhibition at the millers' international exhibition, to be held at Cincinnati in 1880, free of duty. I ask the Senate to consider and pass the bill now. It is the same bill in words which was passed by the Senate a week ago. That bill went to the House and, as I am told, lies there upon the Speaker's table. It is important that a bill for this purpose should be passed at once, if passed at all, because this international exhibition of milling machinery is to be held in the month of June, and the bill should be passed immediately in order that the machinery may be admitted free of duty.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. LOGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1070) granting a pension to Jacob H. Eppler; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1071) granting a pension to George Wylie; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1072) granting a pension to Arthur W. Irving; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McMILLAN (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1073) for the relief of the assignees of John Link, S. J. Harper, Aaron Link, David Evens, and Thomas Loveless; which was read twice by its title, and, with the papers on file relating to the case, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1074) to authorize the appointment of a captain and assistant quartermaster, United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1075) to authorize Dr. Daniel M. Appel, of the United States Army, to receive pay for discharging the duties of physician to the Mescalero Apache Indian agency, New Mexico; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WINDOM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1076) for the relief of William S. Grant; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FERRY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1077) granting a pension to William J. Elgie; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1078) to grant increase of pensions in certain cases; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. FERRY. I ask that the bill be read at length.

The bill was read the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Pensions, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after June 4, 1878, all persons entitled by law to a less pension than hereinafter specified, who, while in the military or naval service of the United States, and in line of duty, since March 4, 1861, shall have lost an arm at or above the elbow, or a leg at or above the knee, shall be entitled to a pension of $36 per month; and all persons who, under like circumstances, shall have lost a leg below the knee, or an arm below the elbow, shall be entitled to a pension of $30 per month; and all persons who, under like circumstances, shall have lost one hand and one foot, shall be entitled to a pension of $45 per month.

Mr. HAMLIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1079) regulating the times and places for holding the district courts of the United States for the district of Maine; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1080) for the relief of Bayse N. Westcott; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1081) for the relief of James McGraw; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. KERNAN (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1082) for the relief of Smith E. G. Rawson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1083) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Denver, Colorado; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1084) granting arrears of pension to the heirs of Captain J. H. Dent, United States Navy, and his wife; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PADDOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1085) to equalize homesteads; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1086) for the relief of settlers upon school-lands in Washington Territory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PLATT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1087) for the relief of John F. Clancey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PENSACOLA NAVY-YARD.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy communicate to the Senate whether or not the interests of the country and the naval service require that the Pensacola navy-yard shall be put in a state of efficiency; and, if so, what sum of money is necessary for that purpose, and what improvements are necessary to be made there in order to restore said yard to its former condition.

MASONIC BANK OF PITTSBURGH.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up House bill No. 2053, which was reported from the Finance Committee.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. At the expiration of the morning hour on Thursday last there was a bill under consideration, which I supposed would come up naturally as unfinished business in the morning hour.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has not yet expired.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is true; but the bill to which I refer was considered in the morning hour and was left as unfinished business, because when the morning hour expired it was laid aside to enable the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to address the Senate on a resolution submitted by him.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business only attaches after the morning hour.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I beg pardon. I understood the Senator from Pennsylvania to call up a bill.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. So I did; but I asked unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent in the morning hour to consider the bill which he has indicated.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. It will only take a few minutes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This bill is favorably reported from the Committee on Finance, without amendment. Is there objection to its consideration?

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2053) to authorize the assistant treasurer of the United States at New York to waive enforcement of section 3477 of the Revised Statutes so far as the same affects certain drafts upon him now held by the Masonic Bank of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I did not object to the consideration of the bill, but I should like to ask what amount is involved.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. In answer to the question of the Senator from West Virginia, I will state that the entire amount involved is $176.56. The chairman of the Finance Committee [Mr. BAYARD] reported the bill, and can explain it more fully than I can.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Finance whether there is any possibility of future liability on the part of the Government. That ought to be guarded against. Suppose the person to whom the check was made payable should come in afterward and claim that something was wrong about it.

Mr. BAYARD. The amount involved is very trivial. There were three small checks. The question was, under the existing law, whether a letter of attorney authorizing the indorsement of those checks was dated at the proper time or no. The Secretary of the Treasury says there had been informality in that respect. The committee examined the case, heard the reasons——

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The point of my inquiry is whether there is any possibility about there being a future claim made upon the Government by the persons to whom the check was made payable?

Mr. BAYARD. Not at all. The bill simply permits action, what would be called in court action nunc pro tunc, to be taken upon the acknowledgment of a letter of attorney. There is no question of the validity of the transfer or the amount that is due.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOLDIERS' MONUMENT AT MUNCY, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I ask the consent of the Senate to take up Senate bill No. 631.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is favorably reported from the Committee on Military Affairs without amendment. Is there objection to its present consideration?

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 631) donating six condemned cannon and cannon-balls to Post No. 66, Grand Army of the Republic, of Muncy, Pennsylvania, for monumental purposes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNITED STATES NOTES AS A LEGAL TENDER.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to give notice that to-morrow, after the morning business shall have been concluded, I shall call up the joint resolution (S. R. No. 49) in relation to United States notes, in order to give opportunity for debate. I understand that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] desires to submit some remarks upon it.

Mr. BECK. As the Senator from Iowa has said, I desire to-morrow, at the close of the morning hour, when the joint resolution is called up, being one of the majority of the committee who reported adversely to its passage, to state the reasons why I think the resolution ought not to pass. I shall ask the Senate to hear me at the close of the morning hour to-morrow.

HARLOW L. STREET.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask permission of the Senate to call up Senate bill No. 747, for the relief of Harlow L. Street.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 11, after the word "pay," to insert the words "or allowances;" so as to make the bill read:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint Harlow L. Street, late first lieutenant First Cavalry, a first lieutenant of cavalry in the Army of the United States, with his former rank and date of commission; and that he, the said Harlow L. Street, shall be assigned to the first vacancy of his grade occurring in the cavalry arm of the service: Provided, That said Harlow L. Street shall receive no further pay or allowances for the time he was out of service, so that he shall only receive pay from the date of appointment under this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. THURMAN. I will thank the Senator who has this bill in charge to tell us in ten words how this gentleman came to be out of the service, and whether it is proposed to put him back with the same number that he had when he left the service.

Mr. LOGAN. Not at all, sir. I will state for the information of the Senate that there is a long printed report which shows the whole case.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not ask for the reading of that.

Mr. LOGAN. I will state briefly the case. Under a law of 1866, putting certain officers upon the supernumerary list, it was provided that the commanding officer of the post or department should recommend certain persons to be placed upon that list. This gentleman was recommended by mistake, or at least, as appears, he was recommended by an officer who signed as commander of the post, when, in fact, this officer himself was the commander of the post. On an examination of the case it was apparent that his muster-out was certainly not in accordance with the law. The bill provides that he may be reinstated, that is to say, that he may be reappointed by the President and the Senate to the same grade that he held at the time he was placed upon the list of supernumeraries, to fill any vacancy that may occur in the cavalry arm of the service of that grade, but not to give him pay or allowances, or to advance him.

Mr. THURMAN. I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. That is the case, precisely.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT GRAND LODGE OF ODD FELLOWS.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask to take up Senate bill No. 920, reported yesterday from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 920) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of the District of Columbia," approved June 12, 1860.

Mr. WITHERS. I now move that the bill be indefinitely postponed, in order that House bill No. 3108, which is identical in character, may be substituted.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WITHERS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3108) amending the charter of the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of the District of Columbia, discharging the committee from its consideration for that purpose.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which proposes to authorize the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of the District of Columbia to negotiate a loan or loans, not to exceed $50,000, at a rate of interest not exceeding 6 per cent. per annum, and to secure the payment thereof by a mortgage or deed of trust on certain grounds in the city of Washington, designated as lot No. 11, and part of lot No. 10, in square No. 457, together with the buildings thereon, known as Odd Fellows' Hall, the proceeds to be applied to the liquidation of an existing debt on the property, in accordance with regulations heretofore prescribed by the grand lodge for the management thereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY STANLEY WETMORE.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Just before we went into executive session yesterday Senate bill No. 315 was called up. I ask that it be taken up and disposed of now.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 315) granting a pension to Henry Stanley Wetmore.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "Navy," to strike out the following words:

And that the said Wetmore be allowed a pension at the rate of $25 per month, commencing from the date of his honorable discharge from the United States naval service.

So as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Henry Stanley Wetmore, late volunteer lieutenant United States Navy, on account of injuries received by him while in the service and line of duty during the late war of the rebellion.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. KIRKWOOD January 12:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 315) granting a pension to Henry Stanley Wetmore, have examined the same and the evidence therewith connected, and report:

The claimant, October 1, 1862, was appointed mate for duty in the Mississippi squadron, was promoted to acting ensign December 5, 1862, was appointed acting master December 2, 1863, was promoted to acting volunteer lieutenant for gallant and meritorious services, agreeable to recommendation of Rear-Admiral Porter, July 9, 1864, and continued in the service until December 29, 1865, when he was honorably discharged.

July 28, 1864, being then on duty at Cincinnati, Ohio, he was ordered by Rear-Admiral Porter to report to him for duty at Perth Amboy, New Jersey; August 4, 1864, he procured a ticket at the railroad office in Cincinnati to proceed to Perth Amboy in obedience to said order. While in the baggage-room of the railroad company endeavoring to procure a check for his baggage, he had a quarrel with the officer of the railroad company, whose duty it was to check the baggage, which resulted in the baggage-master striking the claimant a blow on the head with a hatchet. The blow resulted in the disability for which claimant asks a pension.

A board of examining surgeons, under date of January 27, 1879, report that claimant is totally disabled from obtaining his subsistence by manual labor by reason of said injury to his head, and that said injury is permanent. He made application to the Pension Bureau for a pension, and claim was rejected on the ground "that the injury for which pension is claimed was not contracted in the line of duty."

The only question in the case is whether the cause assigned by the Commissioner of Pensions for rejecting the claim is correct, or, in other words, whether the injury resulting in claimant's disability was received while in the line of duty.

The testimony touching the quarrel about checking claimant's baggage is to some extent conflicting; the claimant and a friend who was in his company at the time, and saw the transaction, throwing the blame entirely on the check-master, while the check-master and two or three other employés of the railroad company give evidence tending to show that claimant was partly in fault. But, taking all the testimony together, it is clear there was nothing in the conduct of the claimant to justify an assault upon him with a deadly weapon such as the check-master used, or the manner in which he used it, and the legal proceedings that grew out of the occurrence greatly strengthen this view of the case. The check-master was prosecuted for assault and battery on claimant and pleaded guilty to the charge. The claimant prosecuted a civil suit against the railroad company for damages on account of the injury received, and upon trial the jury awarded him a verdict of $7,000. The judgment on the verdict was set aside by the supreme court of the State for error in the ruling of the court below as to the liability of the railroad company for the conduct of its employés; but the findings of the jury show clearly their estimate of the merits of the quarrel between the claimant and the check-master.

Your committee are of the opinion that the injury resulting in claimant's disability was received by him in the line of duty. They recommend that the bill be amended by striking out all after the word "Navy," in line 6, up to and including the word "service," in line 9, and that the bill so amended be passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If the bill is to lead to discussion the Chair must announce the close of the morning hour. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the fact that in the Forty-third Congress a bill was reported to place this person on the naval list. Was favorable action had on that measure?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Yes; the bill passed the Senate and went to the House, but failed there for want of time.

Mr. COCKRELL. But no favorable action was had by Congress?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. No.

Mr. COCKRELL. This person never was placed on the list?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. No, he never was placed on the list.

Mr. COCKRELL. The only question in the whole case is, simply, whether at the time he received the injuries he was in the service and in the line of duty. I had examined the report before the case was called up, and I still have some doubts in regard to the question whether he was really in the line of duty at the time the injuries were received. I understand that the Committee on Pensions have adopted the rule, which has been adopted by the Commissioner of Pensions, that the person must have been in the service and in the line of duty when the disability occurred, which are the words of the statute. I presume that the committee have given this case full attention, and if they are still of the impression that this person was, at the time the injuries were received, in the line of duty I have nothing further to say, as they have more opportunities for examining that question than I have, although I think it very doubtful, in my own mind, whether the precedent ought to be established.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1381) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2328) to provide for the settlement of all outstanding claims against the District of Columbia, and conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear the same, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 1307) to establish a land district in the Territory of Dakota, and locating the office at Grand Forks; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

WATER SHOPS POND AT SPRINGFIELD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. McPHERSON. I call for the unfinished business.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator would permit me a moment, I should like to have the Senate act upon House bill No. 55. If there is any debate I shall not press it now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts asks the Senate to consider at this time the bill (H. R. No. 55) granting a right of way across Water Shops Pond, in Springfield, Massachusetts, to the Springfield and New London Railroad Company.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NEBRASKA BOUNDARY-LINE.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I have the consent of the Senator who has the special order of the day in charge to call up the bill (S. No. 550) to extend the northern boundary of the State of Nebraska.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask for the regular order. I do not like to antagonize any gentleman.

Mr. SAUNDERS. This probably will not take three minutes; certainly not five. If it takes more than that time, I shall withdraw it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Well, I give notice that I shall call for the regular order after the bill of the Senator from Nebraska is disposed of.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska to permit this bill to lie over until I have an opportunity of looking at it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. If the Senator is not satisfied, I will state that the bill was unanimously recommended by the Committee on Territories, with the amendment now proposed. There is no objection to it by any one. It was a unanimous report. The bill merely changes the line.

Mr. McMILLAN. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. SAUNDERS. It merely extends the line between the Territory of Dakota and the State of Nebraska, a thing which would probably have been done when the State was admitted, only they did not know at the time where the rivers ran.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Territories was read, being to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the northern boundary of the State of Nebraska shall be, and hereby is, extended so as to include all that portion of the Territory of Dakota lying south of the forty-third parallel of north latitude, and east of the Keyapaha River and west of the main channel of the Missouri River; and when the Indian title to the lands thus described shall be extinguished, the jurisdiction over said lands shall be, and hereby is, ceded to the State of Nebraska, and the northern boundary of the State shall be, and hereby is, extended to said forty-third parallel, as fully and effectually as if said lands had been included in the boundaries of said State at the time of its admission to the Union; reserving to the United States the original right of soil in said lands and of disposing of the same: Provided, That this act, so far as jurisdiction is concerned, shall not take effect until the President shall, by proclamation, declare that the Indian title to said lands has been extinguished; nor shall it take effect until the State of Nebraska shall have assented to the provisions of this act.

Mr. McMILLAN. I shall be compelled to ask the Senator from Nebraska to permit this bill to lie over that I may have an opportunity to examine it. It is a matter of too much importance to be acted on hastily.

Mr. McPHERSON. Then I call for the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will take this occasion to lay before the Senate some House bills for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (H. R. No. 1381) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2328) to provide for the settlement of all outstanding claims against the District of Columbia, and conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear the same, and for other purposes.

TRANSPORTATION OF ANIMALS.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill (S. No. 206) relative to the transportation of animals.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Mr. President, section 4389 was amended at my instance yesterday, and assented to by the Senator from New Jersey, so as to read in these words:

The penalty created by this act shall be recovered by civil action in the name of the United States.

Inasmuch as in the Revised Statutes this bill, if passed, goes in by sections the wording ought to be "the penalty created by section 4388." I move to strike out "this act" and insert "section 4388."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment, commencing in the fifty-sixth line, after the word "water," to insert "space and opportunity to rest," moved by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. McPHERSON. I ask that that amendment be laid aside for the moment until the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] presents amendments to other portions of the bill, as I should like to answer the objections all at one time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That may be done by consent. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. THURMAN. I believe I am entitled to the floor, as I gave way yesterday for the Senate to go into executive session; but I do not propose to continue the remarks which I was making then at any length.

I now move to strike out of the amended section 4390, on page 5, beginning on line 98 with the word "Any," all the paragraph, ending with the word "sections," in line 107, both words inclusive.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the matter proposed to be stricken out.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5 it is proposed to strike out all from the word "Any," in line 98, down to and including the word "sections," in line 107, as follows:

Any person or corporation entitled to a lien under section 4387 may enforce the same by a petition filed in the district court holden within the district where the food, care, and custody have been furnished or the owner or custodian of the property resides; and the court shall have power to issue all suitable process for the enforcement of such lien, by sale or otherwise, and to compel the payment of all costs, penalties, charges, and expenses of proceedings under the provisions of this and the four preceding sections.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to say that section 4387 gives a lien for food, care, and custody furnished animals in transit, which it is the object of the part I move to strike out to enforce by a proceeding in the district court. I think I showed satisfactorily yesterday that that would be ruinous, that it would enable the cattle to be stopped wherever food was furnished—it might be in Nebraska, or Iowa, or Illinois, or Ohio, or West Virginia, or anywhere—and prevent the company from carrying the cattle to their terminus.

The effect of striking out the provision for proceedings in the district court will not be to destroy the lien at all; it is right enough to give the lien, but it will be to do with this as the law does with all other cases of transportation—to allow the company to transport the cattle and charge for this food, water, and care, and to require of the consignee of the cattle to pay such charges, as well as the freight, before he can receive his cattle at the terminus of the transit. That would be perfectly right, and it is all that is necessary. If the company were to furnish food and the like without the cattle having been unloaded, (for this refers to cattle unloaded, and which are furnished with food, care, and custody while they are unloaded;) if the company should furnish food and the like to the cattle which was not embraced within the freight rate for transporting them, the company would have a lien for the food thus furnished; it certainly would if the preceding section of the bill passes, and that being the case, what would be the law? That when the cattle arrived at the terminus the company would not deliver them to the consignee until the charges of the company, including the repayment of the expense of food and the like, were paid to the company.

That is all right; that is the common law on the subject, and the only effect of keeping in the bill the provision which I now move to strike out is absolutely to have a lawsuit wherever food is furnished in this way, however remote from the destination of the cattle, and without any provision as to what is to be done with the cattle while the litigation is pending. It prevents the company from fulfilling its contract for transportation; it stops the cattle right where they are, makes no provision whatever for their keep and maintenance, or for what is to be done with them pending the litigation. In other words, it is a great oversight to put such a provision as this in the bill, and it is wholly unnecessary, for when it is stricken out you have made it the duty of the company to furnish sufficient food. That is already done in the bill, and when the company does that, then it has a right to charge for that, and you have given it by a preceding section a lien for such a charge, and then it collects that money just as it collects its freight money when it comes to the terminus. It does not deliver the cattle to the consignee unless these charges are paid. I hope there will be no objection to striking out this provision.

Mr. McPHERSON. I have no objection to it if the Senator from Ohio will say, as a lawyer, that he believes the lien can be enforced.

Mr. THURMAN. I have said so as a Senator.

Mr. McPHERSON. Very well; I have no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. That makes it necessary to amend in line 108 by striking out the words "such sections," as these are the sections which were named in the matter stricken out, and in lieu of them to insert "this act." That is merely verbal.

Mr. McPHERSON. I hope that amendment will not be agreed to. The Senator from Ohio will see that these sections go into the Revised Statutes as individual separate sections, and are to be referred to as such.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I altered an amendment I made yesterday to change "this act" to "section," specifying the number.

Mr. THURMAN. I will find out what sections are referred to. In the mean time my amendment may be agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DAVIS,] on lines 56 and 57, to insert the words "space and opportunity to rest."

Mr. McPHERSON. Do I understand from the printing of the bill that the words in lines 48 and 49, in the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois yesterday, "any of the sections of the act" were inserted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That amendment was adopted yesterday.

Mr. McPHERSON. The word "the" should be "this."

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Yes, it ought to be "this act."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The word "the" will be changed to "this."

Mr. McPHERSON. I then understand that the amendment offered in lines 56 and 57 is pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment there offered is pending, and that is the question now before the Senate.

Mr. McPHERSON. I understand, also, that the amendment offered in line 60 is pending, changing the word "sixty" to "forty-eight." In line 61, the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois has been agreed to, to insert "for a period of at least seven consecutive hours."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment in line 60, to insert "forty-eight," has not been agreed to.

Mr. McPHERSON. So I understand. There are but two amendments offered which have not yet been agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. In the amendment I offered I suggest to strike out "such sections" and say "in section 4386." That is all that is necessary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That will be considered agreed to as a modification of the previous amendment adopted on motion of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. THURMAN. Now, I want to call the attention of my friend from New Jersey to another provision in this bill which strikes me as of extremely doubtful propriety. It is on page 7, beginning with line 137. In order to understand it I shall have to go back to line 129, on page 6, and read that:

> And any railroad company, or persons operating any railroad, or the owners or masters of the vehicles, boats, or vessels subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, whose line of transportation forms a part of, or is connected with, any line of transportation in the Dominion of Canada, in making any contract for the transportation of animals aforesaid, whether such transportation be wholly or partly in the United States, shall be subject to the provisions of said sections.

The first thing I wish to say to my friend is that I am totally at a loss to know what is meant by this provision that "in making any contract for the transportation of animals aforesaid" the company or persons "shall be subject to the provisions of said sections." I do not know what is meant by that. What has the making of a contract to do with the provisions of this act? I ask whether that provision has any effect whatever? I admit that, while I am not disposed to be hypercritical, I am totally unable to conceive what interpretation any court would give to that provision. Is it intended that every railroad contract for freight shall contain a provision that the cattle shall be unloaded every twenty-eight hours; in other words, that it shall contain the provisions of this bill on the subject? That cannot be the object. This bill is intended to act per se, propria vigore, whether there is any contract or not. Why, therefore, this provision that in making a contract they "shall be subject to the provisions of said sections" of this act? It is a thing I really cannot understand. It must be because I have not as full a knowledge of the subject as those who reported the bill.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Will the Senator allow me to put a question just here?

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. My impression is that under the provision he is speaking of this practical trouble would arise: The Michigan Central Railroad I believe runs from Chicago to Detroit, connects there with a railroad through Canada that connects again at Niagara Falls with another road to the city of New York. Now, the Michigan Central Railroad Company will contract for the transportation of cattle through to New York; but if this provision becomes the law, unless the railroad in Canada complies with the provisions of this act, though the railroad company at Chicago which contracts for the delivery of cattle in New York obeys the law in the United States, the railroad company which made the contract at Chicago is liable for the non-performance of the requirements of this act by the Canada railroad company.

Mr. THURMAN. That would be a very far-fetched inference from these words. I do not think any court would go so far as to give judgment against the Michigan Central on that provision.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. That is the purpose of the section, I apprehend.

Mr. THURMAN. Then it must be better expressed than it is before any court would administer such penalties.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The Senator from New Jersey can inform us whether that is the purpose or not.

Mr. McPHERSON. The exact purpose is that stated by the Senator from Iowa. The line of railroad in the Dominion of Canada, forming connecting and through lines between Chicago and other western points and the city of Boston on the sea-board, finds this difficulty: If there is no law existing in the Dominion of Canada regulating the transportation of animals, as a matter of course the railroad companies may run them as far as they please and as cruelly as they please. This provision was intended to require the railroad company making the contract for transportation to so make it to protect us in this regard. For instance, the Vermont Central Railway, which forms the terminal link of that through line of transportation to which I have referred, is to see to the observance of this law by its connecting link in Canada.

I do not think myself and never have thought that any such provision of law should appear in the bill, but it was deemed necessary by those who have had charge of the subject, and I can see no objection to it. Neither can I see any particular utility in it. I think the former part of that section, as found from lines 116 to 118, inclusive, covers all that is necessary. I do not think that portion of the section which the Senator from Ohio has read is of sufficient importance to retain it in the bill if there is strenuous objection to it; but at the same time if there is not I should prefer to retain it, as I can see cases where it may be necessary to apply it.

Mr. THURMAN. I am still at a loss to understand how this is to have the effect that is contemplated. My friend from Iowa illustrates the meaning of this by a case he supposes. He supposes the Michigan Central Railroad to take a cargo of cattle, and by contract to agree to deliver them in the city of New York, if I understand his case. It is the purpose of that road to pass them over the Grand Trunk Railroad, or any other road that passes through the Dominion of Canada; and the object of this provision is to compel the Michigan Central to see that those cattle are unloaded every twenty-eight hours by the company whose duty it would be to unload them if we had control of that company in Canada, and which would be the company that would have that duty to perform if this law could operate in Canada. If that is the case, I think that this is not sufficient for the purpose.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I do not wish the Senator to understand me that I am in favor of that. I am only pointing out the purpose of this bill.

Mr. THURMAN. I did not misunderstand the Senator. To say nothing about its requiring the Michigan road to do what it could not do except by contract with the Canada road—that is perfectly clear, for we cannot compel the Canada road to obey this law—is it exactly right that the Michigan road should be liable for what may be done in Canada when the Michigan road can have no possible means whatever of enforcing such duty upon the road in Canada? I doubt it, but I do not believe myself that this would receive an interpretation that would require of the Michigan company or any other company in the United States so onerous and almost impossible a duty.

I think under the circumstances I shall move to strike that clause out of the bill. I move to strike out all beginning with the word "and," on line 129, page 6, and ending with the word "sections," in line 137, page 7.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Should not the Senator carry his motion down to line 144?

Mr. THURMAN. I may move to strike that out too, but the clauses present separate questions. My motion is now to strike out, beginning with the word "and," in line 129, on page 6, and ending with the word "sections," in line 137, on page 7.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The words proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

> And any railroad company, or persons operating any railroad, or the owners or masters of the vehicles, boats, or vessels subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, whose line of transportation forms a part of, or is connected with, any line of transportation in the Dominion of Canada, in making any contract for the transportation of animals aforesaid, whether such transportation be wholly or partly in the United States, shall be subject to the provisions of said sections.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. Now I want to call the attention of my friend who has this bill in charge to the next provision. I have no motion to submit in reference to it, but I want to ask him if he is perfectly satisfied that it is a wise provision. It reads in these words:

> And if any such company, owner, master, or person shall knowingly bring into, assist, arrange, or provide for bringing into the United States, for consumption or otherwise, any of the animals aforesaid, which have been transported in said Dominion without having been there unloaded for rest, watering, and feeding, except as herein provided, shall be liable to the penalties provided in section 4388.

Now, let me take the very case supposed by the Senator from Iowa. The Michigan Central road at Chicago makes a contract to deliver a cargo of cattle in the city of New York, and sends them by way of Detroit and the Canada road. The Canada road, over which we have no control in the world, does not unload those cattle at the end of twenty-eight hours; in other words, it pays no attention to this law, and we cannot enforce it. When those cattle get to Niagara Falls, where they would be transferred to the United States and where the Michigan road is ready to take them and provide for all their wants, relieve their distresses, relieve them from any suffering, this provision is that if the company does that, or if the owner of the cattle does it, he shall be subject to the provisions of this act.

Mr. McPHERSON. If done "knowingly."

Mr. THURMAN. "Knowingly?" Knowing what? Knowing that they have not been provided for in Canada—that is it—knowing that they have not been unshipped at the end of twenty-eight hours; that they have not had seven hours' rest; that they have not been fed. If the owner knows that when his cattle get to the American line, if he takes them over into the American line and provides for all their wants and does the very things that humanity requires should be done, or if the Michigan Central Railroad Company does it in order to fulfill its contract to take those cattle on to New York, then they are liable to the penalty provided in this bill. In other words, you put an embargo on the cattle; they shall not be taken out of the Dominion of Canada without violating this law. If that is the case, what is to become of the cattle? The owner must sell them for what he can get for them in Canada. That is just exactly what it is. It would be a very nice piece of business for a Canada buyer to say, "Here are these cattle embargoed; you cannot take them to New York; you cannot take them into the States at all; now sell them to me for what I am willing to give." It seems to me that is an unwise provision.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, I do not understand that provision as my friend from Ohio does. Let me read it:

And if any such company, owner, master, or person shall knowingly bring into, assist, arrange, or provide for bringing into the United States, for consumption or otherwise, any of the animals aforesaid.

I apprehend that the argument of my friend——

Mr. THURMAN. You have not read it all.

Mr. EATON. I understand it without reading any more, and my friend from Ohio shall understand. But I will read further:

Which have been transported in said Dominion without having been there unloaded for rest.

Now, what does it mean? My friend from Ohio says it means that if they have not been properly provided for the very moment that they reach the United States they cannot there be taken and be provided for. Such is not my understanding of the law, and such is not my understanding of the section; but I understand it to be this: That if I as a railroad owner in the United States or as a shipper in the United States arrange with the owner or shipper in Canada that the provisions of this law shall be violated, then I become responsible; and I think I ought to be, too.

Let me illustrate: I will suppose that my friend from Wisconsin is a shipper in Canada. Once in twenty-eight hours, in Canada, he has failed to care for his cattle in a proper manner. When they arrive in the United States, I am a shipper; I am not aware of the course of action which has been pursued by my friend, the shipper in Canada, and therefore I am not responsible for his conduct. I take the animals here, I provide for them within the limits of the United States, and I am not subject, and I cannot be made subject, to this provision of law unless I do it knowingly; and if I do it knowingly, I ought to be subject to this provision. I am to know that the Canadian shipper has not once in twenty-eight hours properly taken care of the cattle; but if I take the cattle without knowing it, I say I am not subject to the provision of the law, and the Senator from Ohio is entirely wrong in the construction which he has given to it, in my judgment.

Mr. THURMAN. With great deference to my friend from Connecticut, I do not think I am wrong. I agree with him that the word "knowingly" here refers to the fact that the cattle have not been cared for in Canada as this bill provides they should be cared for if they were transported in the United States. We agree upon that. I agree with him further that if the man or the company at the Niagara River takes them without knowing the fact that they have not been provided for in Canada, he or it is liable to no penalty under this act; but the point is, ought he to be prohibited from receiving them into the United States if he does know the fact? That is the question.

The Senator from Connecticut seems to think that this is a provision launched against making a contract by which this law of the United States shall not be regarded in Canada. He thinks it is to prevent any company in the United States from making a contract, for instance, that in the transit of the cattle across the Dominion of Canada there shall be no unloading at the end of twenty-eight hours for rest—the making of an absolute contract to that effect. Why, Mr. President, the section will not bear that interpretation. That is not it at all. My friend would never dream of providing against such a thing as that by the language that is here; on the contrary, the language of the section is directly opposed to any such interpretation, for what is it?

And if any such company, owner, master, or person shall knowingly bring into, assist, arrange, or provide for bringing into the United States, for consumption or otherwise, any of the animals aforesaid, which have been transported.

This is a thing that takes place after the transportation; the proceeding is in the United States. This bringing in or arranging to bring them into the United States, this assisting to bring them into the United States, is all ex post facto; it is all after the act of their having passed through the Dominion of Canada without complying with these provisions, and therefore I say again it does seem to me that you cannot very well put into this bill a provision that would be more cruel to these animals or more unjust to their owners or more unjust to the freighter than such a provision as this. In order to test the sense of the Senate, I move to strike out that paragraph beginning with the word "and" in line 137, and ending with the word "eight" in line 144.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I understand, Mr. President, that the clause proposed to be stricken out, if allowed to stand, will cover precisely this case: An owner of cattle in Chicago ships them over the Michigan Central and Canada road to New York; at some point in Canada twenty-eight hours have expired, at which they should be unloaded for food, water, and rest, but the Canada Railroad Company, not bound by our laws, does not see fit to stop its trains and allow them to be unloaded for water, food, and rest, but carries them through to the United States line; the owner, being with them on the train, desires, it may be, to have them unloaded, but it is not done. When he gets to the line, if he takes those cattle from that road into the United States, and there feeds and waters them, so as to be ready to ship them on to New York, he is liable under this section. Read it, leaving out unnecessary words:

And if any * * * person—

Leaving out "company, owner, master"—

If any * * * person shall knowingly bring into, assist, arrange, or provide for bringing into the United States, for consumption or otherwise, any of the animals aforesaid, which have been transported in said Dominion without having been there unloaded for rest, watering, and feeding, * * * shall be liable, &c.

The owner may be on the train with the cattle; he may have desired to have them left off in Canada for the purpose of water, food, and rest, but been refused that privilege; and yet when he gets to our own border with them he is prohibited by this clause of this section from bringing them into our own country, and there watering and feeding them and sending them on to New York.

I do not know but that I might as well just now say a few words that I desire to say on the general subject of the bill.

Mr. McPHERSON. I ask the Senator to dispense with his remarks until we dispose of this particular question.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. McPHERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio a question. If I should make a contract with a line of railway having its point of shipment, say, in the city of Chicago to transport for me a train of cattle to the New York market, without electing or without having the power to elect which particular line of road it should go over—that is, what particular line or lines forming connecting links of railways between Chicago and New York the railway company should carry my cattle—and the company should elect to carry them over the Canada line, and my cattle are injured in transportation in Canada by reason of a non-performance of a duty imposed in this bill, being confined not only for twenty-eight hours but for seventy hours, it may be, without food or water, so that my stock has been injured in transportation, I ask the Senator from Ohio where I would have any redress?

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator please repeat the question? I was engaged and did not hear him.

Mr. McPHERSON. I will suppose a case, that I am transporting cattle from Chicago to New York, say on the Michigan Central Railway, which I believe joins a connecting line of road through the Dominion of Canada to New York. The Michigan Central Railway Company elects to send my cattle over the Canada line. I have no choice in the matter, and can make no choice. While under transportation in Canada they are very greatly injured, my property is deteriorated, weakened in value by reason of cruelties practiced in transportation in the Dominion of Canada. I am not a citizen of that Dominion, and have no rights or privileges there conferred upon me by law. There is, for instance, no law existing there for the punishment of offenses of this character, and I appeal to the Michigan Central Company for redress. They say, "We have performed all the requirements of law in every State and Territory in the United States through which these cattle have passed, and if any injury has been inflicted upon your property it has been done by a company doing business in a foreign country, one over which we have no control." Now, will the honorable Senator please inform me where I can obtain my redress?

Mr. THURMAN. I would say to my friend that he ought not to have shipped his cattle over that road, and he would not the next time.

Mr. McPHERSON. That is no answer.

Mr. THURMAN. Let me see if it is not an answer. He can ship by other routes. He can ship by the Michigan Southern, and then they will not go through the Dominion of Canada at all.

Mr. McPHERSON. But suppose, for instance, that the roads in the Dominion of Canada, by reason of some combination or by reason of some influence with the Michigan Central Railroad, shall, as the railroads in this country have complained that they will, take freight at a certain rate which is vastly below the rates charged by the American lines. You say I have the alternative to ship by other lines of railroad; but these lines by a combination of their own charge me a larger price, and in the absence of any law protecting my property I am practically compelled to adopt the alternative.

Mr. THURMAN. Then I will say to my friend that if he is seduced into sending his cattle over a route where they cannot be protected and properly furnished by the fact that that route is cheaper, that is his own lookout. It is a question whether he loses more money by his cattle being injured or whether he saves more by the lower rate of freight.

Mr. McPHERSON. Suppose I want to test the experiment, and lose by it $5,000 or $10,000, I wish to know if I am not entitled to redress in the first experiment. If I then persist in doing a thing as absurd, I do it at my peril.

Mr. THURMAN. My way would be to require the Michigan Central to make a contract by which it should bind itself that the cattle should be unloaded every twenty-eight hours, no matter where they were, whether in Canada or in the United States. That is the way I should protect myself, if that was necessary for the safety and well-being of the cattle.

Mr. McPHERSON. That is what we propose.

Mr. THURMAN. But the bill does not do that. The bill cannot do that. The bill cannot require them to make any such contract as that, and that difficulty arises from a fact that is inherent, and that you cannot get rid of, namely, that when you get outside of the United States your law cannot have any operation. When that is the case, and the cattle have arrived at the Niagara River, and have not been provided for in Canada, because you have no means of compelling attention to their wants there, shall the owner be prohibited from taking his cattle over to the American side and providing for their wants? Shall they be embargoed in Canada? I say not.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, he is not prohibited at all, as I understand this bill. I should like to see a law passed here, and I think this will have the effect to force the great carrier, the Michigan Central Railroad, to make a proper contract with the Canada lines, and make them responsible. They become the party then; they make the contract with me to ship my cattle from a certain point in the United States to another certain point in the United States; I have nothing to do with their contract with the Canada part of the line; the Michigan Central does that, and therefore I will force the Michigan Central to make a proper contract with the Canada lines with which they connect, and this bill will do it. It does not prohibit the owner from taking care of his cattle after they have arrived in the United States, in my judgment. I cannot see it in that light.

Mr. McPHERSON. If I understand this section aright it is a mandatory law, requiring the railroad company to make such a contract that when the offense is committed and loss sustained the injured party can go to that railroad company and obtain redress for the grievance.

When I consented at the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio to striking out the first part of this section I did not understand or comprehend its full meaning, and I believe it would be absolutely suicidal to the objects and purposes of the bill that the first part of the section, which I understand is already stricken out, should remain stricken out. I wish to make a motion to restore it and I also propose to retain that portion of the section which the Senator from Ohio last proposed to strike out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator, having voted for that amendment, moves now to reconsider the vote by which the first part of this paragraph was stricken out. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. McPHERSON. Before the vote is taken I wish to make a statement, and I should like to have the close attention of the Senate while I make it. It will not take me more than a moment.

One of the principal reasons why no effort has been made on the part of the humane societies to enforce the existing law has been the fact that the railway companies have shown them and shown the public generally that if you undertake to enforce the law against them in this country without any provision which would compel lines operating and connecting with roads running through Canada to obey the same law, the tendency would be to draw all the freight over the Canada line to the vast detriment of our own roads. The purpose of this section of the bill was to compel the Canada lines to obey all the rules and regulations laid down for roads running through this country; and if that provision fails to do it, we must resort to something else.

I hold that we are legislating here for the American people and not for people who have no interest in common with us, to wit, the people of the Dominion of Canada; and, therefore, I wish the law to be so modified and amended in this particular and in every particular that the utmost justice shall be done, and I am very sorry that the Senator from Ohio has deemed it necessary to interfere with this section, as it appears to me to be a part and portion of the general system of legislation affecting the transportation of cattle.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, the object of the Senator from New Jersey, as I understand, is to prevent collusion between railroads in the United States and railroads in Canada, by which the law is evaded. I take that to be the object of the section which the Senator from Ohio proposes to strike out. If the Senator from New Jersey will permit that to be stricken out and a substitute inserted that any railroad touching Canada which shall ship cattle through Canada shall make such contract with the railroad in Canada on which they ship as will require this law to be observed, that would effect all he desires. I suggest that as it now reads the section does not do that. I think the law is certainly doubtful as it now stands, and I respectfully suggest to the Senator from New Jersey to change the phraseology of the section, and simply insert a clause which shall provide that a company that receives cattle for shipment partly over roads in the United States and partly over roads in Canada shall make such contracts with the Canada roads as will secure the observance of the requirements of this law, and on failure subject them to the penalties of the law.

Mr. McPHERSON. Let me say to the Senator from Virginia that I think on inquiry he will probably change his opinion. The individual shipper has nothing whatever to say in the matter. If he makes a contract for delivery in New York at a certain rate per pound, he makes a contract with a contracting party in the West, say a railroad company, that railroad company transports the cattle over any connecting line that it pleases. This bill requires that that line of railroad in making a contract with the individual shall be subject to all the provisions of the law, whether the cattle go over a road in Canada or the United States.

Mr. JOHNSTON. That I understand to be the purpose, but I do not think the phraseology here effects that.

Mr. McPHERSON. Then, I will consent to any phraseology that is better adapted to the purpose.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I will write an amendment and ask the Senator to accept it.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, beginning with line 133, page 7, it is provided:

> And if any such company, owner, master, or person shall knowingly bring into, assist, arrange, or provide for bringing into the United States, for consumption or otherwise, any of the animals aforesaid, which have been transported in said Dominion without having been there unloaded for rest, watering, and feeding, except as herein provided, shall be liable to the penalties provided in section 4388.

That word "knowingly" in the mind of any lawyer refers to what I think is not intended, to wit, "bringing the cattle into the United States," knowingly bringing the cattle into the United States, shall be punished so and so. In order to express the idea which the author of the bill evidently had in view, that clause should read: "If any such company, owner, master, or person shall bring into, assist, arrange, or provide for bringing into the United States, for consumption or otherwise, any of the animals aforesaid, knowing that they have been transported in said Dominion of Canada without having been there unloaded for rest," &c. The word "knowingly" in the section refers to a thing which is not intended.

Mr. McPHERSON. I think myself that would be better, and I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. CARPENTER. I cannot offer the amendment now, as the question is on reconsidering.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey to reconsider the amendment striking out lines 129 to 137.

Mr. VEST. I desire to offer an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is not now in order. The question is on reconsidering the vote agreeing to the amendment striking out these lines.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I wish to offer an amendment in line 142; after the word "feeding," to insert:

> On account of willful neglect or refusal of said company, owner, master, or person to comply with the provisions of this act.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. McPHERSON. I should like to have the section read as it would be if amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The section will be read as proposed to be amended by the Senator from Missouri.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

> And if any such company, owner, master, or person shall knowingly bring into, assist, arrange, or provide for bringing into the United States, for consumption or otherwise, any of the animals aforesaid, which have been transported in said Dominion without having been there unloaded for rest, watering, and feeding, on account of the willful neglect or refusal of said company, owner, master, or person to comply with the provisions of this act, except as herein provided, shall be liable to the penalties provided in section 4388.

Mr. McPHERSON. Would the Senator have any objection to his amendment coming in after the word "provided," in line 143?

Mr. VEST. No, sir.

Mr. McPHERSON. I suggest, then, that it be inserted after the word "provided," in line 143. I think it would read better.

Mr. THURMAN. How would it read then?

Mr. McPHERSON. There is a proviso in this act which excepts from unloading in certain cases, and hence I want this amendment inserted after "provided."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be modified so as to be inserted after the word "provided," in line 143.

Mr. McPHERSON. The words "except as herein provided" should be in brackets.

Mr. THURMAN. I want to call the attention of my friend from Missouri to what this law will be if his amendment should be adopted. It would make the liability exist where the failure to unload the cattle took place on account of the willful neglect of the company to unload them in Canada. Well, the only company that would have them in Canada would be the Canada company, and that company could not be guilty of any willful neglect of the provision of this act, for this act would have no effect upon them. It seems to me you cannot impose duties by this act upon the Canadian company; and, therefore, to say you will apply your penalty where this neglect has resulted from the willful disregard or neglect of the Canadian company to obey an act passed by the Congress of the United States, is to say what seems to me would make a burlesque of the whole thing.

Mr. VEST. The whole section is objectionable. I do not pretend to say that I am for the section, but I do think the section should be amended in this way: Suppose, for instance, a railroad company in the Dominion of Canada refuses to comply with this law. The shipper cannot prevent it. He is innocent of any default, and he should not be subject to penalty for the company's acts. This section as it reads now applies to a foreign corporation because it says, "any company, corporation, or person which shall bring cattle into the United States." Who brings cattle into the United States? Most unquestionably the company in Canada. The section as it now stands inflicts that penalty on even a shipper who brings cattle across the Dominion of Canada, and wants to comply with the law, but is prevented from doing so. There are enough defects in the section without refusing to amend it as I propose.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I wish to offer an amendment in lieu of the provision from line 129 to line 145.

Mr. THURMAN. From line 129 has been stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. An amendment is not in order to matter stricken out.

Mr. THURMAN. I moved to strike out all of that, but pending my motion to strike out the Senator from Missouri, as he had a right to do, moved to amend the text.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I propose to amend the text instead of striking it out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia proposes, as the Chair now understands, to move to amend that portion of the bill which has been stricken out.

Mr. JOHNSTON. No, only to amend the part which remains.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does he propose further to amend the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is in order. Finally the question will recur on the motion of the Senator from Ohio to strike the whole out.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment proposed by Mr. JOHNSTON, which was to strike out, in line 137, all after the word "sections" down to and including the word "eighty-eight," in line 144, and to insert in lieu thereof:

> And any railroad company or person operating any railroad in the United States, or masters of vehicles, boats, or vessels subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, which shall receive such animals for transportation shall, if the animals are to be transported through the Dominion of Canada, provide by contract that the provisions of this law shall be observed in the Dominion of Canada, and shall be liable to the penalties of this law for the failure of any connecting road or line of transportation in Canada to comply with it.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from New Jersey and a motion to the Senate.

This bill is one of a great deal of importance not only to the section of country where I live but to the people who get our cattle to eat and to ship abroad. The bill has been amended in such a way that it is difficult for me to understand it. I think it would be better to have it go back to the committee from which it came, so that they may take the amendments which have been made and the amendments which are proposed, and whatever information, if any, they have received by the discussion here, and report a new bill. I think it would be better for the object in view; and therefore I move, Mr. President, that the bill and the pending amendments be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa to recommit the bill, with the pending amendments, to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. VEST. Before that motion is put I desire to offer an amendment which may go with the bill if it is recommitted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to receiving the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Before the vote is taken I think the committee probably ought to know more of the objections to the bill, so that they may take them into consideration. There are a dozen objections to it that have been covered by the amendments. It is suggested by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS] that I can go before the committee and state the objections; but I would prefer that the committee should know them now, and that the Senate should know a few of them. I promise you I will only take a few moments.

Mr. President, in my opinion we had better let the law as it now stands remain. I see no necessity for a new one. I believe that the law now in force is far better than any of the provisions of this bill. I see no improvement in them, and I do see a good many clauses in the present law that this bill does not cover, and it will repeal some of the very best clauses. But I particularly desire the committee to take into consideration whether or not we had not better let the present law stand in existence instead of having a new law.

Mr. President, let me suppose a practical case that occurs every day, and if I am wrong in it I shall be glad to have the Senator from New Jersey correct me. A horse or an animal of any kind goes from San Francisco to New York. The horse is put in a single car without a stall, without a patent car or in a patent car it may be. A man goes with the horse in the car and goes through; bedding, water, and food are put in the car for the horse and man; and yet at the end of sixty hours that horse is to be taken out under this bill and seven hours are to be lost, and the train has gone on. As my colleague suggests there must be a pen there to put the horse in according to the bill. That occurs every day; it is occurring now. Express companies take animals, put them into cars, send an entire car with one or two animals sometimes with a man to attend to them; but yet that animal every sixty hours has got to be stopped along the road and fed and watered and cared for, when he is better cared for in his car than he could be in any pen. I believe that is a correct conclusion from the bill. If the bill passes that will be the case all along our roads, as I understand.

I am also informed that neither the cattle men nor the railroads want any new provision. Cattle men have told me so, and I have heard railroad men so express themselves. The present law, they think, covers the whole ground. I believe that the present way of transporting cattle, putting a number right into a car and letting them protect one another, standing against one another for protection, is far better than the new patent car, which has stalls, and every time the car moves back or forth, or turns a curve, the cattle are pressed against the sides of the stall. I understand that the patent car has stalls, but the others have not. I believe that experience has taught that cattle are transported better and more safely when they are put together in cars and allowed to stand regularly, so that the motion of the car and the motion of the cattle go together.

It is a fact beyond question that Allegheny City and Buffalo are great cattle depositories. Cattle come from different sections of the country especially to Allegheny City, and are there unloaded and put into pens. The dealers from all sections of the country go there and buy them, and no one can tell when they are unloaded and put on another train whether they are the same cattle or not. Besides, very often cattle are driven into those pens from the neighborhood, from sections around. Then, when they start from there eastward, if they go on one line they remain in one State from their starting point to their destination. If they go on another line of railroad they go into two or three States. Therefore they are subject to this regulation on one line and not on the other. Two great trunk lines out of the five are entirely in one State; and the provisions of this bill, as I understand, do not touch two of those roads, while the other three lines, including the Chesapeake and Ohio, which runs through West Virginia and Virginia, are affected. Hence, there is a discrimination.

So I might go on and name at least twenty such objections; but I do not want to detain the Senate, and I shall therefore content myself with voting for the recommitment.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, it does seem to me as though the Senator from West Virginia was determined to oppose the bill whether he had any good reason for opposition or not. If the only reasons he has to offer in this matter are the reasons which he has given, then I must confess that I fail to see their points.

The Senator from West Virginia declared yesterday, in a speech that he made to the Senate, that he wanted to have stricken from the bill a certain proviso, which is the only thing which gives the public any liberty at all; in other words, he declared that he was in favor of the existing law. I must acknowledge that there are a great number of railroad companies in the United States that are in favor of the existing law, and there is no stock-yard monopoly in this country that does not favor it, for the reason it does not permit interference with their interests.

I wish to say another thing with respect to an amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois. He came in a good deal more lawyer-like way, but the effect was the same. I do not believe that the Senator from Illinois knew what the full purport of his amendment was, or he would not have offered it. The present law declares that there shall be space and opportunity for rest given in the cars used in the transportation of cattle. I do not believe the Senator knew that under a strict construction of the law it would be necessary to unload them every twenty-eight hours for want of space and opportunity to rest. The natural result of the amendment he offered would simply be to aid the additional stock-yards along the lines of transit which would be created to prevent inhumanity. I do not think either of the Senators would consent to such injustice if they fully comprehended the force of their proposed amendments.

There are millions of live stock that must cross this country during the next year to come to market, all subjected to the same kinds of cruelty, all subjected to the same impositions with respect to extortion practiced along the lines. If it is the judgment of the Senate that nothing shall be done by way of amendment to the present law, that nothing shall be done by way of mitigation or abolishment of these cruelties, then let this bill go back to the committee. I shall be content; I have done my duty; I have called the attention of the Senate to the subject.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. One word in reply to the Senator from New Jersey. I attempted to point out objections to this bill. The Senator answers them by saying that I did not know what I was talking about, or words to that effect. Now, Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from New Jersey that I thought I knew what I was talking about. The Senator has not stated yet what is at the bottom of this whole movement, in my judgment, and that is the requirement of a new car, a patent car.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, I wish to disclaim any intention to offer any indignity at all to the Senator from West Virginia. Perhaps I used rather strong terms, but I hope the Senator will not take offense at anything I have said. If I used stronger words than I should have done, I am sorry for it. But the idea I wished to convey was this: In referring to the Senator from Illinois I said that I did not believe that if he fully comprehended the extent of an amendment offered by him yesterday he would consent to it himself. The Senator from West Virginia, who favored the amendment, says he is satisfied with the existing law. I think the Senator will not consider that I have done him an injustice. Let me read the section to which I refer, and let me ask the Senator if he fully comprehends what the effect would be if we strike out the whole section, as he proposes, or amend as proposed by the Senator from Illinois?

Provided, however, In all cases when animals in transit from one place to another be transported in cars, boats, and other vessels in which said animals do have daily proper food and water, space and opportunity to rest, the provisions in regard to their being unloaded shall not apply.

The Senator from West Virginia says, "I am satisfied with the present law;" the Senator from Illinois says, "I want to incorporate the words 'space and opportunity to rest' in the proposed law." What is the effect? I answer, the result is the same. I ask the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from Illinois whether it is their opinion that according to the present practice there is space enough in a car to give cattle opportunity to rest. I think both those gentlemen will say, most certainly not.

I do not, and I think both Senators do not, desire to impose additional restrictions on the public; but the effect of inserting the words proposed by the Senator from Illinois, or of striking out the proviso as suggested by the Senator from West Virginia, is that every cattle train must unload each twenty-eight hours, and the inevitable result is to create new stock-yards along the lines of railroad which can practice their extortions on the public. I think the Senator from West Virginia did not mean that; I do not believe he would vote for it knowing and comprehending its full meaning. If I was so inapt in my expression that I could not make him understand what I meant, perhaps the fault is more mine than his.

I have thought this explanation due to the Senator from West Virginia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The motion was agreed to.

RECUSANT WITNESSES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Sergeant-at-Arms desires to make further return to the writ of attachment issued by the Senate on the 18th of December last against certain witnesses in the State of Kansas.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar of the Senate, having in his custody Jacob V. Admire, arrested by order of the Senate for contempt of a process of the body.

The Chief Clerk read the return, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 20, 1880.

In obedience to the within warrant I have arrested and taken into custody George T. Anthony and Jacob V. Admire, and now produce said Admire at the bar of the Senate.

R. J. BRIGHT,
Sergeant-at-Arms, United States Senate.

Hon. WM. A. WHEELER,
President of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The writ of attachment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the writ of attachment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What answer have you to render, Mr. Admire, why you should not be adjudged in contempt of the authority of the Senate of the United States?

The WITNESS, (J. V. Admire.) Mr. President, my reason for not appearing before the committee that sat in Topeka was on account of dangerous sickness of a member of my family. After I arrived at Topeka, and before I had time or opportunity to go before the committee, I received a dispatch from my wife, saying to me that my little girl, who had been very sick before I came away, was worse, and asking me to return immediately. I did so; and inasmuch as I received no further notice from the committee and it adjourned a few days afterward, I did not return to Topeka.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move that the witness, Mr. Admire, be discharged.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware moves that, for the reason given by the witness, Mr. Admire, he be discharged from custody.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire now to say in reference to the other witness mentioned in that return——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before this case is disposed of, as the Senator is proceeding to another, I wish to make an inquiry of him whether the committee is satisfied that the excuse made by the person now at the bar of the Senate is a correct and true one. It is a statement not made under oath; and ordinarily, of course unless the committee is satisfied, we should require to be certain that the excuse made rests upon a solid foundation. Undoubtedly the committee has made inquiry about it and will be able to inform us.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I had been informed, before Mr. Admire came here, of the high character of Mr. Admire, and that there was sickness in his family, and that that was the reason he did not appear before our committee. I was so informed by a member of the House of Representatives from that State, and I took the statement to be true. So far as I have been able to consult the members of the committee, the statement of the witness is perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask whether that excuse was communicated to the committee at the time, by telegraph or otherwise?

Mr. SAULSBURY. No, sir; it was not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the committee think this respondent ought to be discharged, it is no affair of mine to interfere; but I should say that ordinarily if any respect at all is due to the process of the Senate and its committees, if a witness finds for any reason that it is impossible for him to obey it, it would be well for him to inform somebody at the time why it is that he disregards the process of the committee. But I make no objection to the order proposed.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The same excuse was made by another witness the other day and the Senate deemed it satisfactory and discharged the witness.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Shall the respondent, for the reason assigned by him, be discharged?

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire now, in behalf of the other witness named in the return of the Sergeant-at-Arms, George T. Anthony, to state that he came here from New Mexico in obedience to the process of the Senate. On Friday last he came before the committee and stated that he was managing director of a large corporation that was building a railroad through that Territory, the interests of which would greatly suffer if he remained here until the meeting of the Senate on Monday. He desired to appear before the committee and testify, and asked the committee then to make representations of the facts to the Senate. He said, however, that if the Senate still desired that he should appear under the attachment, he would do so on a telegraphic notice. The committee deemed it proper to take his testimony, and by the consent of the committee we agreed to ask that he be discharged without appearing before the Senate in answer to the attachment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The order will be entered to discharge Mr. Anthony.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill for holding the Federal courts at Macon, in Georgia. It is a local bill, which will not take long.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has not yet been returned from the printer, the Secretary informs the Chair.

Mr. THURMAN. Then I will not make the motion now.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. As it was understood, I believe, that we should have an executive session to-day, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 20, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

WITHDRAWAL OF REPORT.

Mr. ACKLEN. On January the 13th instant, during the absence of my colleague, Mr. KING, I asked unanimous consent of the House to have printed a manuscript designated "Report No. 86, House of Representatives, Forty-sixth Congress, second session," which I had myself prepared and placed in his hands, and which he had subsequently returned to me at my request. I ask that it be withdrawn, as it was submitted by me without authority from Mr. KING or from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, it having taken no action on the matter. This was done through a mistake of mine.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the request will be granted.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask unanimous consent that the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference, which was interrupted yesterday by the close of the morning hour, be concluded this morning.

HENRY HERMAN.

Mr. MORSE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3761) for the relief of Henry Herman; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

AMENDMENT OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. ROSS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3762) amending section 4237 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

B. RAFF.

Mr. ERRETT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3763) for the relief of B. Raff; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CUSTOMS AND INTERNAL-REVENUE COLLECTIONS IN MAINE.

Mr. ATHERTON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department:

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate to this House the number and location of the several custom-houses in the State of Maine, the number and pay of all officers, clerks, and special agents of the United States employed therein, and the total cost per year of collecting the custom duties in said State, and the amount of such duties collected during the last fiscal year therein; also the number of officers, clerks, and special agents of the United States employed in the internal-revenue service in said State, their salaries, and the total cost of said service, and the total receipts of internal revenue collected therein for the last fiscal year.

SUFFRAGE IN THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. MULDROW. The bill introduced a while ago by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. WILLITS,] to further regulate suffrage in the Territories of the United States, and to fix certain qualifications for office, and to provide for the registration of voters in the Territory of Utah, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It should have been referred to the Committee on the Territories. I move to change the reference so as to refer the bill to the latter committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the change of reference?

Mr. WILLITS. I object.

Mr. MULDROW. I ask that the rule applicable to this subject be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

91. It shall be the duty of the Committee on the Territories to examine into the legislative, civil, and criminal proceedings of the Territories and to devise and report to the House such means as in their opinion may be necessary to secure the rights and privileges of residents and non-residents.

Mr. MULDROW. I now raise the question of reference. The bill ought to go to the Committee on the Territories, not to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILLITS. I do not think the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Territories necessarily reaches the subject-matter of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is for the House to determine, not the Chair, although most bills of this character have gone to the Committee on the Territories. The question is on changing the reference so as to send the bill to the Committee on the Territories instead of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The question was decided in the negative; there being—ayes 41, noes 77.

COMMITTEES ON MILITIA AND DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that by an arrangement between the gentlemen concerned, Mr. JAMES, of New York, takes the place of his colleague, Mr. MILLER, upon the Committee on the Militia, and Mr. MILLER takes the place of Mr. JAMES on the Committee for the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 2790) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint a deputy collector at Seaford, Sussex County, Delaware, and for other purposes.

DORSEY AND SHEPARD.

Mr. BUCKNER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the gentleman will permit me, before he does that, to ask unanimous consent of the House to take up and refer a Senate bill to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. FORNEY. And I wish also to take from the Speaker's table the Military Academy appropriation bill for reference to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BUCKNER. I will yield for that purpose.

On motion of Mr. PAGE, by unanimous consent, an act (S. No. 212) for the relief of John N. Dorsey and William F. Shepard, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

GEORGE WILLIAMS.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman allow me to introduce a resolution?

Mr. BUCKNER. Certainly.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution for action at this time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to furnish to this House certified copies of any and all correspondence and reports filed in his office since July 2, 1879, touching the payment of a claim under the provisions of an act approved January 13, 1879, for the relief of George Williams.

Mr. WILSON. I will not object but will treat the gentleman with more courtesy than he treated me.

Mr. CONGER. I expected nothing less from my friend.

Mr. FRYE. I think the usual words should be added, "not inconsistent with the public service."

Mr. CONGER. A resolution has been adopted calling for information prior to that time, and the design of my resolution is that all should go in together.

Mr. COX. Why should we discuss it, then, when there is no objection?

The resolution was adopted.

MILITARY ACADEMY BILL.

On motion of Mr. FORNEY, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 3015) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, returned from the Senate with amendments, was taken up, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and the bill and amendments ordered to be printed.

BANK RESERVES.

Mr. BUCKNER. Before the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHITTENDEN] begins his remarks I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that after he and his colleague, Mr. LOUNSBERY, have finished what they have to say, I give notice that I shall demand the previous question on the passage of the pending bill in the morning hour. My object is to give that notice to the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Without reference to hour?

Mr. BUCKNER. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will govern himself accordingly.

The morning hour begins at twenty-one minutes past one o'clock p. m.; and the House now resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2715) requiring the reserves of national banks to be kept in gold and silver coins of the United States, reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BUCKNER.] The gentleman from New York [Mr. CHITTENDEN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Mr. Speaker, I feel well assured of my right under the rules and practice of the House to speak on this occasion, as I propose to speak, of our currency system in general and in detail, truthfully and fearlessly, although I consciously stand on the very edge of the greenback lion's den. [Laughter.] I am at liberty, however, to say a few words for the bill before the House. This bill, as I understand it, has nothing in it new to the statute-book save the requirement that in future the bank reserve shall be one-half in coin. It is not necessarily to be in gold coin. Let me tell my friends of the silver-dollar persuasion that the short-weight silver dollar will answer the same purpose as gold in this case. The banks by the bill are simply required to keep one-half of their reserves in coin of the United States. It is a simple requirement—anybody can understand it, and it seems to me wholly unobjectionable to whomsoever wants any coin at all mixed up with our currency system. Moreover, the requirement is after the fact. The aggregate of specie now held by the banks is well-nigh sufficient to cover their whole reserve if distributed among them all.

Mr. Speaker, I respectfully but earnestly ask the attention of the House for fifteen or twenty minutes, while I try to show that our legal-tender currency in times of peace is a popular snare, a political device, in a bad sense, of vast scope, tending to corrupt and destroy individual honesty and public integrity, which are the mainspring of good government.

In pursuance of my aim I will first direct the attention of the House and the people, so far as my feeble voice may reach, to certain commonplace irrefutable facts, most commonly shunned and repelled.

The United States owe three hundred and forty-six millions of legal-tender war debt, payable on demand. We boast of paying it in good faith since January, 1879; but in truth we have not paid one dollar of it yet. We owe just as many dollars on that account to-day as we did May, 1878. Here is a shade to the glories of resumption, of which I will say more hereafter. Let us first seek to find the origin and intrinsic quality of legal-tender currency.

The first act which authorized the issue of greenbacks was approved by President Lincoln on the 25th of February, 1862. The measure was tolerated at the time, in and out of Congress, simply because the Government had no money and no other resource for the support of its armies. Greenbacks were reluctantly accepted as a war necessity. It was provided in the act of February that the legal-tender notes should at all times be convertible into bonds bearing interest payable in coin. This explicit right to fund was the apology made by Government for its forced loan, and the promise coupled with the original demand for it. Without this provision the bill had no friends; with it, there were no Senators or Representatives in Congress, eighteen years ago, bold enough to pretend that the act was constitutional. It was universally recognized in both Houses as a fiat, irrespective of the Constitution, to save the national life, and only on that ground justified. Such was the origin of legal-tender. The facts I have condensed are of record and incontrovertible.

Now, then, let us inquire what our legal-tender money is made of? Is there a fiber of honest money in this greenback I hold in my hand? Does it represent, in any sense or degree, labor or capital? Is it not the representative of debt, and of repudiated debt? For explicit answers to these questions I refer to the latest report of the Secretary of the Treasury, dated December 31, 1879. It reads as follows: "Debt bearing, no interest, old demand and legal-tender notes, $346,742,366." In what sense, I ask in the name of common honesty, is this debt money? May not the power to make it legal tender with equal facility make every kernel of corn in the State of Illinois a legal-tender dollar? If debt be the coin of the Constitution; if legal-tender be the money of Jefferson, Hamilton, and Roger Sherman, why not give Mr. WEAVER his five hundred million? It will, for the present, buy meat, meal, and fabrics. The world is full of hungry and naked people. In the name of humanity, why not feed and clothe them all?

But you cry, "Let well enough alone!" You say we have enough legal-tender for the present, and insist that this debt, though repudiated for seventeen years, is now good money because it is for the moment exchangeable for coin.

Just here, in my judgment, is the crime against the Constitution and common sense. How much honest and useful coin have you? How long will it last in critical times, when two thousand banks become watchful of their reserves? How did the Government get it? It gets coin by taxes, by selling interest-bearing bonds "for resumption purposes," all at the cost of the people. When legal-tender notes are presented and redeemed, what then? You say it is honest payment of the war debt. I deny it! You do not speak the truth! We boast of resumption for a full year, but, as I said just now, we have not paid a dollar of the legal-tender debt in all that time; not one! The moment my ancient ten-dollar note which I exhibited at the Speaker's desk two or three years ago was redeemed, Secretary Sherman straightway forced a new loan of like amount of some other person, and put the disgraced rag afloat again! Such is the law; the Secretary must obey it. It is not modest for me to anticipate the justices and declare that this law plainly violates the Constitution; but I know a boy twelve years old who has some genuine drops of Roger Sherman's blood in his veins who improvidently spent all his loose cash last summer, and ran up a big floating debt for the recovery of a runaway dog! This boy now says triumphantly "If I could only turn my floating debt into legal-tender and keep it afloat all the time, as my cousin, the great Secretary, does, I know the girl I'd marry and have a good time with independent of all my relations for the remainder of my life."

The talk about "resumption," if by that word is meant the honest payment of the floating war debt, is a broad farce in the eyes of the commercial world.

The individual, firm, bank, or railroad, paying its debts as the United States Government now pays its debt, would be without credit, exposed to derision.

We cannot stay, Mr. Speaker, where we now stand.

Again, it is when employed as the redemptive agent of national-bank notes, which are amply secured by interest-bearing bonds, that our legal-tender notes cut the most ridiculous and provoking figure in our bastard financial system. The notes redeemed by this fiat stuff rest on a solid basis, and are in fact the safest and best paper money for a great and prosperous country like ours the world has ever known, while the redemptive agent rests on nothing, absolutely, but the whims of Congress, has never been payable anyhow but for one brief year of its long life, and only that by favor of Divine Providence in visiting Europe with a temporary famine in aid of our "resumption purposes."

Moreover, in spite of the issues of the war, but for the stupendous resources of the United States, North, South, East, and West, which everywhere exceed the most enlarged computation, our greenbacks would long ago have been discredited and disgraced by the dalliance and adverse legislation of Congress.

Do we now realize, Mr. Speaker, that the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Congresses had no faith in and no desire for resumption in 1879? Do we remember that they did all in their power and all they thought necessary to prevent it? And what does the Forty-sixth Congress propose? "Let well enough alone!" That is the loudest peal. What does it really mean? I do not deny that my friend from Illinois [Mr. FORT] and my friend from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] are as true to their convictions as I am to mine, but I implore them to consider. The cry, let well enough alone, is no better, in my judgment, than a bill requiring Government to suspend specie payments in the first exigency. It is no better than a resolution eulogizing greenbacks and promising a fresh issue of legal-tender at a time not remote.

It is no better than a proposition to inflate and currupt the currency to the prejudice of the cotton-growers, cattle-growers, and corn-producers of the South and West. The jeers of my friends at banks and bondholders do not touch me! I neither own national-bank stock or Government bonds. I have no business now but farming. I speak as a producer of wheat and corn in Illinois and Iowa, and I speak earnestly, because I know that unless the laws of gravitation are to be abolished, that presently, or whenever the currents of foreign exchange are reversed, I in common with all farmers will have no coin but the short-weight silver dollars which have already become a great inconvenience to Congressmen. The gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Iowa may, with the other gentleman from Iowa and his cohorts, compel me and all western farmers to receive the short-weight dollar for our products, but they cannot compel the New York merchants who buy and ship our products to take their pay in anything but a full-weight gold dollar. I believe the farmer entitled to the same good money that the New York merchant gets. I tell farmers everywhere that the cry "let well enough alone" means exactly the opposite. It means gold for New York and silver or irredeemable paper for the South and West. The mistake made by the western gentlemen is this, they forget that Congress cannot control the standard of currency which governs our magnificent foreign commerce. The shipper is forced to take his pay in the gold standard. All the goods we export are paid for in gold. It is tolerably certain that producers will by and by open their eyes to this interesting fact.

It has for more than two years been apparent to the intelligent merchants of New York that America will absolutely control the gold markets of the world whenever Congress permits. In support of this belief I will read a short paragraph from the London Times of December 25, 1879:

THE AMERICAN DEMAND FOR GOLD.

We see more cause than ever for pointing to the state of the American money market as a reason for anticipating a pressure upon the stocks of gold in other gold-using countries, coupled with high rates in the discount market, during the next two or three years. America is a country which has large demands for currency, as past experience has shown, and the present demand is only unprecedented because for nearly twenty years before the American currency has been inconvertible paper, and we have had no practical illustration of what the growing demands of the country would be. The population all the while has been increasing with great rapidity in numbers and wealth. Now we learn suddenly what the consuming power of the United States really is, and we must attend to the lesson. Unless there is legislation to facilitate the expansion of the bank-note issues, which we can hardly anticipate, these American demands for currency must continue to have a great and predominant influence on the London money market.

Such, Mr. Speaker, is America's opportunity as viewed from London. The question arises, and comes home to each member of this House, shall we by paper and silver devices shut out future supplies and drive away the gold we now have?

The unlooked-for influx of nearly eighty millions of gold in six months, added to the product of our own mines, has temporarily exaggerated our splendid prosperity, and made men, and women too, wild with hopes of fortunes to be made in a day. The Treasury, with its vicious barricade of clipped silver dollars, looks defiant to those only who are near-sighted or refuse to see the truth. It is, in fact, on principle, as weak as Governor Garcelon of Maine was on New Year's Day. I wish, Mr. Speaker, it were as easy for Congress and courts to be as prompt and fearless when speaking for honest money as we can all be in defending the ballot-box.

Let me say once more, because it is impossible to remind the debt-paying people of our country of the ominous fact too often, the Secretary of the Treasury has not really paid one dollar of the floating war debt since May, 1878. Nor has anything yet taken place (but famine) to make our boasted resumption stable and secure.

May I say it, Mr. Speaker, without offense? I fear the majority of this Congress are not concerned to make resumption secure.

I also fear that the poison of legal-tender has so eaten into the vitals of the country that Congress will never blot the curse from the statute-book! Unless there be a power whose decrees are binding on Congress to adjudicate this question, in the presence of the Constitution, as understood for eighty years, we are at least in great danger of being plunged again into a frightful vortex of inflation and repudiation.

No one can patiently study the history and trace the subtle influence of the greenback currency in and out of Congress without being convinced that Government has blundered in dealing with it and blundered at immense cost to the people. The legal-tender feature was the primary and colossal mistake. It would be easy to show the monstrous evils it has wrought in the past, but we are only concerned now to show how naturally and boldly it threatens to subdue and dominate the Government. Behold its audacity! Our greenbacks have already won three great battles to the injury and discredit of the people, namely, the repeal of the original funding provision, the repeal of the act of 1866 requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to pay them off at the rate of four millions per month, and the suppression of cancellation under the resumption act of 1875. And now they confront us more daring than ever before. The President and chief officers of the Treasury have made it clear that by a special providence the time has come when active steps for the honest payment of this long-repudiated portion of the war debt may be taken without a ripple of harm to any one. The loudest response is a selfish and cowardly cry, wait! The President is right, say some, but our people are not ready. Of such I inquire, shall one who has been traveling the broad road to ruin for eighteen years refuse to turn when he reaches the open, narrow gate?

Is it truly well with us, my countrymen? Are we right? Is debt money? Is a false dollar to be the redemptive agent of a real dollar forever? Or are we traveling, foolhardy, upon the rim and treacherous crust of a legal-tender volcano, whose remorseless flames may at any moment burst their bounds, turn our prosperity to ashes, and set back our grand destiny for a generation? What of the demand of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] and his confident supporters? They ask for five hundred millions of legal-tender in one solid chunk, and their demand is strictly characteristic of fiat money and its advocates in all history. Where are the Jeffersons and Hamiltons, the Calhouns and Websters, of other days to sound the alarm? Why do public men so hesitate to exhibit the courage of their convictions? What means the sharp contrast between the sentiments of Congress in respect to the money of the Constitution in 1862 and 1880? Go find the living men who as members of this House in 1862 stood here to hurl thunderbolts against irredeemable paper money, and compel those very men to answer these questions if you can!

But I am reminded that one performs only half his duty in denouncing a great evil. Our legal-tender malady has run eighteen years, invading every house. Some people seem to enjoy it; nevertheless, a cure is as desirable for them as for those who understand its true nature and dislike it accordingly. Let me get hold of my hearers, if I can, by reminding us all how safe it is to do right.

"Tell me what is right," said a distinguished New York judge, lately deceased, "and I will find a law for it." Try our case by this rule. Debt, whether of individuals or States, must be paid where the means of paying exists. Debt past due cannot be paid too quickly for the honor and highest interests of the debtor.

I hold these two propositions as fundamental in all right thinking and all right action on the question of our legal-tender debt; nor can I see how just men can rise here or elsewhere to dispute their truth and force.

What, then, remains for us to do for our honor and prosperity but to provide for the prompt payment of our floating war debt? How? When? If Congress only had courage to deal wisely with the currency now, without reference to the next Congress or the next President, the world would, in my judgment, soon be amazed by our swift deliverence from the legal-tender portion of our national debt and the substitution of gold for every dollar of it. I believe it can be paid dollar for dollar out of our mines and surplus revenue in less than five years, not only without a sensation of harm, but with the most encouraging inspiration and support to every honest man and industry in the land.

I would not, however, advise a policy which for success requires the entire liquidation of the greenback debt in five years. We have no need of haste, save to enter the right way when the gate is wide open. When we limit our inquiries to our own country a material millennium, so to speak, seems fairly within our reach. When we look beyond, we find the Old World loaded down with war debts and want, and it becomes us, even in our conscious strength, to do nothing rash. But no consideration whatever is due to the selfish and greedy cormorants who now in Wall street and now in Chicago manipulate railroad stocks and the produce of the country on a gigantic scale for their own exclusive ends, to the great injury of all industrial interests.

What is it but an excess of currency under their control which has enabled giant syndicates to blockade the internal commerce of the West and Northwest at the present moment? How is it that those who cry "Let well enough alone" fail to see that money is less free to farmers of the West in such sums as they need for honest purposes than it would be if our currency were placed on a solid basis beyond the control of giant speculators?

Now, then, Mr. Speaker, if I possessed the power, though it were coupled with the severest penalty for its misuse or hurtful exercise, I would deprive greenbacks of their legal-tender quality to take effect prior to next July. I would also stop minting silver dollars to-day, and as soon as practicable convert all the silver bullion now on hand, owned by the Government, with twenty-five million of the useless silver dollars, into gold, and with the gold thus acquired I would, in regular course of business, pay and extinguish an equal amount of greenbacks. I would further pay off greenbacks with surplus revenue instead of buying bonds not yet due, cautiously but steadily, and perhaps as rapidly as the national-bank currency expands under the operation of natural and safe laws.

We are mining at least six millions, gold value, of gold and silver per month, and if we utilize it, as we may, we can easily control all the gold we want for currency purposes, and force the other great nations interested to join us in the establishment of a bimetallic standard whenever it shall appear for our interest to do it. Is it not high time, Mr. Speaker, for the United States of America to cease dallying with a petty but extremely vicious legal-tender floating debt?

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HUNTON. Will the gentleman give way for me to make a motion that all general debate on the report of the Committee on Rules shall terminate with to-morrow's session of the House?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will yield for that motion.

MAIL SERVICE—STAR ROUTES.

Mr. MONEY. There is a special order for to-day, being a bill reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads (H. R. No. 3013) to provide for regulating the manner of increasing service and expediting schedules on mail-routes. That bill was made the special order in the House as in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for Tuesday, January 20, 1880, after the morning hour. I ask that it be made a continuing order from day to day, so that it may not lose its place in consequence of the pending business in Committee of the Whole.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. BLACKBURN, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HUNTON. I move that all general debate on that report shall terminate with to-morrow's session of the House.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. I desire to make a remark to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTON,] and also to the gentleman having charge of the report of the Committee on Rules, [Mr. BLACKBURN.] That report contains no provision defining the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River. That committee claims the right to have one hour to assert its jurisdiction and to have the House pass upon that question.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. OSCAR TURNER] is mistaken in one respect. The Committee on Mississippi Levees have communicated with the Committee on Rules and indicated a desire for two hours instead of one. Further than that, the gentleman from Kentucky is not altogether accurate. The Committee on Rules have not left open anything concerning that or any other committee, except as it stands open to-day in the rules of the House. The report of the Committee on Rules leaves the Committee on the Mississippi Levees precisely where the present existing rules leave that committee, without any definition of their duties at all. It is altogether proper that that committee should be heard.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. I understand that the motion of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTON,] if adopted, will cut off the Committee on the Mississippi Levees after to-morrow.

Mr. ROBERTSON. If the motion of the gentleman from Virginia shall prevail, will our Committee on Mississippi Levees be cut off from discussing this question?

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. I will say that I do not desire to discuss the question at all. I was speaking merely in behalf of the gentleman from Mississippi, General CHALMERS, who has been selected by the Committee on Mississippi Levees to present their views to the House in regard to what ought to be the jurisdiction of that committee. He is absent from the Hall at this time, having no idea that any proposition would be made to cut off the general debate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In answer to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ROBERTSON] I will reply that I cannot say whether the adoption of the motion of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTON,] to close all general debate on the report of the Committee on Rules after to-morrow's session, would or would not afford an opportunity for the Committee on Mississippi Levees to be heard at such length as it has indicated a desire to be heard. The House will remember that the Committee on Rules have not been heard in all the days of general debate that has taken place. I take it that it will be the pleasure of the House to hear that committee on the subject of their own work.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I believe that when the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] presented to the House the report of the Committee on Rules, he stated that it was not the desire of that committee to curtail the debate upon their report, or upon any question that might arise in connection with it; that he wanted the freest and fullest expression of opinion from all the members of this House, and that every member who desired to speak on the question should have an opportunity to do so.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Every word of which I reiterate now.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I would state that the committee over which I have the honor to preside, the Committee on Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River, have instructed a member of that committee, the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. CHALMERS,] to report for consideration two very important amendments of the system of rules which has been presented to this House in the report of the Committee on Rules. One of those amendments includes an extension of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River, so as to enable that committee to take into consideration not only questions in regard to the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River, but also the improvement of the tributaries of that river. That amendment is now in charge of the gentleman from Mississippi, and we have informed the chairman of the Committee of the Whole that we shall desire two hours for the discussion of the question.

The Committee on Commerce, I believe, has been fully heard upon the question of the conflict of jurisdiction between that committee and the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Railroads and Canals have been heard. The Committee on Appropriations will doubtless be heard. The Committee on Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River desires to be heard on the question of the jurisdiction of that committee. We desire to present to this House, through the gentleman from Mississippi, and others who may wish to speak, the reasons why we ask the extension of the jurisdiction of that committee.

As the question now stands, as truly stated by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. OSCAR TURNER,] the duties of that committee have not been defined at all. The gentleman from Kentucky in charge of the report [Mr. BLACKBURN] states as a reason that no rule of the House now exists defining the jurisdiction of that committee. That is the situation of four other committees of this House. Under the present rule there are five committees whose duties are not defined. The Committee on Rules undertake to define the duties of four of those committees, the duties of which had not before been defined by any rule of the House. But in the case of the Committee on Mississippi Levees, the Committee on Rules have left the matter just as it now stands.

The Committee on Rules have gone further. By a resolution unanimously adopted by this House, the number of the members of the Committee on Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River was increased to thirteen. The Committee on Rules in their report propose to reduce the number of the members of that committee from thirteen to eleven. We desire, therefore, to be heard fully on this question, particularly upon the extent of the jurisdiction of our committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. COX.) The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia, that all general debate upon the report of the Committee on Rules be closed after to-morrow's session.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I hope that motion will not prevail. I think it nothing but right that our committee should be heard, particularly as it seems there has been an invidious distinction made against the committee. The Committee on Rules has defined the powers and duties of four other committees whose duties have not been heretofore defined, while they have failed to define the duties of this committee. We desire, therefore, to be heard on the question; and if this debate be closed to-morrow we shall have no opportunity whatever to be heard.

Mr. BAYNE. The Committee on the Mississippi Levees and the improvement of that river has not, I believe, advocated or opposed the adoption of these rules in any respect as yet; that committee has not been heard from at all. Time has been given to various members of the House to express their individual views regarding the new rules; and this committee simply claims the privilege of putting forward one of its members as its representative to express its views respecting these new rules. The importance of the functions of this committee cannot well be overrated. Large amounts of money are expended upon its reports; it suggests various measures affecting the commerce of the whole country. Its importance in the administration of the affairs of this House, in the management of the commercial and navigable rivers of the country, can be questioned by no one. Hence when it asks the simple privilege that one of its members shall speak for it on this floor, it seems to me but fair and right that a committee of such importance should be granted a hearing.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is agreed to.

Mr. BAYNE. But assurance is not given, if I understand the gentleman from Kentucky, that the hour proposed to be assigned to this committee will be certain.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir; I guarantee that the committee shall have the hour, and have it to-day.

Mr. KING. But we are not prepared to-day.

Mr. BAYNE. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CHALMERS] who was to represent the committee is not present to-day. He has prepared himself for the purpose of advocating the views of our committee; and no other member, so far as I know, has made such preparation.

Mr. HUNTON. I move the previous question on my motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Upon the motion that after the session of to-morrow all general debate on the report of the Committee on Rules be closed the gentleman from Virginia calls the previous question.

Mr. BAYNE. I hope the motion of the gentleman from Virginia will be voted down, if assurance cannot be given that our committee will be heard.

Mr. CONGER. In order to test this question by a direct vote, I move to lay the motion on the table.

Mr. HUNTON. I submit that the motion to lay on the table is not in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Michigan move to lay on the table the motion to close debate?

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is in order.

Mr. HUNTON. I demanded the previous question on my motion when there was no one on the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is always in order to make a motion to lay on the table.

Mr. HUNTON. The motion to lay on the table was not made until after my demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read Rule 42.

The Clerk read as follows:

When a question is under debate, no motion shall be received but to adjourn, to lie on the table, for the previous question, to postpone to a day certain, to commit or amend, to postpone indefinitely; which several motions shall have precedence in the order in which they are arranged.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia must see from the reading of this rule that the motion to lay on the table takes precedence of the demand for the previous question.

Mr. HUNTON. The gentleman from Virginia does not see it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Nevertheless it is the fact.

Mr. HUNTON. I submit, of course, to the ruling of the Chair.

The question being taken on the motion to lay on the table, it was agreed to, there being—ayes 83, noes 42.

The question then recurring on the motion of Mr. BLACKBURN, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules, it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. CARLISLE in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. ACKLEN. Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand the report of the Committee on Rules. It gives unmistakable evidence of great care and attention. The gentlemen who compose that committee stand high in the esteem and confidence of this House, and if they have made some errors, committed some mistakes, as I think their report will disclose and this House will conclude, yet such conclusion will cast no unfavorable reflection on the result of their labors. They are human, like the rest of us, and we are all liable to err.

When I reflect on the individual ability and intellect of the gentlemen composing that committee, and their long terms of service in this House, it is with extreme diffidence that I venture to criticise the result of their labors. If this House shall conclude to adopt the report of the committee as a whole, I shall humbly and cheerfully bow to such a decision. However much I might regret, as a member of the Committee on Commerce, to submit my work to the revision of another committee of this House, yet I shall cheerfully agree to whatever decision the majority of this House may arrive at. For that the majority shall rule is the great underlying principle of the republican institutions of our country, and I shall not at this late date attempt to gainsay its correctness.

Before calling the attention of the House to that part of Rule XI which requires the Committee on Commerce to report the river and harbor bill to the Committee on Appropriations, I desire first to call the attention of the members of this House, even at the risk of being tedious, to some of the other rules which have been reported. In my humble judgment Rule I should have been placed in the order of Rule II; in other words, it should have followed, and not preceded that rule. It appears to me that the election of officers is a matter which more appropriately precedes the definition of their duties; but it is not to that mere matter of form I desire to call the attention of members. They will observe that clause 6 of Rule I, referring to the duties of the Speaker, reads as follows:

6. He shall not be required to vote in ordinary legislative proceedings, except in case of a tie, or where his vote, if given with the minority, would make a tie, or will make or prevent a two-thirds vote where such vote is required, or where the House is engaged in voting by ballot; and in all cases of a tie vote the question shall be lost.

Now, particularly I desire to call the attention of members to these words: "He shall not be required to vote in ordinary legislative proceedings." Why "ordinary?" Are there any extraordinary proceedings in this House which would render it unnecessary for the Speaker to comply with the following two provisions of the rule, namely: to vote in case of a tie, or in case of vote by ballot, or where his vote given to the minority would make a tie? Then clearly such word is unnecessary and would simply tend to confusion in the construction of the rule.

And why legislative proceedings? If there are no proceedings in this House which are not legislative proceedings, then clearly the word is superfluous, but if there are, then there is double reason for striking it out.

But in order that no misconstruction can be possibly placed on this sixth clause of the first rule as reported by the committee, I have drafted a substitute which, I think, will not be open to the rather forced construction which some members might in the future be inclined to put on it; and I ask that the Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute for clause 6 of Rule I:

"The Speaker has the right but shall not be required to vote in proceedings before the House except in the case of a tie or where the House is engaged in voting by ballot.

"Should the Speaker vote with the minority and thereby make a tie, the question shall be deemed lost. Should the Speaker vote to make or to prevent a two-thirds vote, where such vote is required, the question shall be deemed carried or lost, as the case may be."

Mr. ACKLEN. Now, Mr. Chairman, it will be observed that the substitute which I have drafted and offered does not change the true intent of the rule, and, in my judgment, prevents any forced construction unfavorable to its true intention.

RULE IV.

In Rule IV, clause 3, which reads as follows:

3. He shall give bond to the United States, with sureties to be approved by the Speaker, in the sum of $50,000, for the faithful disbursement of all moneys intrusted to him by virtue of his office and the proper discharge of the duties thereof, and no member of Congress shall be approved as such surety—

I would suggest, in the last line, "and no Senator or member of the House shall be approved as surety."

This refers to the bond to be given by the Sergeant-at-Arms; and I think it better that we should have none of our officers under any obligation to gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol.

I will pass over that portion of Rule XI referring to the Committee on Commerce, and requiring them to report the river and harbor bill to the Committee on Appropriations, until the close of my remarks.

RULE XV.

I now come to Rule XV of the House and I propose in this connection the addition of a third clause, which I will send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That when members who are present fail or refuse to vote on any proposition before the House, when their names are called, thereby breaking a quorum, it shall be the duty of the Clerk to count those present not voting as having voted in the negative, and to declare the result to the House; and the proposition shall be deemed carried or lost, as the case may be.

Mr. ACKLEN. I shall offer that in no partisan spirit whatever; but, after our experience in the extra session of this present Congress, I think it will strike any fair-minded, candid man in this House that we should adopt some rule that will prevent, when a measure is violently advocated and strongly opposed, a minority of the House through parliamentary legerdemain in obstructing necessary legislation. It is impossible if we carry out, or if any body of men attempt to carry out, the practices which were adopted in the first session of this present Congress, for the country not to suffer. Needed legislation is certain to be obstructed by such tactics. I think it will be far better when a minority of this House shall have decided to their own satisfaction that the measure supported and advocated by a majority of the House is wrong and unconstitutional to place their opposition on record, and not impede and obstruct legislation, but remit the whole question to the people, who in the present day of a free press have a most favorable opportunity to judge of the propriety of measures pending before Congress.

RULE XVI.

In Rule XVI, clause 4, we find provided a number of motions which are defined "shall have precedence in the foregoing order." Clause 4 reads as follows:

4. When a question is under debate, no motion shall be received but to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, to adjourn, to take a recess, to lie on the table, for the previous question, (which motions shall be decided without debate,) to postpone to a day certain, to refer or amend, or to postpone indefinitely, which several motions shall have precedence in the foregoing order; and no motion to postpone to a day certain, to refer, or to postpone indefinitely, being decided, shall be again allowed on the same day at the same stage of the question.

Mr. ROBESON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question upon the subject-matter he has just read?

Mr. ACKLEN. Certainly.

Mr. ROBESON. I find in the fifth section of the Constitution of the United States this provision:

Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns and qualifications of its own members, and a majority of each shall constitute a quorum to do business.

Now, do I understand the gentleman to say that there can be under the Constitution of the United States a quorum unless there is a majority present doing business?

Mr. ACKLEN. I certainly did not make that statement——

Mr. ROBESON. If the gentleman will permit me, my proposition is that it is necessary under the Constitution that a majority shall be present doing business before there is a quorum of any kind, and no rule can make it otherwise.

Mr. ACKLEN. In reply to the gentleman from New Jersey I do say, Mr. Chairman, that it is undoubtedly correct as the gentleman has read it, the Constitution provides that each House shall be the judge of the elections, qualifications, and returns of its own members; and just here I would remark that I am very sorry the constitutional privilege and right which is therein provided was not exercised a few days ago in the State of Maine. [Laughter on the republican side.] But it rests with each House before the passage of such rules as it may choose to adopt to govern the presence and the action of its members, and it is clearly within the constitutional power of this House to adopt a rule requiring not only that members may be brought here and under what conditions and restrictions they shall be brought here, but that if they refuse to vote when they are present and in their seats merely for the purpose of obstructing the legislation of the country it is right, proper, and constitutional that the House should direct the Clerk by such rule as they may choose to adopt to take notice of their presence and report them accordingly.

Mr. ROBESON. If the gentleman will permit me, I think it may be within the province of this House to take such order as they may deem wise and proper to compel her members to do business, but I deny that any clerk or any speaker of any house can make a quorum, unless by some means or other they have a majority present doing business.

Mr. ACKLEN. But the rule looks to that very fact. When a quorum is present it should provide that a minority, under these circumstances, cannot willfully obstruct and impede the legislation of the country by refusing to do what the law of justice and right requires them to do—cast their votes when their names are called.

Mr. FRYE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him if it has ever struck him that a child may lead a horse to water, but a regiment of men cannot make him drink?

Mr. ACKLEN. Yes; but I would say, Mr. Chairman, that old saw and maxim has been familiar to my ears for a long time, but it would take a very strong child to carry any horse to water if he determined not to go in the first instance. [Laughter.]

I will now proceed, Mr. Chairman, to call the attention of the members of the committee to clause 4 of Rule XVI. We find in that clause that one of the motions provided for is to "postpone indefinitely." Now, to what purpose was this motion adopted by the Committee on Rules? It is entirely obsolete, we rarely ever hear of it, and I doubt whether within the experience of any member of this present body the motion has ever been put upon this floor to postpone indefinitely.

If you wish to take a case as an illustration, I would ask the attention of the House to the case of Charles Clinton, which was discussed in the Committee of the Whole, and I cite this as an illustration of the unmeaning action of the committee in continuing this rule in its present form. The Committee of the Whole can do but two things in the consideration of a question: report favorably or report unfavorably to the House; and a motion that the committee rise takes precedence of any other motion in the Committee of the Whole. Therefore the motion to postpone indefinitely can have no effect in the Committee of the Whole. Then why should we retain it in the House? When the bill comes back to the House for consideration the friends of the bill, if it has been reported adversely from the Committee of the Whole, would generally desire to take a vote by yeas and nays, or to do as they did the other day, move that the House adjourn. If the bill has been reported adversely, a motion to postpone is not the motion that takes precedence, but a motion to lay on the table. That has the effect of killing the bill. And, therefore, to retain in the fourth section of the sixteenth rule the motion to postpone indefinitely is simply to retain a clause in the rule which is obsolete in practice.

RULE XXI.

Now, in Rule XXI, we have:

1. Bills and joint resolutions introduced for reference and those reported by committees without such introduction, shall be read a first time by their titles and printed, the second time in full.

I think it quite unnecessary to consume the valuable time of this House in the needless reading of bills in full. The old rule provides that bills shall be read twice by their titles unless a reading in full is demanded by any member. This guarantees to the House an opportunity to thoroughly familiarize itself with every provision in the bill; and to require that the bill shall be read a second time in full before it is printed is simply an unnecessary consumption of valuable time. I shall, therefore, move to amend clause 1 of Rule XXI by striking out that provision.

I would also ask what is the reason that the Committee on Rules have required that no private bills shall be printed until they are reported, provided they have been printed previously. If we are to print any private bills, let us print all private bills. So far as my own opinion is concerned, I am clearly of the belief that no private bills should be printed until they are reported to the House for consideration.

I now pass, Mr. Chairman, to one of the most important rules which we have under consideration, that is, clause 3 of Rule XXI. I should not have thought it necessary to occupy the time of the committee to any extent in reference to this rule had it not been for the very violent attack made upon it by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] who unfortunately is not in his seat at the present time. But entertaining as I do a high respect for that gentleman's ability and intellect and knowing the weight that his utterances carry with this House I desire to show into what a slough of error the gentleman fell. I will therefore ask that the Clerk read his remarks on that clause of Rule XXI.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is simply this, that a majority of one committee, composed of eleven or thirteen, or fifteen men, the bare majority of that committee may absolutely and completely control the appropriations of Congress itself. It denies to the minority of the committee, it denies to the minority of the House, it denies to the majority of the House and to the whole House the power either to obey the law or to meet public demands. A law says that an examining surgeon shall have one dollar and a half for examining a pensioner. The Committee on Appropriations comes in with a report, voted by a majority of that committee, and says that that surgeon shall receive one dollar, and only one dollar.

I use this as an illustration, because in the present session we have seen this actually done in the report which came from the Committee on Appropriations for the payment of pensioners.

Now, this may be carried to any extent. The law says that the President shall receive $50,000 annually as his salary. It is in the power of a mere majority of the Committee on Appropriations to say he shall be paid $25,000; and it is utterly impossible for anybody in the House to change the result which the Committee on Appropriations has arrived at, unless it be to make it still less.

We are here at the mercy of a single committee, putting its strong hand upon and closing our mouths. No man, either on the right or on the left of the Speaker, can make a motion to increase the amount reported by the committee, not simply to what it ought to be in fact, but up to the point at which the law fixes it.

Mr. ACKLEN. Now, is that true as a matter of fact? I am surprised that the gentleman from Minnesota, who has now come into the Hall and resumed his accustomed seat, could have fallen into such an error in the consideration of clause 3, Rule XXI, as to have made in this House a statement such as the Clerk has just read. The rule provides:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law.

But taking the case of the salary of the President of the United States as an example which the gentleman cited, why, if the Appropriations Committee shall cut that salary down to $25,000, it is the right and within the power of any member of the Committee of the Whole to move an amendment that it be restored to what the law authorizes. The bill reported by the Committee on Appropriations does not itself change the law until it shall have passed. And to state to the House that it is within the power of the Committee on Appropriations, irrespective of the rights of the members of this House, to cut down the salary of the President from $50,000 to $25,000, was to fall into an error which I am surprised a gentleman occupying so high a position in this House as the gentleman from Minnesota could have made.

Now, I would like to call the attention of members to the history of this rule, which is one, perhaps, of the most important of all the rules reported by the committee for the revision of the rules. In the Forty-fourth Congress the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] reported an amendment to the rules, as follows:

That Rule 120 be so amended that after the word "progress" all be stricken out, and there shall be added the following:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

The original rule to which this was an amendment, reported from the Committee on Rules, read as follows:

No appropriation shall be reported in such general appropriation bills, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress, and for the contingencies for carrying on the several Departments of the Government.

That rule is just the reverse of the rule which we have under consideration at this time. Its construction has been given in the Manual, or rather in the Digest, and is as follows:

It has been decided that under this rule it is not in order to propose an amendment to a general appropriation bill which changes an existing law. But it was also decided that the latter branch of the rule not only permitted amendments increasing salaries, but was framed for that very purpose.

That was the old rule to which from the remarks of the gentleman I imagine he wishes to return. I will now call attention to what was said on that subject by the honorable Speaker of this House, who was then a member of the House. I ask the Clerk to read what I have marked in the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Kasson] presents the difficulty that this amendment gives too much power to the Committee on Appropriations. I submit that it only relates to appropriations that entirely pertain to the duties of that committee. I would say in addition that this proposition in no manner cuts off amendment or debate as allowed in Committee of the Whole; so that the objection presented by the gentleman from Iowa cannot exist. Any amendment that is proper in Committee of the Whole must have full and deliberate consideration and discussion.

* * * * * * *

Now, I want to be entirely frank about this matter, and I want to say this: that anything that the Committee on Appropriations do in connection with retrenchment is only in the nature of a recommendation. We must have the judgment upon it of a majority of the House. The majority of the House are alone responsible for the expenditures of money; but if we of the majority present a case requiring a reduction, it requires a vote of more than two-thirds of the House, and unless the other side authorize it it is never in our power to retrench.

Mr. ACKLEN. If there now remains any doubt whatever as to the erroneous position assumed by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] in reference to that rule, I will ask the Clerk to read from the RECORD a ruling directly on that point made by Mr. Potter, of New York, who at the time, in the Forty-fourth Congress, occupied the position of chairman of the Committee of the Whole, while it was engaged in considering the Indian appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

"For support of the Tonkawa Indians at Fort Griffin, Texas, $2,000."

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I offer as a substitute for the paragraph just read the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

"That the sum of $2,500 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the benefit of the Tonkawa Indians, now at the military post at Fort Griffin, Texas; that the money herein appropriated shall be expended for the benefit of such Indians by the commanding officer at Fort Griffin, under such directions as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs: Provided, That no part of such fund shall be applied to the removal of said Indians from the vicinity of such military post to any Indian reservation: And provided further, That such appropriation shall be applied pro rata to such Lipan Indians as may have heretofore been incorporated into the Tonkawa tribe, and which still reside with such tribe."

Mr. SPARKS. I make the point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. SPARKS. My point of order is that there is an increase of $500 for which there is no law, and it is not in the interest of economy.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Before the gentleman makes the point of order, I ask that he will at least hear me while I state the reasons why I offer the amendment.

Mr. SPARKS. I am willing to hear the gentleman, of course.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The bill makes a distinct appropriation for the Tonkawa Indians. This amendment increases that particular appropriation. If there be any law authorizing this appropriation at all, it is in order for the committee to now increase it.

Mr. ACKLEN. I should not have felt it necessary to have occupied to so great an extent the time of this committee had it not been for the statements which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] saw fit to make in regard to this portion of Rule XXI. The ruling which the Clerk has just read settles the question beyond all dispute.

I wish now to say, since I have been forced to disagree with the gentleman, that on two other points in connection with the consideration of private bills in this House I most heartily concur with him. I think that a rule which permits a majority of this House to do away with the consideration of private business on a day which should be consecrated, I might almost say, to private business—that is, Friday—is entirely wrong. I think the rule should be so framed as to require a vote of two-thirds of this House to proceed to the consideration of public business on a day which should be devoted solely to the consideration of private business. If we are not to establish a court for the consideration of the claims of the citizens of the United States, then in the name of justice let us at least give them a fair hearing in this House.

RULE XXII.

Clause 2 of this rule, which reads as follows:

2. Any petition or memorial excluded under this rule shall be returned to the member from whom it was received; and petitions which have been inappropriately referred may, by direction of the committee having possession of the same, be properly referred in the manner originally presented—

I think is wrong. It provides that a petition which has been misdirected by a member of this House shall be permitted to go to some other committee solely by the direction of the committee that chances to have possession of it. I am of the opinion that the petition should be returned to the House, and that it should be for the House alone to decide to what committee that petition should be referred.

RULE XXIII.

In regard to clause 3 of Rule XXIII, I desire to call the attention of members for a few moments to an amendment proposed by the honorable gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. OSCAR TURNER.] I ask the Clerk to read the proposed amendment, with the remarks of Mr. TURNER upon it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Chairman, there is one other amendment which I desire to offer about which there may be some contrariety of opinion. In regard to the other I think there will be none. Clause 3 of Rule XXIII, as embraced in this revision, provides that—

"All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriation to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced."

That is very good so far as it goes; but I would like to add, "and upon all such bills, motions, or propositions, the yeas and nays shall be taken in the House upon their final passage, and they must be voted for by a majority of all the members elected, and the vote entered on the Journal."

Mr. ACKLEN. I hardly think the gentleman from Kentucky, at the time he made that suggestion to this House, took into consideration the fact that we have here hundreds of bills making appropriations of different amounts, all of which would come under the sweeping provisions of his amendment. From an examination which I have made I ascertain that upward of one thousand bills in the Forty-fifth Congress would come under the provisions of his amendment. It takes about half an hour to call the yeas and nays; so that to take the yeas and nays on these one thousand bills would occupy five hundred hours. Now we all know that we have daily about three hours and a half for the business of legislation, excluding the morning hour; so that this calling of the yeas and nays would occupy one hundred and forty-three legislative days; in other words, over six months would be actually consumed in calling the yeas and nays. It is unnecessary for me to say that this would not be in the interest of economy; and it would tend very greatly to obstruct the legislation of this House. I therefore dismiss the suggestion without further remark.

In clause 4 of the same rule, which reads as follows:

4. In Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the bills on the Calendar shall be taken up in their order, but when objection is made to the consideration of a bill, a majority of the House shall decide without debate whether it shall be disposed of or laid aside for the present—there is clearly an omission on the part of the committee to insert after the word "bill," in the third line, some provision for deciding whether a measure shall be considered by the Committee of the Whole when objection is raised. The language reads:

But when objection is made to the consideration of a bill—

Where? In the Committee of the Whole—

a majority of the House shall decide whether it shall be disposed of or laid aside for the present.

Clearly here is what might be termed an hiatus. What shall be done when an objection is made to the consideration of a bill in the Committee of the Whole? Some provision must be made that the chairman or a member shall be permitted to ask that the committee rise and that the bill be reported back to the House for a decision whether the Committee of the Whole shall take it into consideration or not.

Now, at the close of clause 5 of the same rule, which reads as follows:

5. When general debate is closed by order of the House, any member shall be allowed five minutes to explain any amendment he may offer, after which the member who shall first obtain the floor shall be allowed to speak five minutes in opposition to it, and there shall be no further debate thereon; but the same privilege of debate shall be allowed in favor of and against any amendment that may be offered to an amendment; and neither an amendment nor an amendment to an amendment shall be withdrawn by the mover thereof unless by the unanimous consent of the committee—

we find a provision that—

Neither an amendment nor an amendment to an amendment shall be withdrawn by the mover thereof unless by the unanimous consent of the committee.

Referring back to Rule XIX we see that an amendment may be offered to an amendment, then a substitute may be offered, and finally one amendment will be entertained to the substitute. Under the provisions of clause 5 of Rule XXIII, five minutes' debate is permitted to the member advocating an amendment and five minutes to the member opposing it. It has been the practice and rule of the House to permit formal amendments to be withdrawn; but under the rule as reported by the committee it would be in the power of any member of the Committee of the Whole to object to a formal amendment being withdrawn. Under such circumstances the effect would be clearly to cut off debate at that point. Such was not the intention of the rule. It should be so amended that no amendment shall be withdrawn by the mover thereof if opposed by the majority of the committee.

RULE XXXII.

I now desire the attention of members for a few moments to Rule XXXII. This rule provides for the drawing of seats. I send to the Clerk's desk to be read a substitute which at the proper time I shall offer for that rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

SUBSTITUTE FOR RULE XXXII.

The Clerk shall at the commencement of each Congress prepare a list of the members thereof, arranging same in an order to be governed by the number of terms said members may have served. The member who has served the greatest number of terms in Congress shall be placed first on said list, and the others according to their terms of service. Where two or more members have served an equal number of terms, the Clerk shall arrange their names, as also the names of members elected to their first term, in alphabetical order. The Clerk shall then read the names from said list in regular order, commencing with the first, and when a member's name is called he shall be entitled to select his seat.

Mr. ACKLEN. It will be necessary that clause 2 of the same rule should be amended in keeping with what the Clerk has just read. It is as follows:

2. Before said selection shall commence, each seat shall be vacated and so remain until selected under this rule, and any seat having been selected shall be deemed forfeited if left unoccupied before the call of the roll is finished, and whenever the seats of Members and Delegates shall have been selected, no proposition for a second selection shall be in order during the same Congress.

I think it would be in the interest of legislation to permit the older members of Congress to have seats where they can conduct legislation more satisfactorily to the country than they possibly can under the rule as it now exists. I have seen old members of this House forced, under the lottery system, to occupy seats at the very rear of the Hall; so that they would be obliged to swap round with the new members in order to get an eligible place for taking part in the business of the House.

I had very much more to say in connection with several other rules; but as my time is limited I desire only to call the attention of the committee to that portion of the report of Rule XI around which most of the debate has rotated, so to speak.

RULE XI.

There have been three distinct propositions made in connection with this rule; one from the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] who said:

At the proper time I propose to offer an amendment to Rule XI, striking out the words:

"But they shall report the bill known as the river and harbor bill for reference to the Committee on Appropriations."

And I shall move further to amend by inserting after the word "commerce," in the seventh clause of the rule, the following:

"And the Committee on Commerce shall have the same privilege to report all bills making appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors as is accorded to the Committee on Appropriations in reporting the general appropriation bills."

That is simply the rule of the House as it now stands by the action of this House.

Another by the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. HOOKER,] who submitted the following:

Mr. HOOKER. I offer as a substitute for the pending proposition what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Resolved, That the committee to revise and reform the rules of this House be, and they are hereby, instructed to report at an early day an amendment of the rules of the House so as to provide—

"First. That the Committee on Military Affairs shall receive the estimates and report the bills for the annual support of the Army of the United States, and receive the estimates and report the bill for the annual support of the Military Academy at West Point.

"Second. That the Committee on Naval Affairs shall receive the estimates and report the appropriation bills for the annual support of the Navy of the United States.

"Third. That the Committee on Foreign Affairs shall receive the estimates and report the appropriation bill for the maintenance and support of the diplomatic and consular system of the United States.

"Fourth. That the Committee on Indian Affairs shall receive the estimates and report the appropriation bill for carrying out the treaties and obligations of the Government of the United States with the various Indian tribes.

"Fifth. That the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads shall receive the estimates and make the appropriation for support of the Post-Office Department of the Government.

"Sixth. That the Committee on Commerce shall receive the estimates of the Engineer Department and introduce the annual appropriation bill for improvement of rivers and harbors.

"Seventh. That the Committee on Invalid Pensions shall report the appropriation bill for the payment of pensions.

"Eighth. That the Committee on Appropriations shall receive the estimates and report the appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the Government, and the sundry civil service bill and all deficiency bills.

"Ninth. That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be authorized to report all appropriation bills for such public buildings as the needs of the Government may require."

And lastly, the amendment by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SHALLENBERGER,] which is as follows:

"All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows, namely: Subjects relating—

"1. To the election of members: to the Committee on Elections;

"2. To the revenue and the bonded debt of the United States: to the Committee on Ways and Means;

"3. To appropriation of the revenue for the support of the Government: to the Committee on Appropriations;

"4. To judicial proceedings, civil and criminal law: to the Committee on the Judiciary;

"5. To banking and currency: to the Committee on Banking and Currency;

"6. To coinage, weights, and measures: to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures;

"7. To commerce: to the Committee on Commerce, [but they shall report the bill known as the river and harbor bill, for reference to the Committee on Appropriations;]

"8. To agriculture: to the Committee on Agriculture;

"9. To the relations of the United States with foreign nations: to the Committee on Foreign Affairs;

"10. To the military establishment and the public defense, other than the appropriations for its support: to the Committee on Military Affairs;

"11. To the naval establishment, other than the appropriations for its support: to the Committee on Navel Affairs;

"12. To the Post-Office and post-roads other than appropriations for their support: to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads;

"13. To the lands of the United States: to the Committee on the Public Lands;

"14. To the relations of the United States with the Indians and Indian tribes: to the Committee on Indian Affairs;

"15. To territorial legislation, the revision thereof, and affecting Territories or the admission of States: to the Committee on the Territories;

"16. To railways and canals other than Pacific railroads: to the Committee on Railways and Canals;

"17. To the manufacturing industries: to the Committee on Manufactures;

"18. To the mining interests: to the Committee on Mines and Mining;

"19. To the public buildings and occupied or improved grounds of the United States other than appropriations therefor: to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds;

"20. To the railroads and telegraphic lines between the Mississippi River and the Pacific coast: to the Committee on Pacific Railroads; to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River;

"21.

"22. To education and labor: to the Committee on Education and Labor;

"23. To the militia of the several States: to the Committee on the Militia;

"24. To patents: to the Committee on Patents;

"25. To the pensions of the civil war: to the Committee on Invalid Pensions;

"26. To the pensions of all the wars of the United States other than the civil war: to the Committee on Pensions;

"27. To private and domestic claims and demands whatsoever, other than war claims, against the United States: to the Committee of Claims;

"28. To claims arising from any war in which the United States has been engaged: to the Committee on War Claims;

"29. To private claims to lands: to the Committee on Private Land Claims;

"30. To the District of Columbia: to the Committee on the District of Columbia."

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I now ask the Clerk to read the amendments which I propose.

The Clerk read as follows:

"RULE XI.

"Clause 3.—Amend clause 3 by adding the words 'And the several appropriation bills, when reported to the House by the committees in which they originate, shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations to be reported back to the House after due consideration, with such recommendations as the general expenditures of the Government require them to make, and the committee in which the bill originated shall thereupon have charge of it and upon its passage.'

"Clause 7.—Amend clause 7 so as to read: 'To commerce: to the Committee on Commerce; and this committee shall receive the estimates and report the annual appropriation bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors for reference to the Committee on Appropriations.'

"Clause 9.—Amend clause 9 by adding the words 'and this committee shall report the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill for reference to the Committee on Appropriations.'

"Clause 10.—Amend clause 10 by striking out the words 'other than appropriations for its support,' and adding to the clause the words 'and this committee shall report the annual appropriation bills for the support of the Army and the Military Academy at West Point, for reference to the Committee on Appropriations.'

"Clause 11.—Amend clause 11 by striking out the words 'other than appropriations for its support,' and adding to the clause the words 'and this committee shall report the annual appropriation bill for the support of the Navy, for reference to the Committee on Appropriations.'

"Clause 12.—Amend clause 12 by striking out the words 'other than appropriations for its support,' and adding the words 'and this committee shall report the annual appropriation bills for the service of the Post-Office Department, and for mail transportation by ocean steamers, for reference to the Committee on Appropriations.'

"Clause 14.—Amend clause 14 by adding the words 'and this committee shall report the annual appropriations for expenses of the Indian Department, and for carrying out the treaties and obligations of the Government with the Indian tribes, for reference to the Committee on Appropriations.'

"Clause 19.—Amend clause 19 by striking out the words 'other than appropriations therefor,' and adding the words 'and this committee shall report all appropriations therefor, for reference to the Committee on Appropriations.'

"Clause 25.—Amend clause 25 by adding the words 'and this committee shall report the annual appropriation bill for the payment of invalid and other pensions, for reference to the Committee on Appropriations.'

"Clause 30.—Amend clause 30 by adding the words 'and this committee shall report all appropriations therefor, for reference to the Committee on Appropriations.'"

I do not propose to discuss at length the merits and demerits of these several amendments, but I submit the following propositions: First, whether the river and harbor bill is properly an exception to the rule relative to other appropriation bills; secondly, whether any practical good is to be gained by reporting it first to the Committee on Appropriations; and lastly, why the Committee on Appropriations can properly report the other bills, and not the river and harbor bill?

Clause 3 of Rule XXI, which I have already discussed, says:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be offered as an amendment thereto, for any expenditures not previously authorized by law.

Now, the fact is well known to members of the House that the river and harbor bill does appropriate money for improvements which have not been previously authorized by law. Hence, by the very rule which I have read, it is taken out of the strict construction of a general appropriation bill, and stands as an anomaly—a law unto itself—when considered with other appropriation bills. The river and harbor bill may contain provisions appropriating money for objects and public works already in progress. To that extent, and to that extent only, does it come under the provisions of the rule which I have read. I therefore maintain that it is an exception to the general appropriation bills, and there is no force in the position of some members that the river and harbor bill, being an appropriation bill, shall receive from the Committee on Appropriations the same consideration given to other appropriation bills.

Now I proceed to consider whether any practical good is to be gained by reporting this bill first to the Committee on Appropriations.

The Committee on Commerce in the preparation of the river and harbor bill have from eighteen hundred to two thousand closely printed pages of reports of the Engineer Department to read. I have in my desk the last report which has been made, and gentlemen can see for themselves what a volume it makes. It is necessary for members of that committee to read, and carefully read, every report which has been made before they can proceed to the careful and proper preparation of the river and harbor bill. Let the Committee on Commerce report an eight-million-dollar bill to the Committee on Appropriations and that committee may consider it necessary to cut it down $2,000,000; in other words, to scale it 25 per cent. They have not the time, however good their intention may be, to examine in detail each appropriation and see where the money can be properly reduced in amount. On the contrary they will be forced by the very nature of the case to scale all appropriations 25 per cent. That would work very great hardship, and it would be very much against the interests of the country.

Some appropriations are, for instance, on the eve of being completed. There may be a light-house requiring $100,000 which the Committee on Commerce have decided to complete, and they appropriate the money necessary for that purpose. The Committee on Appropriations by scaling all the appropriations 25 per cent. would reduce it to $75,000 and the work would not be completed. In the course of several years the winds and waves, which bide no man's coming or going, will destroy from $25,000 to $50,000 of the work already done. Therefore it must clearly appear to any man who will give this subject his careful consideration that it would be against the interests of the country and the interests of the Government to permit the Committee on Appropriations to scale a river and harbor bill without knowledge of its details, and to acquire a thorough knowledge of its details would require the same time as it does of the Committee on Commerce to prepare the bill.

There is one other question in this case, and that is why the Committee on Appropriations can properly report the other appropriation bills and cannot report the river and harbor appropriation bill. Every appropriation bill presented to this House, with the exception of this anomalous bill I have just mentioned, is authorized by law. The Committee on Military Affairs if they choose to increase the Army make a report to the House; the Committee on Appropriations receive the estimates from the Department and they appropriate accordingly; the Committee on Naval Affairs may do the same thing, and in all these cases the Committee on Appropriations have to deal solely and only with figures and estimates—it costs so much to feed the Army, it costs so much to clothe it. Those are questions of detail which are as well known to the Department as they can possibly be known to any member of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Therefore the preparation of the other bills which are presented by the Committee on Appropriations to this House has nothing more in them than simple addition and subtraction. They have to add up so much, and they have to deduct from that so much, and they appropriate the money accordingly, and report the bill to the House. This is not the case with the river and harbor bill. It cannot be the case with a river and harbor bill from the very nature of the bill itself. Therefore I say it would not be in the interest of the country, it would not be in the interest of the Government, it would not be even in the interest of that much-talked-of economy which is constantly dinned in our ears, I regret to say, by so many members of my own party who seem to think it the acme of statesmanship to sit down on the lid of the Treasury and not let a dollar get out of it. On the contrary, I am an advocate for liberal expenditure always, providing the money is appropriated for laudable purposes.

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Chairman, looking at this question of the rules for the government of the representatives of the people, it seems to me that we, as a legislative body, should seek to adopt that code for our government in the transaction of the people's business that shall conduce to the most practical, expeditious, and judicious disposition of it. And it seems to me, as a new member, looking at what would be and should be the mode of procedure, that the most feasible policy that will enable us to transact the business for which we come here as the representatives of the people would be, so far as may be practicable, to equalize the labors of all the Representatives upon this floor by distributing the work to be performed to the various committees in an equal and proper proportion for their consideration. When we look at the code of rules we now have, that by which the House of Representatives has long been governed, it most clearly appears that the original purpose in framing these rules was to distribute the labors of the House among the several committees, that the work which we were sent here to perform may be done in some reasonable time. Under the practice, however, it seems that a small number of committees, not exceeding three, have by some means or other seized upon and appropriated to themselves the powers not only of the various committees but the powers of the House of Representatives itself.

This, however, Mr. Chairman, does not grow out of the letter or the spirit or the purpose of the rules as originally established, and I cannot help but think that if a stranger who had never looked into the rules of the House of Representatives nor informed himself as to the number of committees constituted upon this floor—I say if a stranger had been here without information first acquired, and listened to the debates as they have proceeded on this subject, he would naturally have come to the conclusion that there were but two committees belonging to the House of Representatives, the Committee on Commerce and the Committee on Appropriations. Because, I submit whether nine-tenths of what has been said between these two committees striking and sparring at each other is as to how far the one or the other should be permitted to control the legislation of this body.

A MEMBER. The gentleman forgets the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. HOUK. I ask pardon of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. HORR.] I did forget his committee.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me in debating these revised rules we should be careful not to incorporate and adopt the idea that has been foreshadowed through the entire debate, that all the work of the House, so far as committees are concerned, is to be confined to these two—the one on Appropriations and the other on Commerce. As I understood the representatives of these two committees, they come here and tell us they are overworked. The representatives of the Committee on Appropriations and of the Committee on Commerce both tell us each of these committees is overworked, and their members have more than they are able to do. If that be so, Mr. Chairman, as a practical legislator I want to submit the question to this House whether it is wise to keep these committees overworked, leaving the vast body of the majority of the committees of the House without anything to do. As was said by the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] the other day, his Committee on Manufactures had but one bill in eighteen years, and then another committee had stolen that. [Laughter.]

I ask the Clerk to read Rule 79.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE 79. It shall be the duty of the Committee on Commerce to take into consideration all such petitions and matters and things touching the commerce of the United States as shall be presented or shall or may come in question and be referred to them by the House, and to report from time to time their opinion thereon.

Mr. HOUK. In the way of criticism I desire to call the attention of the House. Mr. Chairman, under that rule the Committee on Commerce has jurisdiction of the harbors. It has jurisdiction of all seaports and coastwise commerce. The Committee on Commerce, under that rule, could only seize hold of inland rivers, railroads, and other means of transportation, under the term "commerce," by a very violent misconstruction of the language. Yet, sir, as I understand, and notwithstanding there is still another rule giving to another committee entire jurisdiction over the question of railways and canals and navigable rivers, this Committee on Commerce, not under the letter of the law, and not under its spirit, not by any legitimate intendment, but by forced construction, has taken jurisdiction and assumed to itself to control the entire question of navigable rivers. For the purpose of showing what was the original intention and object of the rule itself I ask the Clerk to read Rule 94.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE 94. It shall be the duty of the Committee on Railways and Canals to take into consideration all such petitions and matters or things relating to roads and canals, and the improvement of the navigation of rivers, as shall be presented, or may come in question, and be referred to them by the House; and to report thereupon, together with such propositions relative thereto as to them shall seem expedient.

Mr. HOUK. I desire to call attention, Mr. Chairman, to the fact that the jurisdiction of the Committee on Railways and Canals is as clearly defined over the navigable rivers of the country as its jurisdiction over the question of railways and canals. Yet by some forced construction the Committee on Commerce reaches forth and takes hold of that question of navigable rivers, but has not assumed to take jurisdiction over railways and canals for the reason, I presume, they wish only to take a part at one time and afterward expect to reach out and take hold of and control what is left.

I submit to the House whether under this rule, which has stood here for years, every bill looking to the improvement of the navigable rivers of the country, taken under the control of the Committee on Commerce, has not been done in violation of this rule and outside of the letter and spirit of the law, and whether it is not really on the part of that committee a usurpation of power. I submit to the members of this House whether that practice hereafter shall continue. For if they, the Committee on Commerce, can take jurisdiction of the navigable rivers under Rule 79, why not of railways and canals? Railways and canals are much more heroic and enlarged methods for facilitating commerce than navigable rivers, and if the word "commerce" is to be so expanded and so enlarged as to embrace navigable rivers, I appeal to the House whether it should not also include railways and canals.

This Committee on Rules has had this question under consideration, and in reference to the report of that committee I am willing to echo every encomium based upon that. That committee takes the same view of this question that I do. They take the same view of the original rule and of the authority of each committee as was taken the other day by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. CABELL,] and which I take to-day.

When they come to prepare Rule XI and decide what powers the committee shall have, this wise and good and able committee which has done a great service to this House and the country in preparing the report and the rules they have submitted—this Committee on Rules recognize the law as it now stands, and as it has existed, that the Committee on Railways and Canals has jurisdiction of this question of navigable rivers, and seek to do by the enactment of this Rule XI, clause 16, what the Committee on Commerce has been doing by usurpation for lo these many years. In defining the powers and duties of the Committee on Railways and Canals, in defining what they shall have jurisdiction of, what shall be referred to them, they omit this Rule 94, which I have had read at the Clerk's desk, and substitute therefor this clause:

To railways and canals other than Pacific railroads: to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

All subjects relating to railways and canals other than Pacific railroads shall be referred to that committee. Now, what I propose, and what I think would be maintaining the original jurisdiction of this committee, keeping the letter of the law as it now is and maintaining its jurisdiction as it formerly was, would be to insert:

To the improvement of the navigation of rivers, and to railways and canals other than Pacific railroads.

Thus leaving with the Committee on Railways and Canals the original jurisdiction that it now holds by virtue of the rule as it stands in the existing rules of the House, and as it has stood for many years.

In this connection I will not occupy the time of the committee in reading Rule 76, or having it read; but I desire to call the attention of the House and of the members of the committee to that Rule 76, defining what shall be the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations as it now exists. There is not a sentence, not a line, not a word, not a letter, that can be tortured into giving the Committee on Appropriations that jurisdiction of the question to which it now seeks to commit this House by the adoption of these new rules as reported; thus taking an entirely new departure, laying down new grounds, reaching out after and taking an entirely new and original jurisdiction on these subjects, and especially the jurisdiction over the river and harbor bill. What seems to me would be more practicable would be to leave the Committee on Commerce its original jurisdiction, which was to look after the harbors and the foreign commerce of the country, that outside commerce that has swollen so largely and is now building up and making this country so great a commercial nation in its trade with the outside world; and to leave to the Committee on Railways and Canals its original jurisdiction, to look after railways and canals inland, and to look after the navigable rivers inland. We would thus more equally divide and distribute the labor, and then the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] will not be coming into this House complaining of being overburdened and overworked with so great a stress of labor. From a tender regard for the gentleman I propose in connection with the other committees of the House to take part of the burden off his shoulders and help him to do part of the work.

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman will permit me I will say that I have never complained of the amount of work I have done before the House or anywhere else.

Mr. HOUK. Then I misunderstood the gentleman. I know this, that he has said a great deal about the amount of work devolving on the Committee on Commerce, about the time they devoted to it, and about there being so many thousand pages they had to wade through. But now I want to lighten that burden and to do that gentleman a favor by distributing the labor among the various committees of the House so that every man can come forward and do his portion of the labor, and thus the committees may better transact the business of the people and prepare the legislation that comes before the House. For the presumption is, Mr. Chairman, that we all come here as equals. The presumption is that we are all qualified to discharge the duties for which we were sent here.

Mr. HUMPHREY. That is a violent presumption.

Mr. HOUK. That may be a violent presumption for Wisconsin, but it is not so for all parts of the country. But the presumption is that the representatives of the people are capable of discharging the duties for which the people sent them here. And if that be so, I ask by what system of legislation, by what right should two or three committees seize upon and control the business of this House of Representatives to the exclusion of the voice of the people's representatives, as is done to-day? Every gentleman on this floor knows I utter but a truth when I say that the power is concentrated in these few committees, and that a handful of men can control the legislation of the country and prevent the people's representatives from taking part in it.

Why, Mr. Chairman, in listening to this debate every man is bound to be impressed with this thought: That the idea conceived by the Committee on Rules has been that it would not do to trust any other committee except, singly and alone, the Committee on Appropriations. While that is no doubt an able and a conscientious committee I do not concede that it embodies all the wisdom or virtue of this House. But it seems that the people's representatives are not to be trusted; that the other committees are not to be trusted; that there is some sort of design peering up and presenting itself; that the Committee on Appropriations is set up as a kind of guardian angel here in the House of Representatives to look after the other committees and the people's representatives and see that they do no wrong.

Well, now, Mr. Chairman, whatever may be the fate of these rules, whatever may be the fate of this discussion, I am in favor first of each committee having its rightful powers and jurisdiction restored to it. But under no circumstances, if the various committees cannot have the jurisdiction that rightfully belongs to them—for instance, if the Committee on Railways and Canals cannot retain its jurisdiction over the improvement of navigable rivers, as I insist it should—under no circumstances will I vote to require the Committee on Commerce, if it retains the control of this question, to report to the Committee on Appropriations, because it strikes my mind as a self-evident fact that the committee that makes up this bill knows more about the necessities of the country and the demand for improvements than any appropriations committee to which the bill may be referred, and in the very nature of things only casually and imperfectly considered.

There is another argument made here to which I wish to advert. It is this: it seems to be the desire of some who advocate the proposition that the report of the Committee on Commerce shall be made to the Committee on Appropriations, to place the power in the hands of the Committee on Appropriations, because, forsooth, they are not so friendly to the river and harbor appropriation bills as may be some other committees, the Committee on Commerce for instance. It has struck my mind all through this whole discussion that if this is designed for the purpose of placing the power in the hands of the Committee on Appropriations to stop all improvement of rivers and harbors, it is designed to strike at the real prosperity of the country; because it seems to me that there can be nothing that will contribute to the upbuilding and the advancement and the glory of this country to a greater degree than by extending the means of transportation to meet the increased wants of the growing commerce of the country.

Now, if I had no other reason I should have desired to have spoken upon this subject in order to say, once for all, in this connection that while I do not desire to vote away the people's money for improper purposes, or to squander the money of the people, and while I desire to see it properly applied for honest purposes, yet on every occasion and under all circumstances when the opportunity is presented to build up the commerce of the country by improving the navigation of its rivers and opening up its harbors, so as to increase the means of communication, I will vote for it and hold myself responsible to my constituents for that vote. I am in favor of improving every river in the country where it will improve our commerce, and thus increase the prosperity of the people. Money thus expended is a valuable investment, and will return tenfold interest. Let our navigable rivers be improved and open up a way for increased industries.

Mr. HUMPHREY. There is where you agree with Wisconsin again.

Mr. HOUK. I knew that I agreed with Wisconsin in a great many things.

Again, just in this connection, it seems to me that the latter clause of section 3 of Rule XXI, as reported by the Committee on Rules, ought by all means to be stricken out and not adopted by this House. That clause reads:

> Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

Now, to my mind the injustice of that clause consists largely in this: these appropriation bills are made up in committee, and the representatives of the people have no voice in their preparation. It may be that nine-tenths of all the members of this House are in favor of placing upon such a bill some clause that would be for the benefit of their constituents, in the nature of an appropriation or otherwise. Yet here is a provision that makes it the imperative duty of the presiding officer to rule any such clause out of order. I say it is unjust, anti-republican, and opposed to all the principles of representative government, and smacks more of tyranny than of justice.

I am constrained also to oppose the rule proposed by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ACKLEN] for two or three reasons. As I understand the proposed rule, sent to the Clerk's desk and read as a part of this code of laws for the government of this House, that gentleman proposes to give the first choice in the drawing of seats to those who happened to have been elected the oftenest. Now, I have great respect for any gentleman whose constituents continue to send him to Congress. It is a strong evidence that he has a lodgment in the minds of the people who vote.

But I was taught, and that was one of the principal reasons why I have had an ambition, for lo these many years, to come to Congress, that when I should get here I would find that the representatives of the people were still Americans, imbued with American ideas and engaged in American practices; in other words, that we all stood upon an exact level of perfect equality so far as nature would allow. But here is a proposition coming from the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. ACKLEN,] that would establish an aristocracy in the House of Representatives. Why, sir, we have heard of the empire; we have heard of the third term; we have heard of the danger of losing republican liberty; yet the first proposition looking to the establishment of an aristocracy in this House comes, not from a third-termer at all, but from the other side of the House. The proposition is, that because forsooth some gentlemen are returned to Congress oftener than others they shall have a kind of aristocratic right to be seated wherever they may choose. Now, I am opposed not so particularly to the third term as I am to this principle of erecting an aristocracy in the House of Representatives and placing one member above another, simply because he has been elected oftener.

Mr. ACKLEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOUK. With pleasure.

Mr. ACKLEN. Is it not, as a matter of fact, the rule and the custom for the Speaker of the House to appoint upon the most important committees of the House those members who have served long terms of service in this House?

Mr. HOUK. That may be true, but it is not the rule; it is simply a matter of discretion with the Speaker. Not only as a Representative from his district and a member of this House, but a representative of the American people, he exercises his discretion to select the best material for the best work. I apprehend that there might be some men elected and returned here until they were as old as Methuselah, and they never would be selected for places on the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ACKLEN. I will ask the gentleman also if the practice has not obtained of giving to the old members of the House—I do not refer to their age but to their length of service—the best seats or rather the choice of seats? Was not that the original custom of this House of Representatives?

Mr. HOUK. That may be true.

Mr. ACKLEN. And have we not changed to the lottery system, departing from the rule established at the foundation of this Government?

Mr. HOUK. There were a great many things established at the foundation of this Government which time and experience and observation and the wisdom of mature years have developed to be wrong.

Mr. ACKLEN. Yes, the electoral commission for one. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOUK. I was not in favor of the electoral commission myself. I thought the Vice-President ought to count him in and declare him President. [Laughter.] I mean, provided he had the votes.

I will refer to only one other feature of this rule, and then I will yield the floor to my friend from Wisconsin, [Mr. WILLIAMS.] The proposition is that after seniority of service has been taken into consideration, the names shall be arranged alphabetically, commencing with the letter A. Under that arrangement, of course, the gentleman from Louisiana would always have a good seat. But I am opposed to the proposition, because while he would always have a good seat, what would become of poor WILLIAMS and VALENTINE? [Laughter.] They would be thrown on the outskirts.

Mr. ACKLEN. The gentleman from Wisconsin, who has served one term longer than myself, would rank me by probably twenty or thirty seats.

Mr. HOUK. Still the men whose names happen to begin with V or W would fare badly. But, to recast the whole matter for a moment, it does seem to me that as practical men we should try to distribute the labors of this House in such a way among the several committees that all can join in them and in the preparation necessary for the legislation of the country. To equalize these labors is to hasten the business of the people.

I yield the remainder of my time to my friend from Wisconsin, [Mr. WILLIAMS.]

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I am obliged to my friend from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK] for his courtesy. I can heartily concur with most of the gentlemen who have spoken in this debate that the Committee on Rules are entitled to great credit for the compilation which they have given us. The arrangement is simple; and the language plain and concise. As I understand the scope of a general debate of this nature it is or should be for the purpose of exchanging views and making general suggestions. My own idea is that hour speeches are altogether too long for such a debate, and that five minutes would be too short. If the entire time occupied by this debate had been confined to ten-minute or fifteen-minute speeches, we should have had a far better analysis and understanding of this code of rules than we have, though of course able and interesting speeches have been delivered.

I propose only to make a few general suggestions, in which I do not feel entire confidence myself. I am rather glad that my time comes so near the hour for adjournment; and I shall feel it no discourtesy if any gentleman prefers to go to dinner rather than to listen to what I may suggest. My only object is to get certain suggestions and amendments into the RECORD that gentlemen may give them such attention as they may be disposed to.

The other day I chanced to hear two distinguished and able gentlemen of this House discussing whether it would not be a good plan to plant guns on the top of this building to be discharged for the purpose of informing absent members when the House lacked a quorum! Mr. Chairman, whether the walls of the building would withstand the recoil of the guns or not, we must concede that it would save mileage on the part of the Sergeant-at-Arms. I am not sure that my friends were serious about it; but since I have been a member here one thing has frequently forced itself upon my mind. It is this: If "order" be "heaven's first law," it is equally true that if we are to get the best work from the combined ability and judgment of this body such order should be preserved during the business sessions of the House as will enable each member to hear what is being said and done. But both tradition and custom seem to have ordained that no such order should be preserved here, except, at least, in case of the death or funeral of a member! Now, what has often occurred to me is this: whether it would not be a good plan to plant a swivel gun charged with grape and canister on the desk in front of the Speaker and give him liberal discretion to fire! [Laughter.] But of course I do not suppose that suggestion can be adopted. In fact I am not just sure that I would vote for it myself. [Renewed laughter.] Now, sir, I speak in no spirit of fulsome flattery when I say that in my opinion no Speaker or occupant of that chair has on the whole succeeded in preserving better order during the sessions of this House than our present Speaker; but it has occurred to me, as I doubt not it has to others, that if he, with the decision and power of will which characterize him, should, when noise and confusion are reigning supreme here, sit firmly back in his seat and declare to this House and the country that the public business should not proceed until order was restored and maintained, and then adhere to it unflinchingly, though he sat through an entire day's session, I believe a blessing would be conferred upon Congress and the country such as it seldom falls to one man to bestow. Of course he could not do it without the co-operation of members; but if it were understood that this new departure was to be tried I believe he would have the hearty co-operation of a majority, or of all the members of this House. I do not mean that the Speaker would be expected to preside over us like a schoolmaster, but that such reasonable order might be maintained that the business before the House could be fairly understood. Of course I throw this out only as a suggestion, and with a feeling of deference to the House and distrust in my own judgment. I know the potency of the reply when any innovation upon these customs is attempted. It is, "Oh, it has always been so!"

Why, sir, four years ago I attempted by introducing a resolution to dispense with reading the given names of members upon the roll-call. I was assured and I believe in the utmost good faith by friends all around me here that it would never do; that the practice had always been the other way; and should the change be made the rights of the minority would be wrecked! That we wanted time to get members in, &c. I confess that the shock was so sudden and startling to me that in absolute fright I consented that the resolution might be referred, instead of pressing a suspension of the rules as I had expected to do. Mr. Chairman, after regaining my composure, I introduced that resolution at three successive sessions, and finally the Committee on Rules took hold of it, reported it favorably, and advocated its passage. And I am happy to know that, although it has been in force a half a year or more, the walls of the Capitol have not fallen in, the minority are still on deck, and the change saves from fifteen to twenty minutes on each roll-call.

I am glad to say that the committee have gone even further in this proposed revision, and struck off the prefix "Mr.," thus saving still more the voice and lungs of our reading clerks, so sorely taxed at times. Yes, Mr. Chairman, custom is strong here, as it is everywhere. Why, I have often wanted to make a suggestion, but I really dare not, that a duplicate clock be placed over the Speaker's chair, in order that when a member is addressing the chair his eye would unconsciously measure the time allowed him. But I knew if I suggested it I should be told that "it had always been the other way; that 'grandfather's clock' had always stood in the upper gallery at our back;" and that it was one of the indispensable requirements of this House that if a member presumed to address it he must pause in his remarks, wring his neck half around, take a look at the clock, and then inquire: "How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?"

Passing from this, I am glad to say that had this Committee on Rules done nothing else, in my judgment they are entitled to a vote of thanks for bringing into prominence this one passage from Jefferson, to be found on page 14 of the report:

A settled order of business is, however, necessary for the government of the presiding officer and to restrain individual members from calling up favorite measures or matters under their special patronage out of their just turn. It is useful also for directing the discretion of the House when they are moved to take up a particular matter to the prejudice of others having priority of right to their attention in the general order of business.

Need anybody be told that if a deliberative body is to become familiar with its own rules nothing can so conduce to this as regularity and routine in the transaction of business? The committee have taken a long step in the right direction when they require that there shall be a written report in each case, which shall be printed, and if objection be made every bill reported in the morning hour shall go to its appropriate calendar. I know of no other way, if, indeed, the House is to know what is contained in these reports in time to act intelligently upon the reported bill.

We shall probably meet with one embarrassment, and that is, how to reach certain measures of greater importance than others on the House Calendar, but that I doubt not will in some way be put under the control of the House. If I may be allowed the suggestion, with all deference to the Committee on Rules, I would dispense with the necessity of that one objection, and the morning hour should be employed absolutely in the report of bills and their reference to the proper calendar; then, instead of two or three morning hours being unexpectedly blocked up with some matter not expected to take ten minutes, committees would report regularly and in order, and could get their work before the House in print, at least; then let the rule be amended so as to require that a copy of each report be mailed to members at their rooms, let them arrange such reports in pigeon-holes or alphabetically, and they will always have ready at hand a complete chart of the business of the House without having to look in some cave in this building to find it.

I have another suggestion to make, but with considerable diffidence in my own judgment, for it is rather radical and might get us into more trouble than it would get us out of. It is this: It seems to me, from such observation as I have been able to make while a member here, that, paradoxical as it may seem, one of the most arbitrary, the most dangerous, and pernicious practices is the custom of transacting business by unanimous consent. On the one hand, it throws all the responsibility of objecting upon a single member. A member, having an important interest in charge, does not like to incur the displeasure of other gentlemen, who will be sure to object when such business comes up; but if he does venture to object, believing it to be his duty, he is at once pounced upon by a dozen friends of the measure, and it is not in human nature that he should be expected to hold out, and he generally gives way. And yet it may be of the very highest importance that the objection should be interposed.

On the other hand, it throws into the hands of a single member the power to block the wheels of legislation and throw the public business out of joint, when it is the sincere desire of all others that it go on. I speak in no offensive sense, but members sometimes may be inclined in objecting to take counsel of their obstinacy rather than their higher wisdom.

As unanimous consent throws the House out of joint, so a single objection often does the same thing. If you are to have legislation by so many separate juntas of the House in the form of committees, it might do. But the present practice destroys both committee work and any intelligent deliberation and action in the House.

We all see that a committee charged with the special investigation of an important subject, perhaps empowered to send for persons and papers—that their original function is to furnish information to the House. Now, however painstaking and laborious their work may be upon measures before them for weeks, and perhaps months, when they come in here to report in the morning hour what is the usual condition of things? As a rule members are engaged in opening their morning's mail, writing letters, or engaged in general conversation, and the member in charge of the bill may be a gentleman of consummate ability, but unfortunately has a voice that cannot be heard ten feet from his seat. He states something in good faith, the majority of members do not know what. We soon hear the motion for the previous question. Members look up from their writing or pause in their conversation to inquire, "What is this?" Their neighbors do not know. They do not know. Not a particle of information has come from the committee to them. So each says to the other, with a sad and troubled look, "Well, it is safe to follow the committee or vote no."

Now, Mr. Chairman, would you, would any member of this House, decide on his individual responsibility, sitting as a justice of the peace, a lawsuit involving $100 in a way like that? And yet we decide cases as a deliberative body involving, it may be, thousands, if not millions, in precisely that way. Take the other case. Supposing some member chooses to stampede the House and shout "Fraud!" or "A job!" Ignorance here, as everywhere, is the parent of panic, and the painstaking and intelligent labor of a committee for months is wrecked in a minute!

Again, matters are proceeding under some order permitting a single member to object. The impulse comes over some one, perhaps myself or any one else, that if his name is ever to be seen in the Associated Press dispatches or the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD he must do something—and he does it!

He "objects," and for the life of him he might not be able to tell why, if required to do so, but his single objection is all-sufficient! His pride is aroused, and he is bound to stand up like a little man! The business of the House is knocked out of joint, and the intelligent labor of the committee ruined or postponed. The attention of the House was beginning to be drawn to the measure; each member was resolving that he would look it up and take an interest in it. But it has gone over! It may not be reached again in a month, or during the entire session. And with this fragmentary treatment of various bills, the time for final adjournment comes. The session goes out, and the same bills are piled in upon us again at the next session by the bushel. Reprinted by the cord! But I must hasten, and will ask the Clerk to read an amendment which I send to his desk, that it may be printed in the RECORD and receive such attention as members may be inclined to give it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to clause 3, Rule XXIV, the following:

Nor shall it be in order for the Speaker to ask that business be transacted by unanimous consent, except to dispense with the reading of papers, grant leave of absence, and present executive communications or other papers or make such communications as are proper for the Speaker to do; but where unanimous consent would otherwise be required to transact business the question, upon motion, shall be decided by the House without debate, which motion shall be subject to a call for the regular order of business by ten or more members, and shall not prevail unless sustained by a two-thirds vote of the members present and voting.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. The purpose I seek to accomplish by that—and I will say to the House I am not sure I have done it—is this: that wherever unanimous consent is now required to take the power out of the hands of one man to object and place it in the hands of ten, so that when the motion is made, if the majority of a committee are desirous of proceeding with the regular business, or any other ten members desire the same thing, they have the power to do so as against this old practice of granting unanimous consent. On the other hand, if ten members do not object the vote of two-thirds of the members shall take the place of old unanimous consent, with this difference, that members in their action would be supported by the real wish and public sentiment of their fellows. The motion, it seems to me, would ordinarily be decided by a viva voce vote, or certainly in most cases by a division.

To illustrate briefly: the question might be asked, Would you prohibit the introduction of bills and resolutions by unanimous consent? Why not? Formerly bills could only be introduced upon the recommendation of a committee. Then Monday was set aside for their introduction on leave; and they are coming in by the thousand, if not ten thousand. But the Speaker is badgered on all hands to consent to recognize members for the introduction of bills and other matters upon unanimous consent. He consents to do it; babel breaks out in front of the Clerk's desk; the order is at the mercy of any member to object; a few of the more daring and persistent ones get in their bills out of order, the others are cut off, and a general feeling of dissatisfaction ensues. By the way, I would like to inquire, if I had sufficiently considered my own question, whether the Journal might not be printed instead of read? And the first thing in the morning after prayer let the Speaker call for corrections of the Journal, which ordinarily would take five minutes, perhaps, instead of fifteen to twenty-five, as now. But, Mr. Chairman, I am almost frightened at my own question.

I speak of another matter with no disrespect to callers on the members of this House; it is a right and a privilege which all should enjoy; but I wish to make a suggestion which I doubt not all callers would willingly and readily conform to when once understood. I embody my suggestion in the form of an amendment which I will send to the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend Rule VIII so that the same will read as follows:

1. Every member shall be present within the Hall of the House during its sittings, unless excused or necessarily prevented; and after the hour of half-past one o'clock p. m. members shall not be called from the Chamber by card or otherwise except when upon special application to the Doorkeeper he may deem it important that they be notified. Every member shall vote on each question put, unless, on motion made before division or the commencement of the roll-call and decided without debate, he shall be excused, or unless he has a direct personal or pecuniary interest in the event of such question.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I believe all reasonable persons will agree that so long as callers on business have almost complete control of our time from the first jingle of the door-bell in the morning until the last sound of the curfew at night, we should have at least a few minutes if not hours during the session of the House when we can attend to the public business without interruption.

Why, Mr. Chairman, you may go out to any one of the three doors leading into this Chamber while the House is in session, and you will see more business being transacted there than on the floor. You fairly have to work yourself through the crowd to get access to this Chamber. Gentlemen say "Refuse to go out, then." But members do not like to do that, though some very distinguished members have adopted that practice, I understand.

But see how the custom works now. A member has charge of an important bill; he is explaining it to the House; you become greatly interested and want to understand it. Just then a card is brought to you; it may be from one of your constituents from home, and it may be from a dead-beat who has bored you almost to death; it may be from an entire stranger to whom you do not wish to be discourteous. At all events there is nothing left but to go. When you return the business has passed to another stage; you lose all interest, and lapse into the normal condition of the average member. If you are industrious you fall to writing letters; if you are genial and social you fall in with the telling of anecdotes which goes on with renewed vigor; but in either case the business of that day's session is an utter loss to you. I have heard it suggested that no cards should be sent in during a session of the House. But it is more convenient to see members here, and an hour and a half for that purpose ought to be sufficient. The amendment will prevent no one from leaving the Chamber, and in case of urgent necessity the Doorkeeper will be sure to inform members, while the great rush will be stopped.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to allude to but one thing further; it is this: We come here and remain the six or eight months. Our legislation is finally boiled down and sent to the conference committees, perhaps at midnight on the last night of the session. They report that the Senate has concurred in No. 16, that the House has receded from No. 20, and that the Senate has agreed to number 25, and so on. The vote is taken and of course the conference report is adopted. We know by experience that many of us have voted for measures in that way of which we knew absolutely nothing, and could never find out till we received the printed statutes at our homes. I simply propose that in these conference reports the amendments shall be so written out that they may be intelligible when the reports come back to the House. I therefore offer the following amendment as a suggestion:

Add to Rule XXIX the following:
And such reports, instead of referring by number to the amendments or propositions agreed to in conference, shall be so written out as to inform the House, from the reading of the report, what effect such amendments or propositions will have upon the measures to which they relate.

Mr. Chairman, I repeat that I have submitted these remarks to the committee as suggestions rather than as mature matters in detail. I believe if some such reforms could be brought about the new members of this House would be encouraged, and many a member who is known to possess a well-drilled mind, who is valuable on committees, whose judgment would carry weight anywhere, would come to the front and the House would have the benefit of his experience, learning, and ability who now shrinks away, first, because he does not happen to possess lungs of brass or a voice of thunder; and second, because he has no taste for that push, self-assertion, and persistency which make men prominent in a street broil. I do not say that men who are entitled to lead us do not as a rule do it now, or that any mere rules can make men prominent who are not naturally so; but I do say that these reforms would go far toward securing the joint deliberate judgment of this House as a part of the American Congress.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CARLISLE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the report of the Committee on Rules on the revision of the rules, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 315) granting a pension to Henry Stanley Wetmore;

An act (S. No. 631) donating six condemned cannon and cannon-balls to Post No. 66, Grand Army of the Republic, of Muncy, Pennsylvania, for monumental purposes; and

An act (S. No. 747) for the relief of Harlow L. Street.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 55) granting a right of way across Water Shops Pond in Springfield, Massachusetts, to the Springfield and New London Railroad Company;

An act (H. R. No. 2053) authorizing the assistant treasurer of the United States at New York to waive the enforcement of section 3477 of the Revised Statutes so far as the same affects certain drafts upon him now held by the Masonic Bank of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; and

An act (H. R. No. 3518) authorizing the importation of articles for exhibition at the millers' international exhibition, to be held at Cincinnati in 1880, free of duty.

MARINE HOSPITAL AT GEORGETOWN, SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, by unanimous consent, reported back, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, a petition for the re-establishment of a marine hospital at Georgetown, South Carolina, and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MONEY, for four days, on account of important business; and

To Mr. HURD, until Monday next.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. HENKLE, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of John Maley, there being no adverse report thereon; also, papers in the case of J. H. Maddox, there being no adverse report thereon.

On motion of Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of James D. Cummings, there being no adverse report thereon.

On motion of Mr. GUNTER, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of Adam Warthman, there being no adverse report thereon.

Mr. ACKLEN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 21, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

VISITORS TO WEST POINT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. EDMUNDS and Mr. GARLAND members of the Board of Visitors on the part of the Senate, to attend the next annual examination of the cadets at the United States Military Academy, at West Point, New York.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 19th instant, a report of Lieutenant-Commander F. E. Chadwick on the foreign system of training seamen for the Navy; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 19th instant, a report of Professor James R. Soley, on the foreign systems of education of naval officers; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting additional papers concerning the payment of the first installment of the annual compensation to James B. Eads for maintenance of the channel at the South Pass, Mississippi River, for the quarter ending October 30, 1879; which, on motion of Mr. BECK, was referred to the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers and a letter from Major William P. Craighill, Corps of Engineers, with its inclosure, being a draught of a proposed act to provide for the operation, maintenance, and repair of the locks and dams of the improvement of the Great Kanawha River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WITHERS presented the petition of Thomas Burroughs, late private Company G, First Regiment Vermont Volunteer Cavalry, praying to be allowed arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MAXEY presented the petition of Philip T. Allin and others, citizens of Johnson and Tarrant Counties, Texas, praying for the establishment of a post-route from Cleburne to Fort Worth, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. KERNAN presented the petition of Elbridge T. Gerry, president of the New York Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, and others, praying for such legislative action by Congress as will tend to the pardon of the four children of Yakoob Beg, the children being arraigned for "hereditary" high treason to the Emperor of China; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. VOORHEES presented the memorial of David Harper and others, soldiers of the late war and citizens of Indiana, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of E. Brett and others, citizens of Pennsylvania, and the petition of George A. Sage and others, citizens of Michigan, praying for the passage of a law granting to them the difference between the value of greenbacks and gold at the time of payment for their services as soldiers during the late war; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. RANDOLPH presented the petition of O. S. Belden, late assistant surgeon Fifth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers, praying for the passage of a law granting him arrears of pay due him for services performed as such officer from November 28, 1862, to January 27, 1864; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PENDLETON presented the petition of David Lewis and others, citizens of Warren, Trumbull County, Ohio, and soldiers of the late war, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 2480) for the relief of the soldiers and sailors in the Army and Navy of the United States in the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, and to restore to them equal rights with the holders of Government bonds; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, presented the petition of John D. Defrees, the Public Printer, praying for the passage of a law by Congress authorizing the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to credit him with the sum of $9,813, the amount stolen from the safe in the Government Printing Office in January, 1879; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of John A. Lynch, of the city of Washington, praying for the passage of a law looking to the encouragement of closer commercial relations between the United States and the Republics of South America; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented the petition of John B. Handley and others, and the petition of S. S. Nicholas and others, citizens of Louisville, Kentucky; the petition of J. J. Brown and others, and the petition of Samuel Montgomery and others, citizens of New Albany, Indiana; the petition of W. H. Fogg and others, citizens of Jeffersonville, Indiana; the petition of M. D. Logan and others, and the petition of John H. Kennard and others, citizens of New Orleans, Louisiana, praying for the passage of a law remunerating the heirs of Captain Henry M. Shreve for the use of his patent snag-boat; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HAMLIN presented the petition of S. H. Gould and others, citizens of Kennebunk Port, Maine, and M. C. Maling and others, citizens of Kennebunk, representing that they are interested in the Geneva award fund, and praying that some bill may be passed during the present session of Congress disposing of that fund; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PADDOCK presented the memorial of John Shoff and others, and the petition of L. J. Gandy and others, citizens of Nebraska, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred a resolution of the Legislature of Nebraska in favor of changing the law as to the removal of suits by corporations from State courts into courts of the United States, to report that we have considered the subject and have thought it fit to amend the law in the direction desired by the memorial. I am instructed to report a bill accordingly, and I wish to call the special attention of Senators to it, for, in one respect, it makes an important and somewhat radical change in the existing law about the jurisdiction of courts of the United States.

The first section of the bill that we report simply provides for putting corporations who wish to remove causes from State courts into United States courts upon exactly the same footing as natural persons. We give them no special privileges, which they now by law possess. The next important matter is that we repeal those provisions of the Revised Statutes of the United States that authorize suits by and against national banks to be brought, in the first instance, in the courts of the United States, and leave the national banks exactly like other citizens of the States in which they are located, to sue and be sued, in the first instance, in the courts of the State, and then, if, like any other citizen, they have got a Federal question, they can try it out just like anybody else.

I call the attention of Senators to the bill because in that respect it makes, of course, a very decided change in the present law.

The bill (S. No. 1089) to amend section 640 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the removal of suits by corporations, and to make further provision relating to suits by and against corportions, was read twice by its title.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 426) for the relief of Patrick Sullivan, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HEREFORD, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 707) for the relief of William W. Ross, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 187) for the relief of Samuel Castleman, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 219) relating to certain brevet appointments, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 695) for the relief of Michael Granary, Nicholas Wax, and Moliere Lange, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Walbridge, Holland & Brown, of Saint Louis, Missouri, praying compensation for services rendered the United States as stenographers, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 47) for the relief of James Hunt, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. RANDOLPH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Beverly Kennon, praying Congress to appropriate $15,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretaries of War and Navy, to test his invention of a counterpoise battery, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 773) making appropriations for a military wagon-road from Niobrara, in Knox County, Nebraska, via the military post recently located near the mouth of the Minnecadusa, to Fort Robinson, in said State, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 917) providing for the ascertainment and compensation for patented inventions used in the Springfield breech-loading system by the United States, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 754) to authorize the relocation and improvement of the military wagon-road from Sidney, Nebraska, via Forts Robinson and Sheridan, to the Sioux reservation, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PADDOCK subsequently said: I move to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill No. 754 was indefinitely postponed. There are reasons why it should go on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 194) to provide for the disposal of the Fort Harker military reservation, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 193) to provide for the disposition of the Fort Larned military reservation, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 2) for the relief of Mark Walker, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 556) to authorize the President to appoint Sergeant John Dolan, of the Fifth Cavalry, United States Army, a second lieutenant, and place him upon the retired list, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill

(S. No. 80) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to ascertain and report to Congress the amount of money expended and indebtedness assumed by the State of Kansas in repelling invasions and suppressing Indian hostilities, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 50) for the relief of James A. Barr, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 180) for the relief of George V. Hebb, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 687) for the relief of C. Bohn, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the claim of Claude H. Masten, surviving partner of the firm of Le Vert & Masten, of Mobile, Alabama, for himself and in behalf of the children of Octavia Le Vert, widow of his deceased partner, for rent of the Le Vert Hospital, occupied by the United States authorities, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1088) for the relief of Claude H. Masten, surviving partner of the firm of Le Vert & Masten, of Mobile, Alabama, and the children of Octavia Le Vert, deceased.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 402) to authorize the President to restore Edwin R. Parks to his former rank in the Army, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 223) to authorize the restoration of Calvin T. Speer to the rank of second lieutenant, United States Army, and to pay him arrears of pay his due, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Solomon Morris, late sergeant Company A, Thirty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, praying the passage of a law authorizing him to be mustered and paid as second lieutenant for the time he was held as a prisoner during the late war, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1100) for the relief of Solomon Morris.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 389) for the relief of Peter Phillips, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 390) to authorize the President to restore Dunbar R. Ransom to his former rank in the Army, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 536) placing the name of Walter F. Halleck upon the retired list of the United States Army, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 131) for the relief of John W. Chickering, reported it with an amendment, the committee adopting a favorable report made by the Committee on Military Affairs in a former Congress.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 388) for the relief of Jacob B. King, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 214) for the relief of Robert W. Dunbar, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of H. A. Denton, of Company C, Twelfth Regiment Kentucky Cavalry, United States Volunteers, praying to be allowed the pay of a first lieutenant from September 7, 1862, to November 16, 1862, reported adversely thereon, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. LOGAN. I am also directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred a letter from the Secretary of War transmitting the petition of Lieutenant F. C. Nichols praying that the law be so amended as to allow officers now in the Army who served as officers of volunteers in the Mexican war credit for the time they so served in computing the length of their services, &c., to ask to be discharged from its further consideration. The committee examined the case and find the law now provides for the allowance of the computation which the party desires.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The committee will be discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. LOGAN. I am also directed by the same committee, to whom were referred letters, &c., in relation to the claim of Cephas L. Rockwood, a descendant of Josiah Shields, who asks Congress to refund to him $300 loaned to Ensign Shields, a recruiting officer, and $75 expended by said Rockwood in the recruiting service, an old claim, reported on in 1827, to report adversely, and the committee adopt the report of that date and ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The committee will be discharged from the further consideration of the papers.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 888) to authorize the compilation and printing of the naval history of the war, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 13) to authorize the assignment of a rear-admiral on the retired list of the Navy to duty as governor of the naval asylum at Philadelphia, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 593) to repeal the provision authorizing the advancement of an officer of the Navy thirty numbers in rank for extraordinary heroism, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 286) for the relief of John S. Cunningham, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WHYTE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 114) to prevent officers of the Navy from being kept upon the retired list after the disability for which they were placed there has ceased, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 454) to provide for the erection of a monument at the naval cemetery at Annapolis, Maryland, in commemoration of the officers and others who perished by the wreck of the United States steamer Huron, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BAYARD. Senate bill No. 1075, to authorize Dr. Daniel M. Appel, of the United States Army, to receive pay for discharging the duties of physician to the Mescalero Apache Indian agency, New Mexico, was inadvertently referred to the Committee on Finance. I desire to have it withdrawn from that committee and to have it referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That change of reference will be made.

Mr. HARRIS. The Select Committee on the Tenth Census, to which was referred the bill (S. No. 787) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for taking the tenth and subsequent censuses," approved March 3, 1879, and the bill (S. No. 864) to amend the act of March 3, 1879, in relation to the census of 1880, direct me to report a substitute for the two bills as an amendment to be offered to the bill (S. No. 885) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for taking the tenth and subsequent censuses," approved March 3, 1879, now upon the Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1090) for the relief of John D. Defrees; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KERNAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1091) granting an increase of pension to Captain Joseph H. Tall, Eighty-sixth New York Volunteers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WHYTE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1092) for the relief of W. H. Newman and L. A. Van Hoffman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1093) for the relief of Thomas Poultney; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. MORRILL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1094) to incorporate the National Education Association; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, (by request,) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1095) for the encouragement of closer commercial relationship between the United States and the Republic of Mexico, Central America, the Empire of Brazil, and the several republics of South America; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HEREFORD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1096) for the relief of V. B. Horton, jr.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SAULSBURY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1097) for the relief of Susan Fox; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying petition, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VOORHEES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1098) to provide suitable accommodations for the Library of Congress; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. TELLER. I ask leave to introduce a bill by request. The bill is accompanied by a petition, and at the earnest request of the petitioner I ask that it be read; it is short.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your petitioner, on behalf of himself and thousands of sufferers from the present loose and unjust methods of the Government, and on behalf of the whole people of the United States, whose highest interests are best subserved by public and private justice, and who have a right to be legally equal to their own creatures, the Government, instituted for their benefit, and not for the governors, I ask the passage of the accompanying bill, for the enforcement of public and private justice and the relief of Congress from the consideration of private bills, for reasons following:

1. The obligations of nations to pay their debts are the same as those of private individuals.
2. Executive responsibility is the best guarantee for the economical and rigid enforcement of law.
3. The present laws are wholly inadequate for protection against official mistakes and abuses.
4. The present methods are unjust, oppressive, and often cruel.
5. Congress is overburdened with private business, to the detriment of public legislation.
6. If the Government collects interest, it should pay interest; if it defaults, it should be governed by the common laws of business among business men.
7. Under the present irresponsible methods, private claims will multiply with the increase of population.
8. There is no valid reason why the citizen should not have equality in the courts with the Government.
9. It is a measure of justice.
10. It will compel official integrity.
11. It will relieve Congress and the Departments.
12. It is the only proper way of settling such controversies.
13. It will place our citizens on an equality with their Government as are the citizens (subjects) of despotic governments. ("By petition of right" the Queen of England may be sued by a citizen or alien; an American sues the British government and cannot sue his own.)
14. There should be no State secrets in a republican government. The people have a right to know the innermost working of their own institutions.
15. The Government should not avail itself of its own laches, or of any accident to defraud its creditors.

And your petitioner will ever pray.

JOHN B. WOLFF,
Washington, D. C.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1099) for the enforcement of public and private justice and the relief of Congress from the consideration of private bills; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. TELLER. I move the reference of the petition and bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. GARLAND submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 192) to correct the date of commission of certain officers of the Quartermaster's Department; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. KERNAN, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the claim of Alice E. De Groat, executrix, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Ordered, That the papers in the case of Joseph Kinney, administrator of the estate of David Ballentine, be taken from the files of the Secretary's office and referred to the Committee on Claims to accompany Senate bill No. 306.

Ordered, That the papers relating to the claim of Thomas McGeehan for an increase of pension be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Ordered, That the petition of Ann M. Paulding, widow of Hiram Paulding, deceased, late rear-admiral United States Navy, praying to be allowed a pension, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion of Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, it was Ordered, That the petition of William S. Mitchell be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. HEREFORD, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to Samuel C. Ludington, or his attorney, to withdraw the papers on file in his case.

Ordered, That leave be granted to James D. Cumming, or his attorney, to withdraw the papers on file in his case.

DONATIONS OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. MORRILL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be instructed to report to the Senate the number and weight and the value per pound of condemned cannon which have since January, 1865, been donated for any purposes by acts of Congress, and whether there are in fact any such cannon now on hand.

JOHN N. REED.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 52) for the relief of John N. Reed. It will only take a moment. The case has passed both the Senate and House heretofore.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the bill be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This bill is favorably reported from the Committee on Claims. Is there objection to its present consideration?

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Committee on Claims propose an amendment, which will be reported.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before we go to the amendment I wish the Secretary would read the report.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. COCKRELL January 14:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 52) for the relief of John N. Reed, have duly considered the same, and submit the following report:

In the Forty-third Congress, first session, in the House of Representatives, a bill (H. R. No. 707) for the relief of claimant, Reed, was presented, and referred to the Committee of Claims, and Mr. Nunn, to whom the bill was referred as a sub-committee, called upon the Secretary of War and the accounting officers of the Treasury Department for information. The Secretary of War, under date of March 12, 1874, furnished the following letter, to wit:

"WAR DEPARTMENT,
"Washington City, March 2, 1874.

"SIR: In compliance with your request of the 27th ultimo I inclose a copy of the contract between Lieutenant W. H. Stevens and Reed, Pitt & McPherson, in 1861, which was approved by this Department.

"There is no record of what amount has been paid on this contract, but if payment has been made therein it may be ascertained from the accounts of Lieutenant Stevens on file in the office of the Third Auditor of the Treasury.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"WM. W. BELKNAP,
"Secretary of War.

"Hon. D. A. NUNN,
"503 D street, Washington, D. C."

A duly-certified copy of said contract accompanied said letter. This contract is dated July 14, 1860, and was made on the part of the United States by Lieutenant W. H. Stevens, United States Engineers, with J. N. Reed, Alexander Pitt, and W. McPherson, of Galveston, Texas, and was duly approved by the War Department. By its terms the contractors agreed "to furnish at the wharf at the north end of Pelican Spit, Galveston Bay, 100,000 cubic feet of fine shells, 100,000 cubic feet of clean clam or cockle shells, and 10,000 cubic feet of clean, sharp sand, like the sample shown at Lieutenant Stevens's office; the sand and shells to be of good quality, and subject to the inspection of Lieutenant W. H. Stevens, or of such agent or agents as he may designate, or of such agent or agents as may hereafter succeed him, the whole amount of deliveries not to be less than 40,000 cubic feet of each kind of shell and 10,000 cubic feet of sand per month. The price for fine shells to be 2½ cents per cubic foot, 6¼ cents per cubic foot for clam or cockle shells, and 8¾ cents per cubic foot for sand," which prices the United States agreed to pay on all deliveries as required by the contractors, retaining on such partial payments 15 per cent. until the contract was completed. The United States agreed "to receive the shells and sand at the rail of the vessel alongside the wharf on the north end of Pelican Spit, Galveston Bay." Such were the terms of the contract. The contractors gave bond for the faithful performance of the contract, with good and sufficient sureties, which was approved by the United States attorney for the eastern district of Texas on July 14, 1860. In reply to the application of Mr. Nunn, the Treasury Department furnished the following letter, to wit:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
"Washington, D. C., March 5, 1874.

"SIR: In reply to your letter of the 4th instant, herewith returned, I have to inform you that Lieutenant W. H. Stevens, United States Engineers, paid Reed, Pitt & McPherson, on contract dated July 14, 1860, for furnishing shells and sand, the sum of $2,040 in the fourth quarter of 1860.

"Respectfully,

"ALLAN RUTHERFORD,
"Auditor.

"Hon. D. A. NUNN, M. C.,
"House of Representatives, Washington, D. C."

Mr. Nunn, of the House, reported favorably, on May 8, 1874, (Report No. 564,) a substitute (H. R. No. 3268) for said bill, and made the following summary of the materials delivered, prices and amounts, &c., to wit:

52,214 feet, at 2½ cents per foot	$1,305 35
14,684 feet cockle-shell, at 6¼ cents per foot	954 46
15,926 feet mixed, (half fine and half cockle,) at 4⅜ cents, which at contract price is equal to	696 76
14,567 feet sharp sand, at 8¾ cents per foot	1,274 68
	4,231 25
These deliveries are proved by the receipts of the officers. If we deduct the payments by the Secretary of the Treasury	2,040 00
There remains a balance due for actual delivery	2,191 25

"But the same officers prove that the Government was not prepared to receive the shell at a wharf at the north end of Pelican Spit, Galveston Bay, as stipulated by the contract, and consequently the agents could not receive the articles at the rail of the vessel; but, on the contrary, these agents employed the hands of the contractors for a time, equal to one hundred and thirty-eight days of labor, at $1.50 per day, to wheel off the shell and sand from the vessels to the fort, thus making a just charge of $237. The same officers also certify that the steamer San Antonio and the two schooners Dinslow and Jane were detained seventeen days because the United States were not ready to receive the articles at the rail of the vessel, as stipulated in the contract; and for this demurrage the petitioner charges $2,550, which, under the circumstances, seems to be a just charge.

Add, therefore, the balance for material actually delivered	$2,191 25
Labor of the petitioner's hands while employed by the United States	237 00
Demurrage or detention of the vessels	2,550 00
Makes a balance	4,978 25

"Your committee believe that this whole sum should be allowed to John N. Reed, to whom the whole contract has been assigned."

This bill, so amended, passed the House January 22, 1875, and was sent to the Senate, where, on February 13, 1875, it was reported with amendment by Mr. Merrimon, when no final action was had.

In the Forty-fourth Congress a bill for the relief of claimant was introduced in the House of Representatives and referred to the Committee of Claims, and on December 22, 1876, Mr. Pratt, from said committee, reported favorably a substitute (H. R. No. 4274) for said bill, which report was identically the same as the report of Mr. Nunn in the former Congress. This bill, after being reported, was placed upon the Private Calendar, but was not reached. In the Forty-fifth Congress, in the House of Representatives, a bill (H. R. No. 690) for the relief of claimant was introduced, and referred to the Committee of Claims, and on April 24, 1878, Mr. Lockwood, from said committee, reported favorably a substitute, (H. R. No. 4558,) which was passed by the House of Representatives, and sent to the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims, and on February 25, 1879, Mr. HARRIS, from said committee, reported the said bill (H. R. No. 4558) favorably to the Senate, adopting the report of Mr. Lockwood.

The reports of Mr. Lockwood and Mr. HARRIS make the following summary of the materials delivered, and prices and amounts, &c., to wit:

52,214 feet, at 2½ cents per foot	$1,305 35
14,684 feet cockle-shell, at 6½ cents per foot, which at contract price is equal to	954 46
15,926 feet mixed, (half fine and half cockle,) at 4⅜ cents	696 76
14,567 feet sharp sand, at 8¾ cents per foot	1,274 68
	4,231 25
These deliveries are all proved by the receipts of the officers. Deducting the payments made by the Secretary of the Treasury	2,040 00
There remains a balance due for actual delivery	2,191 25

"The same officers prove that the Government was not prepared to receive the shell and sand at a wharf at the north end of Pelican Spit, Galveston Bay, according to the terms of the contract. The agents of the Government could not, therefore, receive the shells and sand at the rail of the vessel, but, on the contrary, these agents employed the hands of the contractors for a time equal to one hundred and thirty-eight days of labor to wheel off the shell and sand from the vessels to the fort. The claimant shows that such labor was worth $1.50 per day, thus making a just charge of $237. The same officers also certify that the steamer San Antonio and the two schooners Dinslow and Jane, the vessels owned and used by the contractors in transporting the shells and sand, were detained seventeen days because the United States were not ready to receive the shells and sand at the rail of the vessel, as provided in the contract. For this demurrage the petitioner claims $2,550, or at the rate of $150 per day. Your committee think that the sum of $1,700, or $100 per day, would be a just and proper sum to allow for demurrage.

The balance for material actually delivered	$2,191 25
Labor of the petitioner's hands while employed by the United States	237 00
Demurrage or detention of the vessels	1,700 00
Makes a balance of	4,128 25

"Your committee believe that this whole sum should be allowed to John N. Reed, to whom the whole contract has been assigned."

Your committee have carefully re-examined all the facts in this case, and they find that A. J. Moore was a duly authorized agent or overseer of Lieutenant Stevens to receive and receipt for shells, sand, and materials, and that said contractors did duly deliver to the United States, which was duly received for them by said Moore, materials as follows, to wit:

53,264 cubic feet of fine shells, at 2½ cents per foot	$1,331 60
14,684 cubic feet of cockle-shells, at 6½ cents per foot	954 46
15,926 cubic feet mixed shells, (half fine and half cockle,) at 6⅜ cents per foot	696 76
14,567 cubic feet clean, sharp sand, at 8¾ cents per foot	1,274 68
Aggregate amount	4,257 50
Deduct payment made by Lieutenant Stevens	2,040 00
Which leaves a balance due for materials actually delivered	2,217 50

Your committee further find that the United States could not receive the said materials "at the rail of the vessel alongside the wharf on the north end of Pelican Spit, Galveston Bay," as per contract, and that, therefore, the agents of the Government employed the laborers of the contractors to perform, and they did perform, one hundred and thirty-eight days' labor, worth $1.50 per day, amounting to $207, in wheeling off and transporting the said materials from the vessels to the fort, and that they are justly entitled to said last-named sum.

Your committee further find that by the terms of the contract it is provided: "This contract to receive the approval of the Secretary of War before going into effect, and the time allotted for deliveries to be reckoned from the eleventh day after the party of the second part (the contractors) has received notice of the approval." Your committee have not been able to ascertain the exact date of the approval of said contract by the Secretary of War, or the exact date when notice of the approval was received by the contractors. The evidence shows that the steamer San Antonio was detained for twenty-three days, from September 7 to November 14, 1860. The claimant claims demurrage for such detention in his memorial and account for only seventeen days, which is, probably, the correct number of days of detention after the notice of approval was received. The claimant asks $150 per day for demurrage. The contract makes no provision for demurrage or detention of vessels except as stated in the portion thereof hereinbefore copied—that is, "that the time allotted for deliveries shall be from the eleventh day after notice of approval to the contractors," but does not stipulate any price or amount of compensation. Your committee think that the amount of $100 per day for the seventeen days, as heretofore recommended and agreed to in the House and Senate, is a full compensation for such demurrage. Your committee further find that the contractors of claimant, Alexander Pitt and W. McPherson, on January 7, 1861, duly assigned and transferred their portion of the said contract to claimant, and that the contract was not complied with in consequence of the secession of the State of Texas and the civil war which followed; and while it is quite true that the claimant lost his vessels, which were seized by the confederate authorities, and he was deprived of the further benefit of his contract, the Government cannot be held responsible.

The committee may add that it was in proof that the claimant, John N. Reed, remained loyal to the United States, and immediately after the close of the war he was appointed one of the deputy collectors of internal revenue in the district of his residence in Texas.

The claimant in his memorial makes the following summary of his claim:

Therefore he claims an actual balance of	$4,968 25
And damages for loss of contract	2,696 87½
Making a total of	7,665 12½

But in his account, certified by him December 4, 1865, and verified by his affidavit on the same day, he makes the following claim:

52,214 feet fine shell, at 2½ cents	$1,305 54
14,684 feet cockle-shell, at 6½ cents	954 46
15,926 feet mixed, (half fine and half cockle,) at 4⅜ cents	696 76
14,567 feet sharp sand, at 8¾ cents	1,274 68
138 days' work of hands furnished to wheel off shell and sand, at $1.50	207 00
17 days' demurrage of steamer San Antonio and barges, at $150 per day	2,550 00
	6,988 25
Credit by cash of H. W. Stevens	2,020 00
	4,968 25

The claimant in estimating the amount of fine shells seems to have omitted one delivery of 1,050 cubic feet, shown by the evidence to have been delivered.

Your committee, after the most patient investigation, submit the following statement of their conclusions upon each item charged for, to wit:

53,264 cubic feet fine shells, at 2½ cents per foot	$1,331 60
14,684 cubic feet cockle-shells, at 6½ cents per foot	954 46
15,926 cubic feet mixed shells (half fine and half cockle) at 4⅜ cents per foot	696 76
14,567 cubic feet clean, sharp sand, at 8¾ cents per foot	1,274 68
138 days' labor of hands, at $1.50 per day	207 00
Demurrage or detention of vessels, 17 days, at $100 per day	1,700 00
All aggregating	6,164 50
From which deduct the payment made	2,040 00
Leaving a balance due the claimant of	4,124 50

Your committee recommend the payment of the above sum, and the amendment of the bill to correspond therewith; and, as so amended, report the bill back to the Senate with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 3, to strike out "eight" after "twenty" and insert "four;" and, in line 4, to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fifty" before "cents;" so as to make the bill read:

That the sum of $4,124.50 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay John N. Reed for material delivered, labor, time, and demurrages, upon the contract of Reed, Pitt & McPherson, approved by the Secretary of War on the 3d day of September, 1860, and assigned to said Reed, and shall be in full discharge of all claim against the United States in any manner arising upon or by reason of the said contract, or for any non-fulfillment thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what evidence the committee had of the assignment of this claim by the other owners to the particular one named in the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. The written assignment, filed with the papers in the case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If there were any possible question about it, I merely suggest that it would be better to have the bill provide for paying the money to that firm, or their legal representatives, and then leave it for the Department to ascertain exactly how it was.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think there is no doubt about that question at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If it is perfectly safe, very well.

Mr. COCKRELL. The assignment is filed with the papers and duly attested.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VAN. B. BOWERS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the present consideration of Senate bill No. 298. It is a very short bill with a very short report. It is a bill for the relief of Van. B. Bowers.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 298) for the relief of Van. B. Bowers. It provides for paying Van. B. Bowers, late postmaster at Bucklin, Linn County, Missouri, $113, being the amount of postage-stamps stolen from the safe of the post-office by burglars on the night of the 12th of November, 1874, without fault or negligence on the part of Bowers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report in that case.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. COCKRELL from the Committee on Claims, on the 14th instant, but was interrupted by Mr. EDMUNDS. I have run through that report, and I am satisfied. I do not ask that it be read any further for me.

Mr. FERRY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri one question in regard to this case, whether the postmaster promptly reported to the Post-Office Department the fact of the burglary at the time?

Mr. COCKRELL. He reported the burglary at once and one man was arrested and sent to the penitentiary. The only man connected with the transaction who did not get into the penitentiary was a man from Wisconsin or Michigan. There is one up there who escaped, so far as the last information was concerned.

Mr. FERRY. I am happy to find he was not a resident of Michigan. I hope the Senator from Missouri does not by that diversion escape the point I wish to make. I wish to follow that up with the fact, if it is a fact, that the Post-Office Department sent a special agent upon notification of the burglary to the locality.

Mr. COCKRELL. They sent a special agent, and the special agent went and made an examination, and his report is printed in full in this report of the committee.

Mr. FERRY. I did not hear that part of it read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I had the reading stopped before that was reached.

Mr. COCKRELL. He examined the case and found the offense was committed by a band of burglars who burglarized four or five offices in Missouri about the same time. They were all sentenced to the penitentiary except one man, who lived in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and the agent reports that "his 'pal,' George Wolf, was tried in Springfield, Illinois, and sentenced to one year's confinement. Reuben De Barre was also convicted at Milwaukee, but the Jew has money, and may get clear yet." That is the report of the special agent.

Mr. FERRY. I understand, then, that all the Missourians implicated in this affair were sent to the penitentiary. That is well.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNITED STATES NOTES AS A LEGAL TENDER.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired, and the Senator from Kentucky, pursuant to notice given yesterday, calls for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 49) in relation to United States Treasury notes, which is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, it has been my good fortune to agree so often with the views of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] that I cannot help regretting that I am compelled to differ with him on the important question the Senate has to consider. I desire to assure him in advance that whatever I may say in opposition to the resolution, against the passage of which I felt it to be my duty to report, and whatever may be my opinions as to the objects and purposes of those who are clamoring so loudly for its passage, I am sure that he is actuated solely by an earnest desire to promote the public welfare and to return at the earliest possible moment to the safe constitutional methods of the fathers of the Republic. I feel, however, that the resolution is unnecessary, unwise, ill-timed, and calculated to disturb the prosperity which, I hope, is dawning upon the country. His proposition is not a new one. It was voted down with unusual unanimity by both Houses of Congress less than twenty months ago. In May, 1878, the House of Representatives, by a vote of 173 to 35, and the Senate, by a vote of 41 to 18, passed the following bill, which was approved by the President May 29, 1878. (See United States Statutes, volume 20, page 87:)

An act to forbid the further retirement of United States legal-tender notes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this act it shall not be lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury, or other officer under him, to cancel or retire any more of the United States legal-tender notes. And when any of said notes may be redeemed or be received into the Treasury under any law, from any source whatever, and shall belong to the United States, they shall not be retired, canceled, or destroyed, but they shall be reissued and paid out again and kept in circulation: Provided, That nothing herein shall prohibit the cancellation and destruction of mutilated notes and the issue of others of like denominations in their stead, as now provided by law. All acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Approved May 31, 1878.

That law is a very distinct expression of the will of Congress, and a very clear assertion of its power, in time of peace, to reissue and keep in circulation all the then outstanding legal-tender notes. The President and his advisers had no doubt as to the right and power of Congress to do so. The approval of the act was prompt, and there was no pronounced clamor against our constitutional authority to pass it from any quarter. When that bill was before the Senate the Senator from Delaware moved the following amendment to it:

Provided, That the said notes when so reissued shall be receivable for all dues to the United States excepting duties on imports, and not to be otherwise a legal tender, and any reprint of the said notes shall bear this superscription.

He sustained it in one of the ablest and best considered speeches he ever made; yet only eighteen Senators supported it, and forty-one voted against it. Among the latter were six out of the nine members of the present Committee on Finance, I being one of them. That amendment, it will be observed, is in substance and almost in words the resolution the Senate is now asked to pass. Let me read it:

Resolved, &c., That from and after the passage of this resolution all United States notes shall be receivable for all dues to the United States excepting duties on imports, and shall not be otherwise a legal tender; and any of said notes hereafter reissued shall bear this superscription.

Neither the President, nor the Secretary of the Treasury, nor the distinguished list of petitioners whose gilt-edged and morocco-bound petition is paraded before us with such a flourish of trumpets, nor the bankers, brokers, and bondholders who are so much alarmed lest the country be dishonored and the Constitution shattered by the reissue of legal-tender notes in time of peace, exhibited any of the anxiety they now profess to feel, although these notes were then at a discount, were not redeemable in coin, and were subject therefore to denunciation as irredeemable currency, a forced loan, dishonest money, rag-babies, and the various other epithets which the adherents of the money power in their pretended zeal for the dear people delight to indulge in. It seems to me then was the time, when a new assurance was being given to the people that their money should be maintained at its then volume and that the denomination of the notes should not be changed, for the distinguished petitioners to have given to Congress the advice they now so freely volunteer, and to have pointed out the dangers to constitutional liberty and law and to the best interests of the people for which they at this time so feelingly plead.

Now gold and silver coin of the standard value prescribed prior to July 14, 1870, and nominated as the measure of payment at the dictation of the money power in all the bonds since issued, can be demanded and obtained from the Government for the face value of every one of the notes of the United States. The Secretary of the Treasury tells us in his last report that he has over $225,000,000 of gold and silver coin and bullion in the Treasury, nearly $160,000,000 of which is available for all purposes. Other official reports show that the enormous taxation we have endured since the war has produced revenues that have enabled us to reduce the public debt from $2,773,236,173, as it stood July 1, 1866, to $2,011,798,504, as it stood January 1, 1880, being a reduction of $761,437,669. The Secretary in his report December 3, 1877, showed that the maximum amount which it was possible to claim July 1, 1877, as necessary to comply with all the obligations of the sinking-fund law was $475,318,888, and we have been applying all our surplus revenues to that fund ever since, so that it is safe to say that we have exceeded up to this time all the obligations of the sinking fund by at least $250,000,000. These debt statements exclude all the great floating war debt on which hundreds of millions have been paid out of the proceeds of the sales of our ships, horses, mules, wagons, and all the other vast materials purchased out of the appropriations so lavishly furnished during the years of strife. The War, Navy, and Treasury Departments claimed all these things as their property, on the ground that they were charged with them, when the original appropriations were made, and therefore they had the right to use the proceeds as they pleased to pay the debts these Departments owed, and they paid lavishly to their pets and friends in ways that Congress knew nothing of.

Mr. President, if one-half of the vast sums which reached the Treasury in gold (forgetting all that was stolen and squandered) from the taxes taken from the pockets of the people had been retained, instead of being used to pay the principal of the public debt, with the premiums, double interests, and costs of that operation, and the greenbacks had not been repudiated at the custom-houses, resumption would have come of itself years before it was forced on the country. Nobody was demanding payment of the principal of our debt; its burden was diminishing by being let alone in proportion as our wealth and population increased.

The Secretary shows that he has a large and increasing surplus fund from excess of receipts over expenditures, so that all danger of the non-payment or depreciation of the United States notes is at an end. The coin in the Treasury held as reserve cost the people in commissions, expenses, and double interest at least 6 per cent., or $13,500,000. It is worth 4 per cent. per annum, so that it is held at an annual cost of over $8,000,000 in order to remove all possible doubt, uncertainty, or apprehension as to the absolute equality in value and convertibility of these notes into coin. In addition to all this, the Secretary claims that under the resumption act of 1875 he has the power now to sell as many 5 per cent. bonds of the United States from time to time, and at any time he pleases, as will enable him to obtain and retain coin in the Treasury to pay every outstanding note on demand. If $500,000,000 is in his opinion (and he is the sole judge) necessary he can sell them; indeed, there is no limit to the security except the tax-paying capacity of the people of the United States. With these vast sums and enormous powers held and given to protect these notes it is absolute folly for any set of men to pretend that there is any sort of doubt that they are and always will be as good as coin. The Secretary, after telling Congress that he can easily maintain resumption with the present volume of notes outstanding, gives the highest evidence of the confidence of the people in them when he says:

The great body of coin indebtedness has been paid in United States notes at the request of the holder. * * * But little coin has been demanded on the coin liabilities of the Government during the same period, (from January 1 to November 1, 1879,) though the amount accruing exceeded $600,000,000.

Yet the New York petitioners, in their gilded memorial to Congress urging that these notes be degraded by having their legal-tender quality destroyed, and that they be forever repudiated by the Government refusing to receive them for taxes at its custom-houses, say:

We believe that this measure, if enacted into law, will encourage every legitimate business enterprise; will revive confidence in permanent investments; will give extended employment to labor in all industrial pursuits; will secure to honest toil its just rewards; will be a sheet-anchor to stability in every department of business, and discourage that spirit of uncertainty which breeds disastrous fluctuations in prices.

The petition is signed by a highly respectable body of men. Governor Robinson, Mr. Belmont, Messrs. Drexel, Morgan, & Co., Mr. Oppenheimer—Jew and Gentile—all the money-kings are there. "All honorable men."

It presents a sharp contrast to the simple petition from the workingmen of Philadelphia, presented yesterday by the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. MORGAN,] which bears the mark of the anvil and the workshops, but is all the more entitled to consideration as an honest protest made against the passage of the resolution, because made by the sons of toil, about whose welfare the money-kings appear so anxious. I am glad it is here, so the representatives of the people can consider their case as well as that presented by the distinguished gentleman from New York. I deny all the assumptions of the New York petitioners. I deny that the passage of the resolution will have any one of the effects claimed. Surely confidence in permanent investments needs no revival when our 4 per cent. bonds were at a premium of 3 per cent. the day after the interest was paid, and are over 4 per cent. to-day. Honest toil asks no other reward than a chance to earn the notes as they are; the complaints against and abuse of them have never come from men engaged in honest toil. If any dissatisfaction has been expressed anywhere since the law of May, 1878, was passed; if any petitions to Congress have been presented seeking to destroy any quality now possessed by the legal-tender notes prior to the change of front by the President and his Secretary when this session of Congress opened, or prior to the introduction of this resolution, I failed to observe the fact.

It is always a safe and generally a wise policy to let well enough alone. It seems to me to be both safe and wise not to disturb the currency used by the people when their business, after years of disaster, is improving, and not to alarm men who are just beginning to rally from stunning blows. Nothing proves that to be our present condition more satisfactorily and conclusively than the contrast between the business failures now and for the last few years. I take the following statement from the last annual circular issued by the mercantile agency of Dun, Barlow & Co., of New York:

Year.	Number of failures.	Amount of liabilities.
1874	5,830	$155 239,000
1875	7,740	201,060,353
1876	9,092	191,117,786
1877	8,872	190,669,936
1878	10,478	234,383,132
Total	42,012	972,470,207

During these terrible years when forced resumption was being consummated over forty thousand business men, or firms composed of many men, were swept away, their liabilities amounting to almost half the amount of the public debt of the United States, and forty millions of people deprived of one-third or one-half of the value of their property, suffered to an extent that no mercantile agency can estimate, in order to make a few bankers and bondholders rich out of their wretchedness. The same authority makes the following exhibit for the first nine months of 1879, and contrasts it with that of the first nine months of 1878, as follows:

Year.	Number of failures.	Amount of liabilities.
1878	8,678	$197,211,129
1879	5,320	81,054,940

And from the 1st of July to the 1st of October:

Year.	Number of failures.	Amount of liabilities.
1878	2,833	$66,378,363
1879	1,262	15,275,550

The publishers add:

The foregoing figures indicate that for the third quarter of 1879, the failures in the United States have been less than one-half than for the third quarter of 1878, the precise decrease being 1,591. The liabilities show even a much larger proportionate reduction, being less than one-quarter of what they were in the same period of last year—the figures showing the liabilities for 1879 to be fifteen million as against sixty-six million for the third quarter of 1878. It will, of course, be remembered that for the first two months of the third quarter of 1878 the failures were unusually numerous, owing to the prospective repeal of the bankrupt law in September of that year; but, even taking that circumstance into consideration, the decrease in the last quarter is almost phenomenal, in view of the fact that the average number of failures for the third quarter of the preceding four years was 2,223, or nearly double the number of the last quarter's failures, while the average liabilities for the third quarter of the four years was fifty-two millions, exceeding by three times the amount of liabilities of the third quarter of 1879. The figures for the quarter just ended, therefore, add another to the many indications of the wonderfully improved condition of trade throughout the country. For the nine months of the two years the comparison is almost as favorable as for the quarter just closed—the failures for the first three quarters in 1879 being 5,320 in number, as against 8,678 for the nine months of 1878. The liabilities are eighty-one million for the first nine months of 1879, as against one hundred and ninety-seven million for the same period of 1878—a reduction in liabilities of more than one-half.

After the people have been compelled by Congress to suffer and endure all these things, and after they have supplied and placed in the Treasury such enormous sums of gold and silver coin to assure all men everywhere that the notes of the United States shall be and forever remain equal to and be convertible into coin, it would seem to me that the crushing of the contraction wheel might cease, and they might at least be allowed a little while without further congressional interference to ascertain whether the prosperity they have so long hoped and prayed for is to continue, or whether with the carrying trade of the country in the hands of foreigners, with protective tariffs cutting off nearly all exports of manufactures and doubling home prices, with enormous debts, Federal, State, municipal, corporate, and individual, upon us, we can rely on agricultural exports alone and continue to prosper. I think the chances are all against us unless we change many of our laws. Much apprehension is expressed by the combinations of the money power, lest the people may rush into wild speculations and again bring about the ruin from which they are just escaping, if they are allowed to use their present resources in the way they think most conducive to their own interests; the wise men of the East seek to constitute themselves the special guardians of the ignorant masses and protect them from all such danger by taking control of the finances of the Government and arranging them so as to guard against overtrading, unwise speculation, and the dangers of a redundant currency.

Mr. President, we have had too much meddling; that is at the bottom of all our troubles. If this is to continue to be a Government of the people, for the people, by the people, they must be allowed freedom from the dictation of any class of men, to manage their own affairs in their own way and have a chance to obtain the money which they think is necessary to transact their business. It is the merest pretense that we have a redundancy of currency for the wants of the people, and it is the most arrogant presumption to assert that the regulation of the amount required is safer in the hands of national bankers or Treasury officials than in the hands of the Representatives of the States and people in Congress assembled. Let us look at the first proposition. The monthly-debt statement for January 1, 1880, shows that we cannot have, even if every dollar ever issued was in existence and available for business purposes, more than $750,000,000 in legal-tenders, national-bank notes, and silver of all denominations. The gold is a mere Treasury reserve to secure and make good the other circulation. But call that $150,000,000 more, which is not true in any proper sense. With our present population of fifty million that is $18 to each individual; without the gold it is $15. How does this compare with the money in use among the leading commercial nations of the world? Turn to Executive Document No. 5, first session of the present Congress, and examine a report to Congress on the state of labor in Europe, made by the present Secretary of State, dated May 17, 1879, and Senators will find that France has eight thousand millions of francs, or $1,600,000,000, in circulation now in gold and silver coin, of which it is not possible that less than $600,000,000 is in silver, and she has over $450,000,000 in notes of the Bank of France, all of which are a full legal tender for all debts, public and private, and each is at par with the other, making a total of $2,050,000,000 of circulation—$40,000,000 more than our whole national debt; and this in a country much smaller than the State of Texas, with thirty-six millions of population, at least fourteen million less than ours, with a limited sea-coast and only 12,720 miles of railroad, while we have nearly ninety thousand miles and an almost boundless continent, containing more territory than all Europe, including Great Britain and Ireland, exclusive of Russia, by 1,240,088 square miles. The people of France have nearly $60 per capita, almost four times the amount we have. She is admitted to be prosperous, although she paid within the last ten years $1,000,000,000 in gold to Germany, and was conquered and overrun by hostile armies.

Secretary Evarts shows in that report that the bank-note circulation of Belgium is 661 francs, or over $132, to each inhabitant of that kingdom. These notes are a full legal tender for all debts, public and private. The people of Belgium are among the most enterprising and intelligent in Europe. Their products are found in every quarter of the globe. A few days ago the English papers, corroborating the Secretary, announced that magnificent iron depots and bridges made in Belgium were being erected over the Clyde and in the city of Glasgow. They have a circulation per capita of nearly $8 to our $1 and are prosperous.

Mr. Evarts shows further that Germany with her forty-two millions of population has a circulation in coin and notes of $714,000,000, or $17 per capita, even after she had in an evil hour demonetized her silver, which, prior to the payment of the French indemnity, was her only coin circulation. Her notes are a full legal tender for all debts public and private. She has few sea-ports, only 18,229 miles of railroad, yet her recent distress has been such from the contraction of her currency that Hon. WILLIAM D. KELLEY, of Pennsylvania, in his recently published letters, tells us that the leading bankers in Germany and Prince Bismarck assured him that the country had lost one hundred millions of marks, or $25,000,000, by the process of demonetizing her silver, while the general injury to the people and their business has been beyond calculation. He was assured that the sales of silver had been stopped and its use would soon be restored.

I have his letters before me, carefully revised. On page 30 of his letter from Germany he says that he told Prince Bismarck in substance that in his opinion the demonetization of silver in Germany had worked badly, and the reply was:

Yes, in that matter we have gone too fast and too far. We have not been wise. * * * It is clear we did not need to abolish silver money—we should have supplemented it with gold coinage. The sale of silver has reduced the price of that metal, has cost the empire an immense sum, and cannot be continued without ruinous loss, as Von Dechend, president of the Reichs Bank, has shown, and I have therefore prohibited further sales.

After a somewhat detailed conversation as to the probability of a convention of the nations, and as the course the United States would otherwise take on her own responsibility, Bismarck said:

In this matter you must not act alone. Others must co-operate with you. I have told you that no more silver will be sold, and you may also know that the people want the coins for business, and that they will go into circulation again. It is already ordered.

It seems, therefore, that Germany is likely to seek relief from her contraction of the currency, which, though now greater than ours, has by a process similar to that we have pursued brought her people to the verge of bankruptcy. The Secretary shows that the people of Great Britain, numbering thirty-two million in a country less than half the size of the single State of Texas, with only 17,263 miles of railroad, have a circulation of $905,688,000, or about $30 per capita, nearly double the amount even now allowed to the people of the United States, yet in the face of all these and many other like facts the moneyed organizations of the East and such newspapers as they control denounce all of us who are unwilling to still further curtail and cripple the small amount of currency we have as inflationists, secret repudiators, and everything that is vile. But, Mr. President, we have not anything like the amount of circulation we are charged with having on the books of the Treasury. For example, turn to the last monthly statement of the public debt made by the Secretary of the Treasury on the first day of this month and year and you will find in making up the sum of $393,711,679 of United States notes, certificates, &c., that we are charged with having $15,674,303.78 of fractional currency in circulation, when in fact there is not exceeding $1,000,000 of that amount in existence. Senators will recollect the debate in May last, when provision had to be made for the payment of the arrears of pension. The Secretary of the Treasury then insisted on having authority given him to increase the interest-bearing debt by authorizing the sale of $18,000,000 of 4 per cent. bonds. The leading members of the Committee on Finance of the Senate sustained him; I and others opposed. We convinced a majority of the Senate that the fund, then about $8,500,000, held for the redemption of outstanding fractional currency might as well be used to pay arrears of pensions as not, and we so applied it. The now known facts have justified our action. The fractional currency presented during the last year has been less than the interest at 4 per cent. on the sum held for its redemption, and it is apparent now that about $14,000,000, perhaps more, of fractional currency charged as outstanding, being one-third of the whole issue, is gone and never can be presented for redemption.

What is now known to be true as to the fractional currency is equally well known to be the fact in regard to the legal-tender notes, though not to the same extent in proportion to the amount issued. The issue of the legal-tenders reached the highest point in 1864 and 1865, when there were $433,160,569 of them in circulation. At that time there was only $22,894,877 of fractional currency issued. That currency did not reach its maximum of issue till July, 1874, when it was $45,881,295. As it is now known that from 30 to 33 per cent. of the fractional currency has perished, it is fair to assume that at least 10 per cent. of the legal-tender notes are gone. Years of war, during which they were paid to soldiers and sailors in dangerous service, followed their issue. Fire and flood have destroyed millions of them. Since the war they have gone through reconstruction and strife in the hands of men unused to the care of money. It is clear to my mind that there is not $300,000,000 of them in existence now. I do not know what proportion of that $300,000,000 is in the hands of the people. In May last I wrote to the Comptroller of the Currency for official information on that subject, and received the following letter, which I then read for the information of the Senate:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY,
Washington, May 6, 1879.

SIR: In response to your request, I send you herewith statement of the Treasurer showing the amount of legal-tender notes outstanding by denominations on April 30, 1878. I also inclose statement of the Treasurer of May 1, 1879, and an abstract of the reports of the national banks for January 1, 1879, the date of the last compilation of their reports. From the statement of the Treasurer it will be seen that he reports the amount of United States notes in the Treasury on May 1, $70,444,823. The amount of legal-tender notes held by the banks on January 1, exclusive of United States certificates of deposit, was $70,561,233. Tables are given in my report for 1878—pages 103, 104, and 106—which show that the amount of Treasury notes and bank notes held by the State banks, trust companies, and savings-banks was, at the dates given, $48,398,738; the amount held by private bankers is estimated at $28,000,000; which makes an aggregate of $76,398,738. If one-half of this amount was in legal-tender notes, then the whole amount of such notes held by banks and bankers other than national banks was, say, $38,000,000; which would give the aggregate amount of legal-tender notes held in the Treasury and by all the banks and bankers of the country, $179,006,000; leaving an aggregate of $167,675,000 held by other parties.

Very respectfully, JNO. JAY KNOX, Comptroller.

Hon. JAMES B. BECK,
United States Senate.

Of course these amounts vary from time to time. I think it likely the sums held now are smaller than those held at that time. It will be seen from the above, however, that there were at that date, some eight months ago, upon the assumption that there were then outstanding legal-tender notes to the amount of $346,681,000, only $167,675,000 in actual circulation among the people. If I am right in assuming that the actual amount in existence does not exceed $300,000,000, then there was only $120,994,000, being very many millions less than there is gold and silver coin lying idle and unproductive in the Treasury, held there under the pretense of possible necessity to redeem them. The statement referred to by the Comptroller as to the denominations of the legal-tender notes outstanding was also read by me, and will be found in the RECORD of the proceedings of May 6, 1879, page 1276. It shows that there were then $100,855,980 of these notes in denominations of $100 and upward, which made them in no sense currency for common use in the ordinary transactions of life among plain people. Of these the Comptroller says $31,940,980 were one-hundred-dollar bills; $31,279,500 were five-hundred-dollar bills; $33,620,500 were one-thousand-dollar bills; $2,005,000 were five-thousand-dollar bills; $2,010,000 were ten-thousand-dollar bills; total, $100,855,980—all of which might as well be bonds of the United States locked up in bank or Treasury vaults as pretended circulation; and these denominations cannot be changed. I have no means of knowing what denominations constituted the $179,000,000 held by the Treasury and the banks. If they were of the smaller denominations they about exhausted them; if of the larger, it still left the miserable remnant I have shown to meet the wants of fifty million of the most enterprising, energetic, and restless people on earth; yet we are called inflationists if we dare to protest against the further destruction of their usefulness and paying capacity.

In protesting, as I do, against striking out the legal-tender quality of the greenbacks, their further degradation, and the destruction of their usefulness by a new declaration that they shall not be receivable by the Government for custom-house taxes, their receipt for these dues now being, as I think, the wisest and best of the acts, legal or illegal, of the present Secretary of the Treasury, I must not be understood as indorsing or as asserting the constitutionality of the original acts under which they were issued. I have never believed that Congress, either in time of war or peace, had any power to do more than coin gold and silver and regulate the value thereof; and I have always thought it ought to provide for the coinage of either metal upon equal terms and in such quantities as the people may present bullion at the mints for coinage. That opinion I have often expressed in the Senate and elsewhere as forcibly as I could; but the Supreme Court of the United States—I care not how or for what purpose its change of front was effected—decided against my views, and I submit to the decision and make the most of it. I have, since my career in Congress began, seen many laws passed which seemed to me to be in palpable violation of the Constitution of the United States. Reconstruction acts, constitutional amendments, and all sorts of legislation have become parts of our system against my protest; but I sustain them as faithfully now as if I had originally approved them. I have always believed and now maintain that the act of March, 1869, requiring the principal of all our bonds to be paid in coin and repudiating our legal-tender notes was not only declaratory legislation beyond the scope of legislative authority, but a fraud of the deepest dye upon all the tax-payers of the country; yet when the act of July 14, 1870, was passed, authorizing the refunding of $1,500,000,000 of our bonds at low rates of interest, making principal and interest payable in coin of the then standard value, and when they have been so refunded, I admit that the credit of the Government can only be maintained by a strict compliance with the obligations entered into. Disclaiming all intention to be offensive, I may say that I have never believed that the present President of the United States was legally elected to the high position he holds, but no Senator would deprecate more than I would any suggestions looking to the raising of even a doubt now as to the legality of his title. So with the legal-tender notes. They were issued at a time when Congress assumed that the exigencies of the public service required the issue of such notes, and whatever else the Supreme Court has done or left undone, it has never been silly enough to declare either that Congress had certain powers over the currency of the country in time of war which it does not possess in time of peace, or that the court sits as a revisory body over Congress, to determine when exigencies do or do not exist on which Congress may or shall not act. It admits that wherever and whenever Congress can act when an exigency arises, Congress is the sole judge of the exigency requiring its action, whether it be in time of peace or war. It must not be forgotten that in all the acts authorizing the issue of legal-tender notes the following was part of the provisions concerning them:

And any of said notes when returned to the Treasury may be reissued from time to time, as the exigencies of the public service may require.

Congress must be the judge of the existence of any exigency requiring legislation. It may have information even now which the Supreme Court has no right to know anything about as to the objections foreign nations may have to our proposed action in regard to an interoceanic canal, or as to the peculiar relations of the western provinces of Mexico to our great railroad and mining interests. Can the court say we must tell them and publish to the world all our reasons for regarding an exigency as existing, or likely to arise, before we can pass upon questions of currency which in certain contingencies the court would say it was our unquestioned right to do? I deny that the court ever claimed or ever will claim any such power. In regard to the legal-tender notes Congress has, since the war, exercised its discretionary power over them in every variety of form; it has contracted their volume, and stopped contraction; it has increased the amount in circulation, and prohibited its Treasury officials from changing the denominations existing; the act of May, 1878, was perhaps a less notable exercise of the recognized power of Congress than the action taken in 1874. Under the auspices of Secretary McCulloch legal-tender notes had been by action of Congress retired and canceled till Congress intervened in February, 1868, and stopped further contraction, leaving $356,000,000 of them then outstanding. In October, 1872, the Acting Secretary of the Treasury issued $5,000,000 in excess of the $356,000,000. The legality of the act was at once controverted, and Secretary Sherman, as chairman of the Committee on Finance of the Senate, made a report, January 14, 1873, proving, to my mind conclusively, that the action of the Secretary was wholly without warrant of law. Some very good lawyers, however, differed with him, the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] being one, holding that the act of the Secretary was not illegal.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator will allow me to say that while I did differ with the report on that point of law, I did think the thing itself never ought to have been done.

Mr. BECK. That is true. I merely mentioned it because I saw that in the debate the Senator took part.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is quite right in regard to the position I took.

Mr. BAYARD. The committee reported against the legality of the Secretary's act.

Mr. BECK. That is just what I want to show. The committee, as the Senator from Delaware says, reported against the legality of the reissue of the five million. That was in 1873, on the 14th of January. But in September, 1873, when the failure of Jay Cooke & Co. alarmed the country and shook public confidence in all bankers, the President and his Secretary of the Treasury, in defiance of the Sherman report, and, as I think, in plain violation and defiance of law, issued $26,000,000 of legal-tender notes in excess of the $356,000,000, on the urgent demand and perhaps irresistible pressure upon them by the money power of the city of New York, doubtless of many of the men who are now so abusive of those of us who do not obey their orders and vote to destroy the notes they caused the then Secretary to reissue to suit their private interests. To avoid such complication, the committees of both Houses of Congress took up the subject when we met in December, 1873. Nearly all agreed that the power claimed by the executive officers to inflate or contract the currency to the extent of $44,000,000 to suit either personal or political interests could not be tolerated. We agreed that this was a Government of laws, and not of men; that stability in the volume of the currency was indispensable to the business interests of the people. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. DAWES] proposed $356,000,000 as the limit to be fixed; Mr. Ellis H. Roberts, of New York, another member of the committee, proposed $382,000,000, the then outstanding volume, and I, then a member of that committee, proposed $400,000,000 as recognizing the limit fixed by previous laws, and by the claim of right asserted by the President and his Secretary. My proposition prevailed in the House of Representatives by a large majority, as the record will show. Nobody doubted the constitutionality of the bill or the right of Congress to remove the uncertainty which executive action had attached to the volume of currency; expediency alone controlled the votes of members. For example, Mr. DAWES and all who agreed with him voted for the $382,000,000, as proposed by Mr. Roberts. It was clearly as unconstitutional in time of peace to increase the legal-tender notes $26,000,000 as it was $44,000,000. The Finance Committee of the Senate through its chairman (Senator now Secretary Sherman) reported a bill, March 23, 1874, fixing the legal-tender notes at $382,000,000. Although that committee had by its report in January, 1873, demonstrated that $356,000,000 was then the legal limitation, after long debate the Senate increased the committee's proposition up to $400,000,000 and instructed the committee to report a bill to that effect. Mr. Sherman on the 3d day of April, 1874, reported it back at $400,000,000, and it passed both Houses of Congress at $400,000,000. It was, however, coupled with provisions as to banking which the President thought might inflate the currency largely, and he vetoed it, no objection or suggestion being made by him as to the constitutional power of Congress to increase the currency from $356,000,000 to $400,000,000.

Mr. BAYARD. Will the Senator allow me to ask him to complete the history of that act and state that the position which I hold to-day is the one that I insisted on then; the same arguments that are preferred on that side of the question were urged by me in committee and out of committee, in the Senate and everywhere.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say, as I said in the beginning, that I have no doubt the Senator from Delaware in all his acts is influenced by the highest motives of patriotism.

Mr. BAYARD. I did not speak of the motive. I spoke of the fact.

Mr. BECK. I say now that the Senator from Delaware, in my judgment, has been consistent from the beginning to the end in the position he now maintains. In all the votes that he has given, so far as I know, he has maintained the position he is now maintaining; but the Senator from Delaware is not the American Senate, nor the House of Representatives, nor the sole representative of this people, although he is a highly respectable and very able Senator from Delaware. He was overruled. I am speaking of what Congress did.

Mr. BAYARD. All I asked was that the record be stated fully.

Mr. BECK. That is right, and I will not in the course of my speech allude to anything that will indicate that the Senator from Delaware has been inconsistent in any act of his. Soon after the occurrences to which I have just alluded a bill was passed and approved by the President, which was voted for by the present Secretary of the Treasury, fixing the legal-tender circulation at $382,000,000, at which it remained till modified by the free-banking law—that is, free to all bondholders and a close corporation against all others—further contraction under which was stopped by the act of May, 1878. During all these changes the men of the East raised no clamor, saw no danger to the Constitution; indeed, they caused the President and the Secretary to do the only illegal act done. But I need not amplify these well-known facts, nor further expose how hollow the present clamor is.

All the vast revenues collected since the war closed, except customs dues, have been payable, and were generally paid, in legal-tenders, which have been paid out over and over again for all the debts contracted by the Government, (except to the bondholders,) and to all its agents, employés, and pensioners. In this way in the last fifteen years they have, in time of peace, been reissued many times over.

Will any Senator assert that the exigencies requiring the currency Congress authorized during the war, and which the Supreme Court sustained, are ended, or have passed away? Is not the roll of pensioners as large as ever? Did we ever pay in any year as large a sum by $15,000,000 for that purpose as in the year just closed? Have the internal taxes, which were unknown before the war, and imposed to pay interest on the debt contracted to carry it on, been removed? The $116,000,000 collected annually, and the swarm of officials maintained to coerce their collection, furnish an emphatic answer in the negative. Has our once prosperous commerce and carrying trade on the high seas, which before the war brought our people large revenues and profits from other nations, been restored? Our deserted ship-yards and the $100,000,000 we now pay annually to foreigners, our commercial and political rivals, to enrich them and impoverish us, show that that exigency is increasing instead of passing away. Have the monstrous exactions which were imposed upon the people in the form of protective tariff taxation, on the pretense that they were only temporary war measures, soon to be removed when the exigency of impending war had passed away, been removed, or even lightened? We all know they have not; but are supported, clung to, and advocated by the retainers of the favored few who are licensed thus to rob the masses of the people with greater pertinacity than ever.

Is the national debt which the exigencies of war fastened on the country paid? Has the interest ceased? The monthly statements of the public debt furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury show that it is not only not paid, but the principal of the interest-bearing debt has increased largely in the last four years. I have before me the statements made December 1, 1875, and December 1, 1879. The principal of the interest-bearing debt, December 1, 1875, is $1,708,251,300, the interest on which, if I have calculated it correctly, was $95,471,230 a year. On the 1st of December, 1879, the principal of the interest-bearing debt is stated by the Secretary of the Treasury at $1,786,917,650, an increase of $78,666,350 in the last four years, notwithstanding all the purchases for the sinking fund, the bonds bought therefor being destroyed as soon as purchased. The Secretary tells us, in his report to Congress on the 1st day of December last, that he has paid as interest on the public debt for the last fiscal year $105,327,949, or nearly $5,000,000 more than was required four years ago. He further informs Congress that he needs $93,877,410 to pay the interest for the current fiscal year. In the face of all these facts I would like to know from any person, whether he be judge of the Supreme Court, a member of Congress, the President of the United States, or even a New York banker, what exigency ever existed which made it constitutional for Congress to issue legal-tender notes which does not now exist to authorize Congress to continue them in circulation, with all their debt-paying capacity unimpaired.

But, Mr. President, important and immense as all these things are, they are not all nor even the greater part of the exigencies now existing which require Congress to maintain, in all their usefulness and debt-paying capacity, the legal-tender notes of the United States. Gold forms no part of our ordinary circulation. There is hardly silver coin enough of full legal-tender quality allowed to be coined at the mints, no matter how much bullion there may be in the country to furnish $1 per capita to each of our people; the issues of the State banks have been taxed out of existence by Federal legislation; the national-bank notes are not a legal tender in any private transaction; the debts of the States, of the municipalities, of the railroads, of the other great corporations, and of individuals, exceed the debt of the United States at least threefold. Poor's Railroad Manual for last year stated the railroad debts alone at over $2,200,000,000. I assume they are greater now, as we have built nearly four thousand miles of railway in the last twelve months. Even if the national banks were required to redeem their notes at their own counters in coin, which they are not by this resolution, it would prove to be a delusion. The banks, by their now perfect combination, could and would so assort their notes as to keep them in circulation at points far removed from home. The issues of the Kentucky banks would circulate in Minnesota and Iowa, while those of the banks of these States would be the currency of Kentucky and Tennessee. Private contracts could not be enforced. There is not a single State in the Union, except New York, in which there is a legally established United States depository where coin can be demanded on paper money.

Suppose my colleague, General WILLIAMS, contracts with me to buy my farm, my crop of wheat, hogs, or cattle, and agrees to pay me on the 1st day of March at my house, $10,000, and on payment, on that day, take possession of the property. He comes, according to contract, with the money in legal-tender notes. I refuse to receive them. He cannot find national-bank notes enough to draw coin from the banks in his section of country; he cannot get coin from New York in less than four days. The property has advanced in value, and I sell it next day for $12,000, and deliver it to another. When he makes the tender in coin after he gets it, I tell him that he failed to comply with his agreement on the day specified, and he has no remedy. That is the condition in which all the people of the country will be placed by the passage of a law such as this resolution proposes. It is even worse than that; the national banks will not be required to redeem their own notes at their own counters in coin if this resolution becomes the law; these notes are still to remain lawful money, just as bank-notes are now lawful money; once a debt is paid in them the plea of payment would be good on proof of payment in and acceptance of greenbacks. All the acts requiring the redemption of bank-notes provide, not for redemption in legal-tender notes, but in lawful money. Neither the Government nor any individual could demand coin from them after this resolution passes into the form of law; payment in the greenback, with its legal-tender quality destroyed, would be a compliance by the banks with all their obligations. The first section of the act of February 25, 1862, volume 12, Statutes at Large, page 345, makes the United States notes "lawful money and a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, within the United States, except duties on imports and interest on the public debt." Were these notes degraded below the rank of lawful money when, in March, 1869, notwithstanding the indorsement on their back, they were repudiated by Congress as unfit to pay the bondholders the principal of their bonds? That will not be asserted, and it is equally sure that the national banks will, if this resolution passes, continue to redeem their notes in them under their contracts or charters, because they remain "lawful money." Secretary Sherman, in an interview evidently prepared carefully by himself and published in the New York Herald of December 12, 1879, said, when insisting on the repeal of the legal-tender clause of the greenback notes:

The banks as heretofore under existing laws would redeem their circulating notes in United States notes.

When he says that can and shall be done, the speculations of Senators as to the construction of the resolution may as well cease; that will be the result, that is what the bankers understand; the Secretary's assurance and construction is all they ask or care for. With that construction given no man living outside of a few large cities could ever enforce compliance with any contract when payment at a given time is a condition-precedent to its enforcement. The zeal of the great moneyed corporations for the degradation of the greenbacks is obvious and natural. They intend to control the currency circulation of the United States. Greenbacks with the legal-tender quality stricken out would continue to be a safe and convenient currency for them to redeem their own notes in; a run on them for coin would be impossible in that condition of things. They profess to be much afraid of inflation, and their advocates are extremely apprehensive because of the ignorance of Senators and Representatives in regard to the true interests of their constituents and the danger of reckless inflation by a foolish Congress which may overthrow and destroy all values, all industries, and all stability in business. My apprehension is from the power sought to be given to the national bankers. They can inflate the currency up to 90 per cent. of the outstanding bonds of the United States, or to $1,600,000,000, and contract it as they like when it is their interest to do so. Apprehension of the repeal of their charters while we have other currency to rely on has prevented any serious attempts in that direction so far. The $346,000,000 of legal-tender notes now nominally outstanding is the best, perhaps, with the hostility of the bankers and the Secretary of the Treasury to the issue and use of silver coin, the only, check on national bankers and their issues; that amount cannot be curtailed or altered except after full and lengthened discussion, first in the House and next in the Senate, and after passing both Houses the bill changing the present status of the legal-tenders would have to run the gauntlet of a presidential veto, and we have all felt the power of that. The country would have full notice of the change, and would at least have ample time to prepare for it.

Strike this money down, leave us at the mercy of the national bankers, and what follows? They have an organization as compact and close as the whisky ring, the tariff ring, the railroad ring, or any other ring. They meet in convention periodically and determine, not what is best for the country, but what will most certainly put most money into their own coffers. Let them have full control of the currency of the country, and when by inflated issues of their paper promises kept in circulation in States far remote from their banking houses, most probably redeemable in United States notes not legal-tenders, they have excited the country to the highest point of wild speculation, they can by telegrams to each other, secretly, in a single night, when crops must be moved, when conditions exist demanding the highest possible amount of circulation, combine and contract, call in debts, refuse discounts, bankrupt the country, buy property at their own prices, and, when they get it by ruining its legitimate owners, again inflate and sell to suit themselves. Are they too patriotic and virtuous to be guilty of such acts and to take such advantages? The newspapers they pay so well may say they are, and will doubtless denounce me and other plain men who claim to be as patriotic and more dependent for future success on faithful devotion to the best interests of the people as any national banker, whether he be descended from Judas Iscariot or the unrepentent thief on the cross. I will not so vote as to place such power in the hands of any body of men who represent nobody but themselves and their stockholders, who would laugh in your face if you insisted that they ought to look beyond them and consider the rights of the people. As power and trust must be lodged somewhere, I prefer to keep and hold it in the hands of Senators and Representatives who have no other interests, can hope for no promotion except as they promote the best interests of the people they represent.

Every act of the combinations of wealth has been to impose burdens on the people in order to enrich themselves. When in time of war the legal-tenders were issued, the Government was forced to repudiate them to the extent of refusing to receive them for customs dues and interest on the public debt, so as to increase tariff taxation for the protection of favored classes up to the gold standard and make it the interest of all protected monopolists to depreciate the paper money as much below gold as possible. The bondholders alone demanded gold for their interest when all other creditors of the Government, including the soldiers and sailors, were content to take its paper promises at par. It was thus made the interest of the money-kings to raise the premium on the gold they alone could obtain as high as possible to enable them to sell their gold interest for the highest possible price; still they boast of their patriotism and the great aid they rendered the Government by lending it money on these terms. Not satisfied with that, they demanded that they alone should be allowed to control the currency of the country. For their benefit all the State banks were taxed out of existence, and they were furnished with currency as national banks up to 90 per cent. of the face value of the gold interest-bearing bonds they held, paying a tax of only 1 per cent. for it, with authority to lend it to the people at whatever rate of interest the States in which they lived allowed interest to be charged. Not content with even these enormous exclusive privileges, in March, 1869, they obtained from Congress a declaratory act further repudiating the legal-tender notes, each one of which had written on it by law that it should be a legal tender at its par value for all debts public and private, except interest and customs, which law declared that the principal of the bonds should be paid in coin; and in 1870 they had them exempted from all taxation, State, Federal, and municipal.

In 1873 they had silver demonetized by methods so secret and disreputable that no man has yet been found to avow that he knew when they were perpetrated. In short, every step taken has been to advance the price of gold and depreciate the value of paper money, and now these men are a unit in clamoring to destroy its legal-tender quality altogether, and denounce as repudiationists, fools, and dishonest men, all who will not obey their orders. I hope before this Congress adjourns it will require them to keep all their reserves in their own banks, or in the Treasury of the United States, and require them all to be held in gold and silver coin, and, as they seem so earnestly to desire it, require them to redeem all their own notes at their own counters in coin, on demand, and we surely ought to pass a law forbidding the issuing of any new bank charter that does not contain these provisions, providing further that there shall be no renewal or extension of existing charters to any bank until it had redeemed, in accordance with its contract, all its currency now outstanding. Many of these charters expire soon. The agreement was that they should pay back to the United States, at or before the expiration of the grants, in lawful money of the United States, as many dollars as there was circulation issued to them; not alone what might be presented for redemption. That was the only provision which was for the benefit of the people. Eight, perhaps ten, per cent. of the circulation issued has been, or in one way or another will be, destroyed in the course of the twenty years of the banks' existence under these charters. We are entitled to be paid the full amount of all the notes we issued, and have a right to the benefit of all notes destroyed. It will amount to somewhere near $30,000,000, and will go that far toward the reduction of the national debt.

The bankers and the papers they control will doubtless denounce that proposition also; but I hope Congress will not be deterred from asserting the rights of their constituents by any apprehension on that subject. Abuse is sometimes more wholesome than flattery, and rarely hurts when men are right. The banks have no just ground of complaint if we require them to pay every dollar issued to them, in accordance with their contracts; the loss by the destruction of these notes did not fall on them. They loaned out all the currency they received. If I borrowed $10,000 from one of them, and it was burned up in my house the night after I got it I had to pay the bank every dollar of it with interest. Why should the bank withhold it from the Government? It was my loss, not theirs, and I am more interested that the public debt should be reduced than that the bank should be paid twice, as it will be if it is not required to account for the money I paid it, and seeks to avoid payment because the Government fails to produce the destroyed notes the bank borrowed from it, which were loaned to and lost by me. Suppose five Chicago bondholders had each deposited $12,000 of their bonds, and, as national bankers, received $50,000 of national-bank currency which they had loaned out, taking good security, a day or two before the great fire in that city, and it had all been burned up. Is there any more reason why these bankers should not account for every dollar of it to the Government before they are permitted to withdraw their bonds deposited to secure the repayment of the loan of currency to them than there would be if every dollar of it was in existence? I suppose nobody will venture to say that there is. Why not pass a law at once requiring all those settlements to be made as originally agreed on, even if a new contract is entered into and a new charter granted afterward.

I am not now discussing the policy of the national-bank system, nor seeking to interfere with the privileges granted to them. I seek only to secure to the people their rights under the system, and make it work as much as possible for their interest and convenience, and I am opposing the destruction or degradation of the legal-tender notes of the United States which all citizens, State banks, and private bankers can use as currency without being dependent on national bankers for it. The absolute control of the currency of a people in the hands of a privileged few is a vast and may be a dangerous power. I fear it. Let me state a case to illustrate why. There may be others like it or even stronger for aught I know. I had seen in the public newspapers apparently exaggerated statements of the profits made by the First National Bank of New York; knowing that returns of the condition of the banks had to be made from time to time by them to the Comptroller of the Currency, I sent to that officer for the returns made to him by that bank for the year 1879, which he furnished me. I hold them in my hand, and they show among other things the following exhibits in the statements made on January 1, April 4, June 14, October 2, and December 12, 1879:

First. That the capital stock paid in during all that period was $500,000.

Second. That the surplus fund was $1,000,000, except on December 14, when it was $1,500,000.

Third. The undivided profits January 1, were $142,670.42; April 4, $339,095.60; June 14, $579,018.88; October 2, $804,511.26; December 12, $267,700.84—total undivided profits, $2,132,997.

Whether these undivided profits at the dates given were carried on the books as not called for from one date to another, I do not know; but if the $804,511.26 on hand October 2 represents all from January 1, 1879, it certainly shows a clear profit of $661,840.84 in nine months on a paid-in capital of $500,000—a profit sufficient to satisfy any Shylock.

Fourth. The bank had United States deposits, January 1, $24,759,948.50; April 4, $69,927,704.43; June 14, $128,109,071.04; October 2, $3,601,550.

The interest on the money belonging to the United States lying in that bank on the 4th day of June at 6 per cent. was worth to the bank over $21,000 a day. They show further in these statements among their liabilities to the syndicate, profit and loss—all profit, of course—independent of their other profits, syndicate, $2,153,959.42. All of this, recollect, was made out of a capital of only $500,000 paid in.

Mr. CONKLING. What was the profit the Senator states?

Mr. BECK. I cannot state the entire profits during the entire year with absolute certainty; but if these undivided profits are different sums, they amount to over $2,000,000. The syndicate profit and loss is $2,131,000. Whether or not they carried the statements of unpaid profits up to the next statement I am not able to say. I hope to ascertain the facts more fully hereafter. I will say, however, to the Senator from New York that before any more refunding is done, and we are now being pressed on that subject, I shall try to see how much what has been already done has cost the people of these United States in commissions and in double interest and how much it has been possible for bankers to make out of the money that has been left in their hands.

I came to the conclusion, looking over these statements, that the best banking capital a man can have is the good-will and patronage of the Secretary of the Treasury. Suppose the Senator from New York were the best banker and I were to go to him and say, "I want to go into partnership with you;" and the Senator should say to me. "What capital have you got?" "None." "What business experience have you got?" "None." "What do you propose to do?" "I propose to bring you the good-will and the deposits of the Secretary." I think the Senator would take me into partnership and he would make more money by doing it than he ever made in his life, and we could contribute largely to any campaign fund desired by the Secretary.

I do not say that any of these things have been done; but I say a system under which they are possible is a vicious system and dangerous to liberty, and one that I shall try to suppress if I can. In any other loans that are made I shall endeavor to make it impossible for the Treasury of the United States to be used to aid one set of bankers against another set of bankers, or to allow the money of the people to be used in the business of anybody, any more than I would allow them to aid one manufacturer against another or one ship-builder against another, or any other class of men anywhere, with the money belonging to this people.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to interrupt him for the purpose of making some correction of his statement?

Mr. BECK. If I have made any wrong statement, of course.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator represents the First National Bank to be a bank of a capital in the first place of only $500,000.

Mr. BECK. I have their own statement in my hand which says so.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator will find that the capital of the bank originally was $500,000; that they have an accession to it of undivided surplus of $1,277,000 in addition; that they paid in taxes last year $237,479.63; and that another fact is, that the Secretary of the Treasury never deposited a single dollar in the bank. All that was deposited there was deposited by subscribers to the loan.

Mr. BECK. I did not say——

Mr. MORRILL. And they have——

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I decline to be further interrupted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. EATON in the chair.) The Senator from Kentucky declines to be interrupted.

Mr. MORRILL. It is a matter that ought to be understood.

Mr. BECK. I have made no charge against the Secretary. I say these profits were made out of this capital of $500,000; that they had a surplus of $1,000,000 at the beginning of the year, and $1,500,000 at the end of it, besides all these profits, and a syndicate profit of over $2,000,000.

Mr. MORRILL. But they negotiated $268,000,000, and did not make more than $\frac{8}{10}$ of 1 per cent. on what business they did in that respect.

Mr. BECK. Any system that enables one set of men to do that thing is a vicious system, and they are not the kind of men into whose hands we ought to place all the money and the currency of the United States, with power to control it as they please.

I will not aid in strengthening or in building up a system under which such favoritism, such subsidies, such discriminations, call them what you will, is not only possible, but is certain to arise and grow in magnitude as power is increased.

I think the passage of the resolution under consideration strongly tends to the perpetuation and extension of this condition of things, and shall therefore vote against it.

I will try in the future to give the people a chance to obtain bonds directly from the Government authorities by paying for them at any depository, instead of enriching a few men at the public expense. I will not discuss that now, however.

But, Mr. President, I would oppose the passage of the resolution at this time, independent of all these difficulties and dangers, on the ground that we have not yet regained permanent prosperity, and are not likely to do so until many of our laws are changed.

So long as our present barbarous navigation laws are maintained and our people are the only people upon earth who are not permitted to buy ships where they can buy them cheapest—indeed, are not permitted to buy them anywhere abroad—we must continue to be a poor, dependent, subsidiary nation on the great highways of commerce and pay to foreign nations, as we do now, over $100,000,000 a year to do our carrying trade. We might as well abandon all hope of greatness while these laws exist. The miserable falsehood that we are protecting home industry against pauper labor, which sounds so well, is best answered by the fact that we are building no foreign ocean-going steamers, and that not a single ship in any of the great lines from the great port of New York which cross the Atlantic is an American ship or carries the American flag. The few we have anywhere were built by taxation in the shape of subsidies, while the protected monopoly of the coastwise trade excludes all competition there, so that the home ship-owners can charge what they please. In short, we have surrendered our great foreign trade to foreign monopoly to secure the coastwise trade to home monopoly, the mass of this people, producers and consumers alike, being taxed to bear the burdens of both, while American labor is destroyed by (so-called) protection in our foreign trade.

The Secretary of the Treasury in his last report to Congress, page 28, stated that our small tonnage engaged in the foreign trade decreased last year 137,514 tons below what it was the year before. Only 23 per cent. of our combined imports and exports are carried in American ships; over 75 per cent. in foreign. Twenty years ago over 75 per cent. was carried in American ships. The Secretary adds:

> It is neither to the advantage nor the honor of the country that so immense a proportion of its foreign carrying trade has passed to other nations. * * * It is a grave question of public policy whether the period has not arrived when the unlimited right of purchase, as under the English statutes, should be extended to vessels as well as to other commodities.

I am glad the Secretary has called the attention of Congress to this subject, as I believe its time could be spent much more profitably in the passage of the bill I have before the Senate, to allow us to have free ships, than in passing resolutions to cripple our means of paying for them. Our high protective tariff is a confession that we do not intend to try to manufacture goods to sell outside of the limits of the United States. Our manufacturers are content with the tribute Congress authorizes them to levy from our own people. We boast of our wonderful ingenuity, and are justly proud of our magnificent machinery; we protect by patent monopolies all inventions. What does it all amount to? Only this: each improved machine is the slave of its owner, requiring no clothing and cheap food, if any; it performs the work of many human beings and drives them out of employment. Yet the price to consumers is kept up by combination among machine-owners and by tariff taxation on all outside who dare to compete. All the people in the world wear clothes which cost them 50 per cent. less than the people of the United States and sleep under blankets 50 per cent. cheaper than ours. None of these facts appear in the false reports we are periodically flooded with, which tell us how much cheaper men can buy corn, flour, bacon, petroleum, butter, eggs, and food generally here than elsewhere, and call eatables the cost of living, when they are less than one-fourth of it. Let us examine this great boom of prosperity which the bankers, bondholders, and their allies attribute to resumption, and on the strength of which they seek to strike down, as though all danger was past, the legal-tender money of the country. Has our commerce or carrying trade increased? No. Are we sending more of our manufactures to other countries? No; but we were blessed with bounteous harvests; abundance prevailed in all our land. Other nations were cursed with blighted crops, and scarcity existed everywhere else. Our producers realized good prices; our transportation routes of all sorts were taxed to their utmost capacity; others were laid out and put in operation. The money received was freely invested and expended; confidence was restored as men's pockets were filled. In short, we were blessed in the proportion that other people in other countries were cursed.

The balance of trade was in our favor, of course it was. Protective tariffs prevented men who sold wheat, flour, and beef abroad from buying what they needed elsewhere; they were compelled to pay 50 per cent. more at home; but that brought the money here, inflated the currency, stimulated trade, and, while it was robbery of the producer, he had done so well he did not grumble. Reverse these providential conditions next year, let abundant crops prevail over Europe and scarcity in agricultural products prevail here, and all the conditions of our present prosperity would disappear more rapidly than they sprang up, as nine-tenths of our exports have been simply food in one form or other, or raw materials put in shape for cheap transportation. Have we as legislators any right to assume that the exceptional conditions of last year will continue? Surely not. Therefore it seems to me to be sheer folly to interfere with our currency on the assumption that it will; and it is absolutely certain that whenever we cannot send abroad unprotected and unprotectable agricultural products the balance of trade, even under our artificial high protective tariff, is gone. We may keep up a semblance of it by applying the same rule to all other things that we now do to ships—absolutely prohibit our people from purchasing anything abroad; then, if we can sell anything to foreign nations, all the so-called balance of trade will be in our favor, and our politicians may continue to deceive ignorant people. The protective system of robbery is better than highway robbery in this, the victims are not conscious of the wrong, and they can be made to enjoy the swindle by being induced to believe that they are patriotic in their sacrifices.

I cannot refrain from reading in this connection, as it applies with equal force to the tariff robbery as it does to the ship-building folly, an extract from a letter written by one of the wisest, perhaps the wisest, living statesman in America, Hon. Horatio Seymour, to Hon. Erastus Brooks, a short time ago. He said:

There is no reason entitled to respect to be given for our navigation laws so far as they forbid our merchants to buy ships elsewhere for the purposes of foreign trade. The governments of Europe, more wise, do what they can to build up their commerce, and their flags are seen in our harbors waving over vessels bought by their merchants where they can get them upon the best terms. Every such flag seems to reproach the folly of laws which practically forbid American citizens to carry American produce across the ocean, or to share in the great profits of the world's commerce. There is an alarm about communistic principles. What are they? Some wild theorists claim that it is the duty of government to give labor to workmen, and to take care that property shall be so held in common that what one earns may be given to another. We frown upon these men and denounce their purposes. But what do they claim more than a few builders of steamships get under our navigation laws? These demand that all such vessels for foreign trade must be made by them; that the buyer, besides paying for what they are worth, must divide some of his property with the builders by giving them more than they are worth in the markets of the world. It will be found in the end that communism which lurks in laws which force men to buy of certain classes, and to pay more for what they want than they can be bought for elsewhere, and which also divide men's estates under cover of taxation, which indirectly go to favored individuals, is more hurtful and dangerous than the communism which says what it means, and which destroys itself by an open declaration of its purposes.

That is a brave, manly statement of a great truth, and I may as well here as anywhere illustrate why I so emphatically indorse it. All the professions of the opponents of free ships, of the subsidy-seekers, of the protective tariff monopolists, are based on the assumption that they seek to protect American labor against foreign pauper competition. Their zeal for the maintenance of a high rate of wages and constant employment to workingmen constitute the staple of their appeals to Congress for the perpetuation of the systems they advocate; yet in the face of all these professions the great ship-yards which used to resound with the sound of the adze and the hammer in constructing our ships are all closed and the thousands of skilled mechanics once employed there are tramps or driven into other employments. I have seen the oldest and best of the salt-works of America on the Kanawha, in West Virginia, closed and the laborers and their families reduced to starvation under a contract with other protected companies, which paid the owners many thousands of dollars annually as dead rent, to prevent competition with the other companies and enable them by combination, protected by a tariff of 100 per cent., to tax every human being in the land for the salt they were compelled to use, and they clamored all the time for the protection of American labor.

I hold in my hand a letter from an intelligent gentleman in Saint Louis, Missouri, written a few days ago in answer to an inquiry as to the arrangement by which the "Vulcan Iron Works" in that city were closed. At least eight hundred men used to be employed there, many of them mechanics and skilled laborers; at the usual average of five to a family they represented four thousand human beings. He says:

I learned to-day that each of the Bessemer companies pays $1 a ton into the pool for all steel manufactured by them. The Vulcan received $70,000 last year as a bonus for stopping their furnaces, besides the $70,000, their proportion in the pool; so their income last year was $140,000 from Bessemer companies alone. This was given in a general conversation with one of their directors.

That is a specimen of the protection given by Congress and its pets to American labor; it is the protection given to the lamb by the wolf; $140,000 a year paid to a few rich men as the price of starving four thousand people. A system under which such things are possible must be vicious. Mr. J. S. Moore, who is known to many Senators as one of the most intelligent writers on the subject of taxation, in a letter addressed to the Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, January 3, 1880, explains how these bounties can be paid to avoid competition or a reduction of combination prices. He says:

I shall again direct your attention to-day to the great glaring tariff oppression practiced in levying $28 duty on a ton of steel rails. Behold in two lines again the great outrage on a free people:

Price of steel rails in the United States	$70 to $73	per ton.
Price of English steel rails in Liverpool, £8	40	per ton.
Difference	30	per ton.

Thus you see the duty of $28 a ton gives our American monopolists the full pound of flesh.

* * * * * * *

Yet you keep bound over to the avarice and monopoly of an organized steel-rail association more than eighty thousand miles of railway, and forty-five millions of people, who eventually must pay for this increased price on steel rails.

The producers of the soil whose markets are at a distance naturally demand cheap rates of freight from railways. Above all, they desire new roads that can be cheaply built. But if, by a direct piece of class legislation, eleven corporations are given a monopoly of $28 tariff royalty on a ton of steel rails, the farmers as well as the great consumers are simply oppressed by such a law.

* * * * * * *

Is it not self-evident that in this short-lived passage of the prosperity "boom" the people are again creating works on an inflated basis? And is it true or is it false that the shameful duty of $28 a ton on steel rails is directly inflating every mile of steel rails (calculated at one hundred tons to the mile) with $2,800 on account of the tariff alone? Let it be remembered also that the steel-rail production of the United States is second only to that of Great Britain, and it is even boasted that in this respect it will surpass that country this very year of 1880. Surely, the great steel-rail works of the United States will not be foolish enough to plead the baby act, or the usual plea of an industrial infancy.

In conclusion, I will only say that keeping the present duty on steel rails is simply equivalent to legislating some $28,000,000 to $30,000,000 per annum into the pockets of eleven steel-rail corporations, pressed out from the consumers of the great, the free, the prosperous, and the tariff-ridden people of the United States.

I am not making war specially on the iron interest. I would reduce the protection to the revenue point, and that would be ample. All the other monopolies of silk, wool, &c., are just as bad. I use these illustrations now only to show that we can and do only cheat ourselves and each other by our vicious legislation. We cannot extort from any other people in the world any higher prices for our manufactures than any other nation is willing to sell like articles for; therefore we have little or no export trade in manufactures and can have none, no commerce, no ships, nothing except what starving people abroad, in a year of bad harvests, were obliged at any sacrifice to buy from us; and as we could not trade with them, no matter how badly we wanted, for example, their railroad iron, we had to demand money, come home, and pay $30 per ton more for the same article; and that is the lauded balance of trade in our favor, from which no revenue to support the Government is derived; upon the strength of which we are at once to declare permanent prosperity, throw our legal-tenders to the winds, surrender all our currency to the national bankers, or be denounced as repudiators if we hesitate.

I have examined the detailed report of the Bureau of Statistics in the Treasury Department for the first nine months of the year 1879, and compared our exports and imports during that period with those of the corresponding months of the year 1878, and I fail to find anything in them to give assurance of continued commercial prosperity.

Our exports from January 1 to October 1, 1878, were	$528,696,334
And for the same period in 1879	509,508,519
A falling off of	19,187,815
Our imports for that period in 1879 were	$355,736,481
And for the same period in 1878	324,611,718
Excess in 1879 over 1878	31,124,763

So that we have really been exporting less and importing more last year than the year preceding by $50,000,000. I said we were only sustained by the accidental demand for bread in other countries. A few plain facts prove it:

From January 1 to October 1, 1879, we exported of wheat and flour	$140,406,861
In 1878, same period	110,303,439
Excess in 1879 over 1878	30,103,422
In September, 1879, we exported of wheat and flour	64,726,058
In September, 1878	57,413,273
Excess in September, 1879	7,316,785

From these facts, and many others I might state, it is painfully apparent that our trade and commerce is not increasing. We export no manufactures of woolens, only a few of the commonest cotton goods, nothing worthy of the name of manufactures, while our imports of staple goods, even under the high protective tariff, are increasing, mainly by reason of the enormous price asked now, under the so-called boom, by home producers. As specimens: the imports of woolen dress goods have increased for nine months in 1879 over 1878, $2,000,000; silk dress goods, over $3,500,000; manufactures of cotton, over $3,000,000, and so with other staples. In short, we are falling off in all things except what people must have to eat, and our imports are increasing by reason of the enormous profits asked for all manufactured articles at home. Even the so-called balance of trade is a mere temporary chance to steal from the products of the farmers a large portion of their profits by forcing them, while they must sell in open competition abroad, unprotected, to buy from protected monopolies here. Refined sugar seems to be the principal article the export of which is increasing; it shows over $3,500,000 gain in 1879 over 1878; that is another trick; the melado, or sugar from which it is made, is imported as the lowest grade at the minimum duty, and the highest duty collected on the highest grade is refunded when it is refined and exported; so that our apparent prosperity in that increase of business is only an increase in a costly and successful fraud.

It is a humiliating fact that every pretended advancement of the interests of the people by Congress in the last twenty years has been in the interest of combinations of wealth and against the interest of the toiling masses. Who would work if he could be a banker, favored with Government deposits as the First National Bank of New York has been? What manufacturer cares to compete for the commerce of the world when Congress compels our own people to pay him and his comrades whatever they see fit to ask for their goods? What stability can there be in business when profits are secured by legislation instead of competition—profits so great that everybody who can rushes into the business, gluts the home market, and refuse or are unable to take such prices as the balance of the world pays? What good did our great land grants to railroads do the people when we erected by law barriers against receiving the products of the countries we professed such anxiety to reach? Taxes for subsidies, taxes for protection, taxes for everything, seems to be the height to which statesmanship aspires. Perhaps I have said enough to show why I do not believe in the argument in favor of the passage of the resolution, which is based on the claim of the assured permanent prosperity of the country. If I could see American ships on the high seas earning and keeping at home the $100,000,000 we are now annually paying to foreign nations; if I could see our manufactures of wool, cotton, and iron exported to supply the wants of South America, China, and Japan, bringing back to us the products of these countries at the same prices other nations obtain them, to furnish material for our workshops, I would have great confidence in an assured prosperity. So long as all these things are made impossible by vicious legislation, I am not prepared to interfere with the present usefulness of the notes of the United States. If the time comes, as it may in the future under better laws, that an honest, not a forced balance of trade in our favor, earned by our superior ingenuity and skill, when we are drawing coin and obtaining credit from other nations in a reasonably assured continuance of exchange of commodities—for all trade in the end is barter—and when the people are allowed to coin their silver as freely as they now can their gold, I may consent to withdraw all our promises to pay; but I must see all these things ahead much more clearly than I do now, before I turn the money of this people over absolutely to the tender mercy of the national-bankers. The truth is, we are a combination and a corporation ridden people. I do not propose, in this condition of things, to surrender all our currency to the great banking corporations; its proposed degradation means its speedy destruction; its refusal at the custom-house, by the banks, by all the corporations and combinations of wealth opposed to it. It would be at a discount at once in the hands of the people just as the trade-dollar, though more valuable intrinsically than the standard dollar, is; because it has no legal-tender quality, and is that far repudiated by Congress. Of course so-called resumption will be maintained, if the Secretary has to sell $500,000,000 of 5 per cent. bonds to do it, as he claims the right to do under the resumption act. Nothing but the exhaustion of the credit of the country can stop that. It was accomplished by the bankruptcy of thousands and the impoverishment of millions of the people. It could have been effected years before without any such results if the silver coinage had not been clandestinely stricken down and the legal-tender notes had been accepted at the custom-house. It became possible at last only by the even restricted restoration of silver to the coinage, and the reception in violation of law of legal-tenders for customs dues. The moment the greenback is destroyed, as now proposed, war will be re-opened with redoubled force against silver, and we will be again reduced to the gold standard and to the tender mercy of the bankers and bondholders. The fact that all public and private debts can be paid in silver coin—and all interest on bonds is by law payable in it when it is taken for customs taxes—makes it impossible for bondholders to demand gold. They know it; and their zeal in behalf of this resolution grows out of the fact that they regard it as a great stride in the direction of the firm establishment of the single gold standard. It is simply a continuation of a struggle that always has existed, and never will cease while liberty lasts—the efforts of wealth and privileges to bring the toiling masses to their feet, and the resistance of the people against the encroachments of power. The contest is unequal. It is trained and well-paid regulars against untrained and unorganized militia.

I have never knowingly struck a blow in my political career that was not aimed against the greedy combinations of wealth seeking advantages. If we can prolong the contest a little while longer the representation from the great agricultural regions will be felt as it has never been before on these great questions, and the tone of men from the protected and favored regions will be less arrogant than now.

When at the first session of this Congress we had the courage, without consulting or waiting for reports from committees, to put quinine on the free list, a howl of indignation went up from the protected monopolists. I was honored with printed circulars and anonymous letters telling me what fools and knaves we all were, and especially what an idiot I was for the part I had taken in it. What has happened? Mr. Moore, in the letter I read from previously, says:

> The thanks and acknowledgment for this boon belong to the House of Representatives and Senate direct, without the intervention of committees. As members of Congress, therefore, allow me to congratulate you on the result, which I will give you in two lines:
> | | Per oz. |
> |---|---|
> | Price of quinine January 2, 1879, duty 20 per cent | $3 70 |
> | Price of quinine January 2, 1880, free of duty | 2 60 |
> | Reduction | 1 10 |
> I need not dwell on the sound policy of having freed quinine from a duty. The fever-smitten millions and the hospitals will and do surely feel the full force of the foregoing two lines. Nor have Messrs. Powers & Weightman and Rosengarten & Sons ceased to manufacture quinine. On the contrary, they are nobly holding their own in full competition with the so-called pauper quinine of Europe.

Senators must not forget that a majority of the common laborers of this country work for less than $12 a month. It cost them each more than two days' hard labor to earn the $1.10 which Congress had for so many years forced them to pay to two or three of the Philadelphia pet monopolists before they were allowed to buy an ounce of quinine to save their own lives or those of their stricken wives and children. Do not forget that by that one little act we saved more than four days' hard work to every cook and house-girl—because they rarely get over $6 a month—on each ounce of quinine she is obliged to buy; and the comfort of that reflection will be a full recompense for all the abuse of the metropolitan press, or of the advocates of all such monopolies; and there are hundreds of them still left.

Let Senators ask themselves how have the colossal fortunes which have sprung up like mushrooms in this country been amassed. Did these men trade with the people of other nations, and by superior skill, energy, or intelligence bring home the money made out of them? No; they made them out of congressional legislation, which, under the name and guise of protection in one form or other, protected them not against foreigners, but against the right of the people of the United States to buy anything without paying heavy tribute to the favored combination. Examine into the business of any of them, from the First National Bank of New York to the Bessemer steel monopolies. All their vast profits grow out of class legislation. All they make is wrung from the toiling millions at home. There are fourteen hundred millions of people outside of the United States; only fifty million inside. Why is it impossible for the fifty millions of Americans to trade with the fourteen hundred million? Simply and only because the favored few in our own midst have so arranged congressional legislation as to give them the control of all our business and the right to make us pay what they please for everything we must have. Now, when, by the blessing of Providence, and in spite of legislation, the farmers of the country have drawn large sums of money in open market from foreign nations in return for food, they are at once told they have too much money; that it must be destroyed; that they will overspeculate and break themselves; that the bankers alone can be trusted to regulate how much money they shall be allowed to have, and what shall be its character. I shall continue to resist all such assumptions, of which I think this resolution will prove to be one of the most pronounced.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President——

Mr. VOORHEES. If the Senator from Texas does not desire to proceed to-day, as I understand he does not, I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, leaving the Senator from Texas on the floor for to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN GEORGIA.

Mr. GORDON. While the galleries are being cleared, I ask the Senate to take up and pass the bill to create an additional judicial district in Georgia, unanimously reported from the Committee on the Judiciary. I think there can be no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HOAR in the chair.) By unanimous consent the doors may be considered open, and the motion entertained.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 3034) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Macon, Georgia, and to transfer certain counties from the northern to the southern district in said State, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment was, to strike out the fifth section in the following words:

> All offenses committed in either of said divisions shall be cognizable and indictable within said division.

And insert in lieu thereof:

> Prosecutions for crimes or offenses hereafter committed in either of the subdivisions shall be cognizable within such division; and all prosecutions for crimes or offenses heretofore committed within either of said counties, taken as aforesaid from the northern district, or committed in the southern district as hitherto constituted, shall be commenced and proceeded with as if this act had not been passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1, section 6, before the word "actions," to insert the word "civil;" so as to read:

> Civil actions or proceedings now pending at Savannah, in said southern district, which would under this act be brought in the western division of said district may be transferred, by the consent of all the parties, to said western division, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio who has charge of this bill to state briefly what changes it makes in the present condition of the Georgia courts.

Mr. THURMAN. Nothing in the wide world but to provide for holding a court at Macon and that the southern district shall be divided, as several other districts have been, into two divisions.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And it puts four counties or three, or whatever the number, from the northern into the southern district.

Mr. ALLISON. And it adds one place for holding court?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is all.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask another question for information.

Mr. THURMAN. It creates no new office.

Mr. ALLISON. Does it provide that the circuit court shall be held at all the places where the district court is to be held?

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. I merely wanted to know.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and thirty-seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 21, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MARE ISLAND.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish this House any and all information in possession of his Department relating to the formation of bars and deposits of mud, sand, and gravel in the bay at or near Mare Island, and further to inform this House whether any steps have been taken or are contemplated to arrest such formations or deposits, and whether in his opinion such formations or deposits can be permanently prevented.

MUSCLE SHOALS CANAL, TENNESSEE RIVER.

Mr. LOWE. I send to the Clerk's desk a memorial from a large number of citizens of Alabama, Tennessee, and Georgia in favor of the speedy completion of the Muscle Shoals Canal on the Tennessee River. Let the memorial be read and published in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The memorial was read as follows, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

To the Congress of the United States:

The undersigned citizens of Tennessee, Alabama, and Georgia indorse the action of the river convention held at Huntsville, Alabama, January 8, 1880, and we respectfully and most earnestly pray Congress to embody in bills the recommendations contained in the following resolutions unanimously adopted by said convention:

"Resolved, That in the opinion of this body the necessities and best interests of the country demand the speedy completion of the improvements on the Tennessee River.

"Resolved, That this convention earnestly requests the immediate appropriation of $150,000 to prevent the stoppage of the work now being successfully prosecuted on the Muscle Shoals Canal, and that a further sum of $550,000 be appropriated for the continuance of the work during the current year."

J. H. MADDOX.

Mr. BRAGG. I see by the RECORD of this morning that near the close of the session yesterday unanimous consent was granted, at the request of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. HENKLE,] for the withdrawal from the files of the House of papers in the case of J. H. Maddox, there being no adverse report thereon. I desire to say that that case is before my committee, has been submitted to a sub-committee, and an adverse report has been agreed upon. With the permission of the House, we desire an opportunity to present that report.

Mr. HENKLE. I desire to state that the gentleman whose claim the papers represent came to me and made a request that I ask for leave to withdraw the papers. Such requests are very frequently made of members. I have no knowledge whatever of the nature of the claim, of its merits or of its demerits. Of course, it is with the House to permit or refuse the withdrawal of the papers.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] asks the revocation of the order made on yesterday for the withdrawal of the papers in the case stated. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HENKLE] who submitted the request for leave to withdraw those papers now makes no opposition to the revocation of the order. If there be no objection the order will be revoked.

There was no objection.

GENERAL FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

Mr. SPARKS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3764) for the relief of General Fitz-John Porter, &c., accompanied by a report in writing; which bill was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. McCOOK. On behalf of the minority of the committee I desire to present views dissenting from those in the report of the majority.

The SPEAKER. The two reports will be printed together, as is usual in such cases.

Mr McCOOK. The report of the minority is accompanied by a joint resolution which I shall propose as a substitute for the bill reported by the majority.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution comes in as a part of the views of the minority.

Mr. SPARKS. I now ask that the report of the majority, together with the views of the minority, and the accompanying bill and joint resolution, be printed in the RECORD. I also ask that the bill be made a special order for Friday, the 13th day of February next, after the morning hour, and from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. McCOOK. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the bill will be made the special order for Friday, February 13, after the morning hour, and from day to day until disposed of.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. SPARKS moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL GOLD BANKS.

Mr. CRAPO. I ask consent to report from the Committee on Banking and Currency a substitute for the bill (H. R. No. 2427) authorizing the conversion of national gold banks.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Is that reported for action at this time?

Mr. CRAPO. It is.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Then I must call for the regular order.

Mr. CRAPO. It will elicit no discussion, and will take but a moment.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Let it be read, and in the mean time I will reserve my right to object.

The substitute was read. It provides that any national gold bank organized under the provisions of the laws of the United States may, in the manner and subject to the provisions prescribed by section 5154 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, for the conversion of banks incorporated under the laws of any State, cease to be a gold bank and become such an association as is authorized by section 5133 for carrying on the business of banking, and shall have the same powers and privileges, and shall be subject to the same duties, responsibilities, and rules, in all respects, as are prescribed by law for such associations.

Mr. CRAPO. I desire to say that the object of this bill——

Mr. REAGAN. That bill deserves a great deal of consideration, and I must object to it now.

Mr. CRAPO. I think a few words of explanation will convince the gentleman of the propriety of considering the bill at this time.

Mr. REAGAN. I want time to look into the provisions of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If there is to be any debate upon this matter I think I must call for the regular order.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] will withdraw his objection.

Mr. WEAVER. I fear the provisions of the bill are not sufficiently understood, and I must object.

Mr. PAGE. Has not the committee the right to report at any time?

The SPEAKER. There is a rule giving the committee that right; but there is also another rule which states that the morning hour shall not be dispensed with on any day except by a two-thirds vote of the House. The Chair, therefore, thinks it is a fair construction of the rule that the morning hour shall not be interrupted even by the Committee on Banking and Currency, or by any other committee having the right under any rule to present a report, upon which the majority of the House would have the power to decide.

Mr. CALKINS. The rule does not allow consideration, but simply authorizes the committee to report.

The SPEAKER. Reporting a bill is equivalent to its consideration, except that after a bill has been reported the House may pass upon the question of consideration.

Mr. CALKINS. I have no objection to this bill. The rule has always been construed to mean that the right to report carries with it the right to consider.

The SPEAKER. There is objection to the consideration of this bill at this time, and it cannot now be received. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CLAFLIN] at some other time after the morning hour.

GODFREY DRAYER.

Mr. McKINLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3765) granting a pension to Godfrey Drayer, One hundred and fifteenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

CULTURE OF SUGAR-BEET, ETC.

Mr. COVERT, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Agriculture be, and is hereby, requested to furnish to this House all information he may have in his possession bearing upon the culture of the sugar-beet, and the manufacture of sugar therefrom, either at home or abroad.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. BROWNE. In reporting the other day, from the Committee on Military Affairs, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 83) granting condemned cannon to the Morton Monumental Association, I inadvertently omitted a portion of the report, which was to strike out the words "as may be required." These words, though they do not affect the substance of the joint resolution, should be struck out in order that it may read properly. I ask unanimous consent to make this correction in the report.

There being no objection, leave was granted, and the report was amended accordingly.

FEES OF MARSHALS AND DEPUTY MARSHALS.

Mr. McMAHON, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3766) making appropriations for the payment of fees of marshals and deputy marshals during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

Subsequently,

Mr. GARFIELD said: I wish to reserve all points of order on the bill reported by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. McMAHON.]

The SPEAKER. That bill has been recommitted.

Mr. GARFIELD. May not points of order be reserved now?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the time for reserving points of order would be when the bill is reported.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then we do not lose our rights?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will reserve all rights. He has ruled upon this point once before, deciding that points of order hold good when the bill is reported back, the object of reporting in the first instance being merely to have the bill printed and recommitted.

RAVAGES OF COTTON-WORM.

Mr. HERNDON, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial of the National Cotton Exchange for the appointment of a committee of entomologists to investigate and study the habits and ravages of the cotton-worm, caterpillar, boll-worm, and all other insects which prey on the fruit and foliage of the cotton-plant, and also the most practicable means of destroying them or preventing their ravages; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD. It is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

This memorial respectfully represents that the National Cotton Exchange, at its last meeting, in the city of New York, appointed the undersigned a committee to memorialize your honorable bodies concerning the destruction of cotton by worms and insects, and the great loss of wealth to the country therefrom, and to pray you to appoint a committee of entomologists to investigate and study the habits and ravages of the cotton-caterpillar, boll-worm, and all other insects which prey on the fruit and foliage of the cotton-plant; and also the most practicable means of destroying them or preventing their ravages.

Your memorialists therefore respectfully state, that in the richest cotton districts greater damage is sustained from the causes stated than from all others; that in some seasons in these sections the yield is reduced one-fourth to one-half therefrom, and in exceptional instances entire destruction has resulted, following either an early appearance of the worm or late fruiting of the crop.

The cotton-caterpillar was known locally as a pest in limited sections of Georgia, South Carolina, and Florida in the early history of cotton cultivation, but not until 1846 was its appearance general over the old cotton belt. The area visited has, however, shown a uniform increase since 1865, extending in 1876 to the mountain counties of Alabama, to all of North Mississippi, and into Tennessee.

We will briefly refer to some seasons of exceptional severity as indicating the destructive nature of the caterpillar. Their appearance in West Alabama and along the eastern boundary of Louisiana in 1864 was about the last of July. At that time the crop was very promising in Alabama, though the area in cultivation was small, and by the 10th of August such damage was inflicted that in many instances the yield was reduced below fifty pounds seed-cotton per acre, and in some absolute destruction resulted. On the Red River bottoms in 1869 and the Warrior River bottoms in 1872, the crop being late, was totally destroyed. In the rich prairie counties of Alabama, from 1871 to 1874, inclusive, the yield was reduced more than one-half, and in all the southern cotton counties of Texas in 1874 it was less than 20 per cent. of an average. Below we give some statistics kindly furnished by Professor C. V. Riley, whose labors in this connection last summer we beg to commend:

DESTRUCTIVENESS OF THE WORM—LOSSES OCCASIONED BY IT.

The percentage of loss is also dependent on location. When the injury is done early in the season the loss in localities of heaviest production, or where the fields are numerous and contiguous, is nearly double what it is where the fields are more isolated. In years of severe injury, from 30 to 98 per cent. of the crop may be ruined upon some plantations, while on others the loss will be trifling. The highest average of loss is sustained in the southern portion of the belt as in Florida and South Texas. It increases also in a westerly direction, commencing with Georgia at 16 per cent., or sixteen bales out of every one hundred of an average crop for fifteen years, and ending with Texas at 28 per cent. In the northern portion of the belt the averages are low, ranging from 5 to 8 per cent. for the same period; while in many parts of it, and notably in North Carolina, the worm appears so late as to generally do more good than harm, by removing the luxuriant top foliage and thus admitting the sun to the lower bolls and hastening their maturity.

The following table shows the amount of loss in bales and dollars for each State in a year of severe visitation:

State.	Per cent. of loss.			Losses—average number of bales for worst years.	Total crop—average number of bales for fifteen years.	Money loss—for worst years, at $50 per bale.
	Highest.	Lowest.	Average for State.
Florida	.....	.....	24	49,700	12,000	$600,000
Georgia	25.1	15	16.5	474,600	78,422	3,912,000
Alabama	25.2	12.5	17.8	536,700	95,790	4,789,000
Mississippi	24	15	17	706,000	123,070	6,150,000
Louisiana	.....	.....	20	438,000	89,740	4,437,000
Texas	35	20	28	525,000	148,125	7,406,000
South Carolina	.....	.....	05	224,500	11,225	560,000
Tennessee	.....	.....	05	147,000	8,365	418,000
Arkansas	.....	.....	08	347,000	27,760	1,380,000
North Carolina	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Totals	.....	.....	17.5	3,449,200	594,497	29,711,000

This table shows a possible loss of about $30,000,000 in years of general prevalence of the worm, or an average of 17½ per cent. total annual loss, namely, $12,934,500 for all the cotton States since the war. That it was equally great before the war there is no reason to doubt, for while severe visitations have, perhaps, been more frequent since that time, the injury has been greatly diminished by the use of Paris green and other arsenical poisons since the year 1873.

From this it will be seen that the aggregate loss to the cotton producers of the South for the last fifteen years closely approximates $200,000,000, an amount which would have enabled State and municipal governments to meet their obligations, prevented many individual bankruptcies, and brought the commercial and agricultural interests of the cotton States to a much higher position than they have attained.

Your memorialists are confident that such a committee as we pray you to create will devise a certain, safe, and inexpensive means of destroying the caterpillar, and possibly the boll-worm, and, by their observations of causes affecting the growth and maturity of the plant, be enabled to offer suggestions conducing to better cultivation and greater profits.

Your memorialists would state their strong conviction that if our prayer is granted results will be reached profitable to the cotton interests, creditable to science and the Government, and by adding substantially to the exportable values of the country conduce to the general good, as any increase in the volume and value of exports necessarily strengthens the national credit.

Your memorialists, after careful investigation, are satisfied an appropriation of $50,000 will enable such a committee to perform the duties to be imposed upon it.

MOBILE, January 6, 1880.

TITLES IN HOT SPRINGS.

Mr. DUNN, by unanimous consent, reported back, with amendments, from the Committee on Public Lands the bill (H. R. No. 3549) for the establishment of titles in Hot Springs, and for other purposes; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

REPORT OF DISTRICT HEALTH OFFICER.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Printing, reported back, without amendment, the following resolution; which was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Public Printer be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to print 2,500 copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia for use of said health officer.

AMERICAN EPHEMERIS AND NAUTICAL ALMANAC.

Mr. WILSON, from the same committee, reported back, with amendments, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 93) for printing the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there shall be printed annually at the Government Printing Office 1,500 copies of the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac and of the papers supplementary thereto, of which 100 shall be for the use of the Senate, 400 for the House of Representatives, and 1,000 for the public service, to be distributed by the Navy Department.

SEC. 2. That additional copies of the Ephemeris and of the Nautical Almanac extracted therefrom may be ordered by the Navy Department for sale at the cost of paper and printing: Provided, That all moneys received from such sale shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the appropriation for public printing.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

In section 2, line 3, strike out the words "Navy Department" and insert "Secretary of the Navy."

Strike out also the words "at the cost of paper and printing."

Mr. HAWLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman reporting this resolution what use in the world we have for the Ephemeris anyhow? I hope the gentleman has read one of these publications; if he has, he is the first one who has done it besides the proof-reader. When I ask what use this publication is, I mean, of course, for members of Congress. It is an enormous compilation of figures.

Mr. WILSON. I have here a letter from Professor Newcomb, which I shall have read. I propose, after a word of explanation, to yield the floor to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] who introduced this resolution.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I must object to any debate.

Mr. WILSON. There can be no objection to this resolution when it is properly understood.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let the letter of Professor Newcomb be read.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suppose the Committee on Printing has the right to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. It has that right as to the printing of documents for the use of the House. The Chair does not know that this resolution would come under the rule.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is a proposition to print these documents for the use of the Senate and House.

Mr. ACKLEN. Can the morning hour be postponed by a matter of this kind if the regular order be demanded?

Mr. WILSON. In answer to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] I will say that the American Ephemeris constitutes a manual which is said to be indispensable to the mariner and the astronomer. Without this publication our mariners upon the high seas must be greatly embarrassed.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Is this debate running by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The Committee on Printing have the right to report at any time in regard to the printing of documents intended for the use of the House. It seems that this resolution provides that five hundred copies of these publications shall be distributed to members of the Senate and the House.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does this report carry with it the right to interrupt the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has not commenced. The Chair, however, has heretofore decided that these privileged reports of propositions requiring for their passage a majority vote only cannot come in to the exclusion of the morning hour when it is demanded, because another rule provides that—

The morning hour shall not be dispensed with upon any day for any purpose except by the vote of two-thirds of the members present.

The Chair gives the preference to such business as the rules require cannot be dispensed with except by a two-thirds vote over business which can be passed upon by a majority, and he thinks that is the logic of the rules.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I call for the morning hour.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let the gentleman from West Virginia withdraw his report.

Mr. WILSON. Will the morning hour cut off the pending proposition?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had better withdraw it, and the Chair will recognize him after the morning hour.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 55) granting a right of way across Water Shops Pond, in Springfield, Massachusetts, to the Springfield and New London Railroad Company;

An act (H. R. No. 2053) to authorize the assistant treasurer of the United States at New York to waive enforcement of section 3477 of the Revised Statutes so far as the same affects certain drafts upon him now held by the Masonic Bank of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; and

An act (H. R. No. 3518) to authorize the importation of articles for exhibition at the miller's international exhibition, to be held at Cincinnati in 1880, free of duty.

BANK RESERVES.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at eleven minutes past one o'clock p. m.; and the House now resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2715) requiring the reserves of national banks to be kept in gold and silver coins of the United States, reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BUCKNER.] The gentleman from New York [Mr. LOUNSBERY] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration may be briefly formulated as a semi-statutory resumption by the banks. It is unobjectionable in principle, if it be not an objection always to act by half measures. I myself would have preferred that the bill should have provided for the entire reserve of the banks to be held in coin, thus making an entire resumption by the banks.

It is about one year since by statute the Federal Government resumed. It is high time that the banks resumed. It is time that individuals resumed, paying debt in value instead of paying debt in promises. The bill, to me, does not seem to be especially operative or effectual. The banks in my city to-day are paying gold and silver coin, not only in the payment of their debts to depositors but to persons who apply for loans, if they voluntarily take coin instead of paper. While this bill, therefore, at the time it was first introduced at the extra session, might have been operative and effectual, it can no longer be so, because by the practice of the banks at this time they are paying, when the creditor will voluntarily receive it, in gold and silver coin.

I propose to address myself for a few moments to the history of resumption. I have heard much credit taken by the present Administration, by the present managers of the Government finances, for bringing about resumption. In my opinion resumption was not caused by financial management nor by administrative tact, but it came about by mightier causes. Webster, in his remarkable expression of eulogy to Hamilton, said: "He smote the rock of the national resources and abundant streams gushed forth; he touched the dead corpse of the public credit and it sprung upon its feet." I understand that the friends of the Administration have endeavored to appropriate the same language and apply it to the present head of our national finances. It is no pleasant task to be an iconoclast, and yet I esteem it a duty to break these gods set up for the people to worship. It was neither Hamilton nor Sherman that brought about prosperity and resumption to the Republic, either in the days of Hamilton or in the days of our present Secretary of the Treasury. The country has been moved by more potent causes, by causes more powerful than the lamp of Aladdin or the purse of Fortunatus. A changed condition of national affairs brought about resumption; not only the ability to resume, but resumption itself. The luxury of the people bred during the war period on the high prices of that day was changed for simple habits during depression. The importation of foreign goods into this country was thus checked, and that result was one powerful cause looking to better times.

We can all remember the time when the opposing armies swept down and back through the Shenandoah Valley with the ebb and flow of military success. The growing fruits and grain crops were not only destroyed but the accumulations of wealth. The armies then engaged in destruction are now producing values. The people who were then engaged in tearing down the earnings of years have for the past fifteen years engaged in restoring waste-places and in aiding to resume.

My own State of New York has now just terminated five years of democratic rule. In that time there has been a stay of corruption in office, a return to good government, and an honest administration of the public works. The prisons, which by wasteful management had become an incubus upon the prosperity of the State, have been made to produce an income equal to their expenses. The rate of taxation has been decreased even while administrative wisdom has been wiping out the State debt. I can hold up the State of New York as an admirable exhibition of the fruits of good government. Freedom from debt, with State taxes one-half of what they were five years ago, makes one of the great causes leading to resumption and enabling the country to maintain it. But yet, considering these facts, I hear my republican friends speaking to themselves and to others in the phrase which was spoken to the apple—"How we apples swim"—without knowing that it is this powerful current of causes which has produced resumption and enabled us to maintain it, instead of administrative ability, as they make the claim.

Mr. Speaker, I desire now that the Clerk shall read the bill which I shall offer as a substitute, if a proper occasion is presented, to the pending bill. I have stated that the failure of the present bill is that it is a half measure of resumption.

The one I now propose to have read in its stead I think is a bill which covers the entire case—a bill that is entirely effectual and complete in the line of resumption, not only for the banks but for individuals as well.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Forty-sixth Congress, first session.]

H. R. No. 1423.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MAY 5, 1879.

Read twice, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LOUNSBERY, on leave, offered the following bill:

A BILL

To repeal sections 3588, 3589, and 3590 of the Revised Statutes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That sections 3588, 3589, and 3590 of the Revised Statutes, making United States notes and Treasury notes a legal tender, are hereby repealed.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. The purpose of this bill is to repeal the three sections of the Revised Statutes as they now stand making United States notes and Treasury notes a legal tender for debt.

The bill under consideration, as it now stands, is harmless in its language and form because it is drawn as an amendment to a statute which was repealed in 1873 by the enactment of the Revised Statutes. The bill which I offer as a substitute will bring about the entire and complete purposes of the pending bill and take away what I claim to be objectionable features of the Revised Statutes as they now stand. If we repeal the legal-tender feature of the Revised Statutes we return to the constitutional money which existed before the war.

A democratic governor of the State of New York recommended in his message that the State should not depart from constitutional money and that the interest on the State bonds should be paid in coin, notwithstanding the coin premium. He thus recognized the obligation of the debt which was created by the text of the bonds. He recognized the fact that when the State borrowed the money of the people it promised to pay in a money that had an actual and intrinsic value. He asserted the doctrine that there was no law which could be passed by Congress or by any other power that could relieve the State of New York from its obligation to pay its debt with value instead of paying it in promises.

During the entire history of the controversy whether the United States notes were a constitutional money or not, the democratic party in the State of New York, and I believe the democratic party in national convention, have always adhered to the theory that there was no power in the Constitution to declare a promise money; that that clause in the Constitution which authorized Congress to coin money only gave the power to coin the precious metals into money and not to coin a material of no value into a promise which should pass compulsorily as money. That presents the constitutional question in this case.

Let me next refer to the subject as a question of policy. We are now in a period of unexampled prosperity. It is doubtful whether any one of us can remember a time when all the elements that make a nation great existed in a more marked degree than now. There has been and there will be a periodic rise and decline in the prosperity of the nation. These periods of ebb and flow, of prosperity and adversity, in business and in finance seem to come with some degree of regularity. We are now upon the flood-tide of financial success. Immense crops of grain are being produced in this country which have a market in Europe, and the bonds, which did not have a permanent holding there, having been sent back to this country and taken up by our own people, the precious metals are flowing steadily from the foreign banks and depositories to the shores of America; so that our Treasury is not only full, some think incumbered with coin, but the banks and the people, the members of Congress even who go to the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms, are frequently incumbered by coin. When the precious metals are in such abundance, why should we insist upon debasing our national credit at home and abroad by maintaining a promise as a compulsory payment for debt? I, with others, protested against the decision of the Supreme Court which declared the power of Congress to make a promise a legal tender; and I vowed to myself, and I stand here now in obedience to that vow, that the first opportunity that ever came, if I had the power, I would insist upon reversing that decision and restoring the country again to a normal and honest constitutional condition, recognizing only coined metal, its value recognized in the family of nations as the money of the country and as the only compulsory material in which debt shall be paid.

There is another point connected with this question of policy. We are now in resumption, so far as the Federal Government is concerned. If that resumption is to be menaced by any future disturbance, it must come from the promises which the Government has made. The present outstanding three hundred and forty-six millions of paper promises issued by the Government must always, in disordered times, afford a menace to maintaining resumption. Is there economy in keeping out this paper and in keeping behind it a sufficient body of coin always ready to be able to pay the Government demand notes upon presentation? I can see no financial wisdom in any such policy as that. We are now, as I said, in prosperity. It has come upon us suddenly. During the last session there came up from all parts of this Hall the representative cry of the people for relief. And now there comes up just as strenuous a cry from all parts of this Hall—the representative cry of the people—to be let alone. So during the life of this Congress, yet but half its days spent, we have passed from a cry of distress and depression among the people to a cry of satisfaction and prosperity. But how soon may come again, in the turning of the wheel of fortune, the cry of distress, and we be thrown suddenly upon a financial collapse? I ask gentlemen here, whether it is not time that we prepare the Government for that situation? Is it not time, and high time, while we are in a position to do it, that we should prepare the Government by taking away this danger, so that resumption now achieved shall not be by a new turn of the wheel of fortune destroyed?

Mr. Speaker, the resumption of specie payment in this country has produced a financial condition unexpected by its adversaries as it was unexpected to many of the friends of the measure at the time when the subject was under consideration. The amount of gold and silver coin and gold and silver bullion, always a matter of calculation, very difficult to arrive at even as an approximate result, by the operations of resumption changed from being a commodity and became a part of the currency. Instead of being a part of the purchasable property of the country it was added to the purchasing or currency element. It thus by a double action operated to produce money inflation.

This result should not have been unexpected to the student of British history. From 1793 to 1813 the Bank of England was under suspension. In 1810 the bank undertook to resume payment in gold and silver for its bills. It commenced on an appointed morning, an act which the entire government and the financial people of the British Empire watched with great interest. There was an excited run on the bank for coin. Coin had at that time dropped in premium until it had reached about 2 per cent. Gentlemen here can draw a picture for themselves of that crowd of people attending the bank on the appointed morning.

In the presence of this clamoring crowd the officers of the bank caused gold coin to be wheeled into the bank in barrows in the presence of the people. For three days the run continued, and on the evening of the third day the clamor for gold had subsided, and the bank opened on the next morning with a flow of coin into the bank on deposit. Specie payment was thus resumed.

And now mark the result. During the year following there were twenty-five new banks organized in England alone. Companies were organized and started upon every conceivable kind of speculation. Swamps were divided into city property; South Sea islands were cut up and sold in shares; an era of bubbles and speculation began. The inflation caused by this resumption culminated within three years, and nearly all these twenty-five banks which were organized exploded. There were general bankruptcy and havoc throughout the country, carrying with them old and established banks which had survived the perils of nearly a century. Again the Bank of England suspended. When the bank resumed again during the following year both the bank and the people had learned a lesson of prudence that made resumption permanent and enduring.

Such is the lesson which is taught to us by the history of England, whose people are similar in habits and character to our own. It is to avoid the disaster which followed the immediate operations of the first resumption in England that I have addressed a portion of my remarks on this question.

I now propose to consider the question of repealing the legal-tender clause of the statute as applicable to individuals and to business. And, first, let me consider it as applicable to the laboring-man, or to the man who earns his daily bread by his daily labor. Is there anything in the subject of labor that can be more interesting to the laborer than that his employment shall be permanent? If I have any experience in the observations of laboring-men seeking employment, it is that they prefer those occupations and those places which seem to give them the most permanent and established employment. They avoid all appearance of instability; they seek not especially the amount of pay so much as stability and permanency of employment.

In order to make labor permanent, to make it stable, it is necessary that business should be fixed upon a stable basis. It cannot be fixed upon a currency which is to be changed, from time to time, in value, according to the exigencies and conditions of the country. It must be upon a basis that is solid, stable, and fixed, as coin alone can be, when it is considered in reference to the subject of currency.

Now, look for a moment to the question of business. Take a man who is about to embark his capital in any business enterprise. Is he not much more likely to embark his capital in business if he can see before him a fixed or certain calculation of percentage? Is it not certain that he would like to know and understand the factors upon which his business is to depend for its success? Would not any prudent man embark his capital with great doubt and hesitation in any business that he knows will be varying in price and conducted in a currency which will not be permanent in its value?

If there are any two branches in the success of which this country at this time is specially interested they are manufacturing and commerce. The manufacturer must necessarily embark a large amount of capital in his undertaking. He must construct his buildings, provide his machinery, and after all of this is done he must employ a large amount of labor, and it is important to the success of his enterprise that he must be able to calculate the price of labor upon a fixed basis; and after he has done all of this he must then find a market for his commodities. He must be able to calculate through a series of years upon the fixed laws of trade and values whether he will be likely to make a profit or a loss upon his business. He must also calculate upon active competition in his business, and, therefore, he must understand and study the laws which regulate and control these matters; and I ask gentlemen whether they can reasonably expect the capitalists of the country, the prudent men, to embark their capital in any enterprise unless they have a solid and a fixed basis upon which they can make a calculation for a series of years.

Now, take the question of commerce. How many of us are longing to see the country revive its commerce? How many of us hope, and we have the right to hope, that we will see our ships in large numbers coming in competition with the commercial nations of the earth, and yet who will enter into a scheme of commerce; who will invest his capital in ships; who will make his ventures in a foreign trade until we have first settled upon a money in which he can satisfactorily come in competition with the other nations of the earth?

It is foreign commerce we seek to revive, and yet who would engage in commerce with a foreign nation upon the basis of a currency that is not recognized by the nations of the world?

Who will embark in an enterprise taking so many years to mature unless he knows there is to be an established value to the money of the country, and a fixed, stable situation upon which he can count for his profits?

Mr. Speaker, I believe that there is a great future for this country. In making this remark I am not indulging in the language of prophecy. I am only giving voice to the calculations of the statistician; I am only formulating the result of a mathematical problem which we can work out before our eyes; I am only giving the calculation of the orbit of the planet in its sphere. Look at the mineral wealth which is being taken out of our mines. Look at the immense agricultural resources which have done such wonders during the last few years in bringing back to us the balance of trade. Look at our resources for cotton. We have really control of the cotton market of the world. Look at the condition of this people. Here is the Anglo-Saxon, with his strength of character and his industry; the Latin race, too, is mingled with our people and give us our aptness for commercial enterprises. From Africa we have the enduring material to stand climatic trials, and the Oriental, with his habits of economy, is fast accumulating on our western shore.

With our condition of climate and of soil, our mental, physical, and material factors, who can deny that a great future lies before us? A hundred years is but the first experiment of American greatness. We stand here the radiating-point, as it were, of all nations, who are to pour their wealth into the lap of the people of this country. America is to be the great nation of the world, not only possessing the East India trade, which has in past history made great cities, but trading with every country and with every clime. By means of steam and telegraph and electric light all the appliances which modern man has been able to devise are now ready to focalize themselves in the brilliancy and greatness of this immense country. If there were a monarch controlling us, it is possible he might be unjust. If there were a class of people in the position of an aristocracy controlling us, we might assume injustice. But this is a country in which the people are the sovereigns. They meet and make their laws by the aggregated honesty, fairness, and wisdom of the entire people, and it is impossible that we should be expected to predicate either unwisdom or unfairness of the Government. The people are, and should be, fair to themselves.

Now, the first thing they have to do is to come back to an honest money, based upon the value of the metal in which it is struck. And setting all currency upon that basis, there is a simple, steady, certain march to this goal of success which we are all expecting and which we know must come.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I have listened attentively to what has been said by the members of the Committee on Banking and Currency with regard to the nature and effect of this bill and I have given attention to other gentlemen who have discussed it, but I must confess that I have listened in vain for a satisfactory explanation. There are but two gentlemen preceding me in this debate who in my judgment have given us any satisfactory information as to what is its real nature and what will be its real effect if it is enacted into law. I allude to remarks that fell from the lips of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] and the distinguished gentleman from New York, [Mr. CHITTENDEN.] I would not occupy the time of the House a single moment upon this bill if I was not required to cast my vote upon the question as to whether it should be made into law or not. I am desirous of performing that duty intelligently and conscientiously in the interest of those I represent on this floor; but I am left to grope my way in darkness or learn the pathway of duty from other sources than from the arguments which have been presented. Gentlemen have spoken ably and luminously upon general financial problems, but neither of them has touched the real kernel of the nut, the real essence of this bill, the real effects of it upon the country, save and except my friends from New York and Iowa.

The bill is apparently a very simple and harmless one. But the gentlemen to whom I last referred have pointed out to us what is its true nature and what will be its actual effect. It was with much eagerness I sought to learn what position those two gentlemen would take upon this bill, for the reason that I know they rank high among the most zealous advocates of the national-bank system upon this floor; and I felt assured that if it should be advocated by them there was nothing in it that would harm the national-banking system. I wish now, Mr. Speaker, to call attention to the remarks made by the gentleman from Iowa, pointing out the real effect of this bill. I ask the Clerk to read what he said to this House.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Now, with this state of facts before this House and the country, the only question to be settled by us in the discussion of this bill and in the disposal of it is this: will it advance the confidence of the people in the national-banking system and will it add to the security and permanency of the institution by requiring this amount to be kept in coin, or will the country be just as well satisfied to let the banks pursue their own course in the future as they have done in the past, relying upon their business capacity and integrity for the kind of funds they shall keep as a reserve? That is the only question to be settled by this bill, whether it be voted up or voted down.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that this bill will aid in a well-arranged conspiracy which has been entered into for the purpose of making the national banking system a permanent institution aggrandize the gold dollar and depreciate and dishonor the silver dollar and the greenback. The first who has made an assault upon the coinage of the silver dollar during this Congress is the Secretary of the Treasury. The next who has assailed the silver dollar, coupled with an attack on the status of the greenback, is the President of the United States. And the third is the effect of this bill which has emanated from the Committee on Banking and Currency, and of which the two gentlemen to whom I have alluded specially are advocates. Notice what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] said in his speech the other day. His language was substantially: The only question involved in this bill is, will it advance the confidence of the people in the national-bank system, and will it add to the security and permanency of the national-banking institution?

I knew that the Committee on Banking and Currency had had for a long time a bill before it for the purpose of retiring the national-bank circulation, a bill providing for the substitution of national-bank circulation with Treasury notes, a method which would save to the people of this country over $14,000,000 that come every year out of the pockets of the tax-payers and find lodgment in the pockets of national-bank stockholders.

But to my amazement the committee, instead of bringing in a bill to demolish the national-banking circulation, brings in a bill which, in the words of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE,] is intended to increase confidence in the system, to popularize it among the people, and to make it a permanent institution in this country and make it more secure.

It appears from that gentleman's remarks that he is willing to admit there is a lack of confidence in this system, and he desires this bill to pass in order to "advance the confidence of the people in the national-banking system." In other words, this bill if adopted will popularize the national banks.

I do not see how the substitution of gold coin for the reserves of the national banks can give any better security. If the speech of my friend from Iowa is worth anything it shows that the greenback dollar is as good as the gold dollar, and will hereafter continue on a par with gold coin. Now, if that be true, how can you make the national-bank institutions more secure by compelling them to keep hereafter one-half of their reserves in gold dollars, which are no better than greenback dollars?

I do not know what that gentleman meant by intimating that if this bill does not become a law the banks will be left "to pursue their own course in the future as they have done in the past, relying upon their business capacity and integrity for the kind of funds they shall keep as a reserve," unless he used the expression as a mere figure of speech, for by reference to section 5191 of the statutes it will be found that bank reserves are now required to be kept in the "lawful money of the United States," which consists of coin and greenbacks. It is not left to their discretion as to what kind of reserve they may choose to keep. They cannot fail in this without violating the present law.

But the point to which I wished most particularly to call the attention of the House is another clause in the paragraph quoted, the question whether this bill will make the national-bank system a permanent one. I say to you frankly if that be its tendency I am opposed to it. And why? I will briefly set forth the reasons of my opposition to any permanent national-banking system in this country. In the last Congress, on February 22 of last year, I discussed at length the national-bank question; I shall, therefore, confine myself to but a few points to-day.

I have already said that the national-bank circulation costs the people of this country over $14,000,000 per year, and I challenge contradiction of that assertion. I am prepared to demonstrate that fact by matter contained in the reports of the Secretary of the Treasury and Comptroller of the Currency, which I now hold in my hand.

What are the facts? The Comptroller of the Currency in his report has given us the denominations and the character of the bonds which are held by the Treasury Department as the basis of the national-bank circulation. I sat at my desk last night and made a careful computation from that report of the amount of interest which those bonds were drawing on November 1, 1879. The amount of the bonds held at that time by the Treasury for bank circulation was $363,802,400. The Treasury Department pays to the national banks every year on these bonds $17,215,640 for interest.

But the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency, whom I find to be very ardent advocates of the national-banking system, assert that the national banks pay on their circulation large taxes into the Treasury of the United States. Let us look at the reports and see how much taxes they do pay for this circulation. It is confessed that they receive over $17,000,000 from the Treasury by reason of their circulation. How much do the national banks pay back into the Treasury? The reports in my hand show that they paid on their circulation last year $3,198,000, and they have never paid more in any one year, except when their circulation was larger; but in no year did the sum paid by them exceed $3,404,483.11.

Mr. WILBER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. A question—yes.

Mr. WILBER. How much other taxes do the national banks pay?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. They do not pay one single penny more than any other banks in the land are required to pay.

Mr. WILBER. Very true; but how much do they pay?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. No more than any other species of bank property is obliged to pay.

Mr. WILBER. Do not they pay more taxes than the whole interest on their bonds?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. There is not one single mill of taxes paid by the national banks into the national Treasury which all private and State banks are not required to pay, except what is paid by them on their circulation. They do not pay one cent more on their deposits or capital stock than private and State banks.

Mr. WILBER. How much tax do they pay for the people?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The only tax which they pay over and above other classes of bankers is this $3,198,000, which they pay on their circulation.

Mr. WILBER. That is so much ahead, then.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Not at all, as I will show. But I cannot be interrupted any further, my time is very short. I was for several years engaged in national banking, and I have had opportunity to understand the internal machinery of the system and its effect upon the interest of the people. Deduct from the $17,215,640 which the national banks receive every year from the taxpayers the $3,198,833 which they pay into the Treasury on their circulation, and that will leave $14,019,000, which goes into the pockets of national-bank stockholders as part of the profit they receive on their circulation; and my friend [Mr. WILBER] will find the Government is behind and the banks are largely ahead.

I am only speaking of the profit they receive from the national Treasury. I have no time to show what enormous profit they have made on this circulation by loaning it to the business community at large rates of interest. It is indeed the only business in this country which is realizing a profit on 90 per cent. more than its actual capital. From these reports I have made a computation of the approximate amount the banks have received from the Treasury and the amount of taxes the banks have turned into the Treasury on account of their circulation during the fifteen years of their existence:

The total amount paid the banks is	$348,215,640
Total tax paid by banks on circulation	42,785,464
Profit of the banks out of the Treasury	305,430,176

They have received their circulation as a free loan from the Treasury, which now reaches over $330,000,000, and have also received over $300,000,000 as a bonus, and still they would have us strike down the plebeian greenback and silver dollar, that the patrician order of bank paper and gold coin may be enthroned; then the way will be opened for a plutocracy in this country, and the national banks will not only become the spoiled darlings of the country but they will be the royal family of the nation.

Now, to show that Secretary Sherman appreciated full well these facts in regard to the taxation of the banks, I would refer to a speech which he made during the last campaign, I think at Steubenville, Ohio, where he admits that the national banks receive a bonus of over $12,000,000 from the people, but he insists they furnish us a splendid currency and therefore we should be contented to give them the subsidy.

Mr. SAPP. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Be very quick about it; my time is rapidly passing.

Mr. SAPP. Suppose that all the national banks are wiped out of existence, will not the interest on these bonds have to be paid?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. There is where the gentleman has failed to study the nature of a bill now before the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. SAPP. Will the gentleman answer the question?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It would not, I answer flatly. When the national-bank notes are retired, with the Treasury notes substituted for them, an amount of bonds equal to those held for the banks will also be canceled and retired. [Applause.]

Mr. WEAVER. That is what there is in it.

Mr. WILBER. What will be the object while the banks pay more taxes than they receive interest on their bonds by over $3,000,000?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The banks do not pay more taxes on their circulation than the interest received on their bonds. I thought I had made myself clear enough, but I will repeat, the national banks pay to the Treasury only 1 per cent. on their circulation, and do not pay one single mill more. Their average circulation being, according to these reports, during the past year something over $319,000,000, the taxation paid by them is only $3,198,833, as I have already shown. This is the amount they paid into the Treasury, but, as I have also informed my friend, the banks received $17,215,640 in interest on their bonds, and, therefore, their circulation cost the people and the Government $14,019,056 more than the amount of tax paid.

Mr. CASWELL. Now, let me ask my friend——

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Do not interrupt me now. I have but a few moments. If my time be extended, I shall have no objection to answering.

Mr. CASWELL. The gentleman says the banks pay no other taxes. Do they not pay 1 per cent. on all their capital not invested in United States bonds?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. They do not pay a single penny more taxes than other banks, except the tax on circulation, and as other banks have no circulation of course they pay no such tax.

Mr. CASWELL. They pay 1 per cent. on all capital not invested in bonds.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. With all due deference I must contradict the statement of the gentleman.

Mr. CASWELL. On this point I am certainly not mistaken.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I wish to be distinctly understood on this point. The national-banking law does require the national banks to pay a tax on their capital stock and a tax on their deposits, but the law requires all other kinds of banks to pay precisely the same tax at the same rate, as will be seen by this report of the Comptroller of the Currency, on page 12, where he says: "The rate of taxation imposed on the deposits and capital of State banks and private bankers is precisely the same as that imposed on national banks." You will also find in reading the official reports, strangely as it may seem, the officers of the Treasury urge that this tax on deposits and capital stock of national banks be removed, while no such appeal is made by them in behalf of State and private bankers.

Mr. SAPP. Is the gentleman in favor of private banks instead of national?

The SPEAKER. Members will observe that they have no right to interrupt the gentleman on the floor without his consent.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Now, Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of the Treasury has repeatedly admitted on the stump that we pay a large bonus to the banks in the way of interest above the tax paid on their circulation, yet he insists that because they give the country such excellent currency we can afford to make the investment. I will examine that proposition for a moment.

I admit that the national-bank note is a good circulating medium, that it circulates as well in one locality in the Union as in another. But why is it a good note? Is it on account of the character given it by the bank? No, sir; nobody ever inquires whether the bank which issues the bill has $50,000 capital stock or $5,000,000. The note is good everywhere in the Union because the Treasury of the United States is the guarantor for the redemption of the national-bank note.

Mr. WEAVER. In greenbacks.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If the Government should guarantee the payment of the note of a pauper, that note would circulate alongside the note of the strongest national bank in the Union. The credit which attaches to the national-bank note is due to the guarantee which the Government of the United States gives for its redemption, and, I repeat, not because of any character conferred upon it by the bank which issues it.

My friend over the way [Mr. SAPP] wanted me to say, as I understood him, whether I am in favor of the revival of the old State banks of issue. I answer him emphatically, that I am not. I know that the Comptroller of the Currency and the advocates of the national-banking system are adroitly seeking to induce the country to believe that if the national-bank circulation be retired, we must necessarily revive the State banks of issue. That is not true. No considerable number of persons anywhere, so far as my knowledge extends, advocate a return to the old "wild cat" State bank system. I am ready to state my position. I stand on a platform erected by Thomas Jefferson, a platform which was occupied by John C. Calhoun, a platform on which Andrew Jackson stood, a platform on which Stephen A. Douglas stood; yea, a platform on which Thomas H. Benton, "Old Bullion," stood—in my opposition to any kind of bank paper, State or national. Jefferson, Calhoun, and all the great leaders of the democratic party in the past were opposed to national-bank paper. And, indeed, most, if not all, of them were opposed to any kind of bank paper.

They were in favor of sound money; but their objection was more against national-bank paper than against any currency issued by the Treasury. Have gentlemen forgotten the fact that in 1814 Thomas Jefferson insisted that the Government should suppress bank paper and issue a Treasury note receivable at the custom-houses and for all dues to the General Government? Have they forgotten that three of the ablest speeches ever delivered by John C. Calhoun were devoted to the demonstration of the constitutionality of such Treasury notes as a circulating medium? Neither of these statesmen, I am willing to admit, acknowledged that the Treasury note could be made a legal tender for private debts, but they did insist that it could be and should be used as a circulating medium.

What kind of currency do we propose to substitute for the national-bank notes? Is it proposed to make them a legal tender? Not at all. We propose to issue the same kind of a Treasury note that Jefferson and the democratic leaders of the past advocated—a Treasury note against which no man can show any constitutional objection whatever.

The national-bank note is really a Treasury note. It is issued by the Treasury at the expense of the Government; its redemption guaranteed by the Government, and then placed in the banks as a free loan to them, with a large bonus to induce them to accept it. The only difference between the bank note and the Treasury note proposed as a substitute is that the Treasury note would be issued direct from the Treasury instead of through the banks, and thereby over fourteen millions annually saved to the people. Is it not strange that men who insist that they desire justice done to the people as well as the banks hesitate to act upon such a change?

The officers of the Treasury Department have insisted that national banking has become profitless. It would seem that we are appealed to in a spirit of charity not to disturb them because they do not make large profits out of their business. If this be true I would say, in reply, that if the national banks are becoming pauperized on account of the character of their business, the best thing for them to do would be to retire from it. But what is the fact? Do we find the circulation of national banks decreasing? Not at all. It is asserted that during the last twelve months $50,000,000 have been added to the national-bank circulation. If I can believe newspaper reports there is one national bank in New York possessing only a capital stock of $500,000 which made a profit last year of $1,367,000. The directors divided $600,000, a hundred thousand more than their capital stock, in dividends among the stockholders. They added $500,000 to their surplus fund and set aside as undivided profit $267,000. I allude to the First National Bank of New York. That bank had already on hand one million surplus fund; the addition of another half million increases its surplus fund to one million and a half, being three times the amount of its capital stock. There are other national banks which have made 100 per cent. annual profit.

Another objection to this bill is that the national banks have the sole power of inflating or contracting the currency. The volume of the Treasury notes is fixed, and cannot be changed except by act of Congress. If it is desirable to have a stability of the currency, as I believe; if it is desirable to fix the volume of paper issues so that business may adjust itself to that volume; if, as claimed by the men of Wall street, it is dangerous to inflate the currency and unsafe to leave the power to inflate or contract in the hands of Congress—the chosen representatives of the people—is it safe in the hands of the Shylocks and money-gamblers of Wall street, who will inflate or contract the circulating medium as their selfish interests may dictate?

I am in favor of a stable and sound currency. I do not believe the condition of the country demands inflation, nor do I believe it for the welfare of the people that it should be contracted.

The national-bank question forms one of the most distinctive issues ever presented between the democratic party and its adversaries. Opposition to a national-banking system was the cradle in which the infancy of the party was rocked. In the national convention of 1787, which framed the Constitution, Mr. Madison presented an amendment prohibiting the charter of corporations by the National Government. Contemporary history informs us that the object of his amendment was to prevent Congress from granting a national-bank charter. As soon as Hamilton, as leader of the federalists, brought forward his proposition for a national bank Jefferson assailed it with all the power of his great intellect; and from that day to this the great and worthy leaders of our party have fought against all similar efforts; while, on the other hand, every great party of the past arrayed against democracy has championed the cause of the national banks. It is entirely unnecessary for me to present proofs that the federal, whig, and republican parties have been the advocates of that system. It was not so much a metal currency that Jefferson, Jackson, and Calhoun favored as it was their hostility to a paper currency issued by banks which has distinguished them in financial discussion. We are often reminded of the past history of our party, as showing that it has favored a sound and safe currency. This is true; it is so with the party at this day; but the party has gained that reputation by its steadfast, unrelenting opposition to bank paper.

In my speech of last February I used this language:

> While I am on this subject of deposits I cannot refrain from alluding to the startling facts revealed to us by the Secretary of the Treasury in answer to a resolution of inquiry adopted by this House during last December. In his answer the Secretary confesses that he had during six months immediately prior to last December kept on deposit in the First National Bank of New York an average of thirty millions per month of the public funds; and that during one month he had on deposit in that bank forty-five millions of the funds belonging to the Treasury, for the use of which the bank did not pay the Treasury one single penny, and this was done without any practical security. The capital stock of the bank was only $500,000; this was the only certain security which the Government and the other depositors had. The security was actually less than 1 per cent. or one-ninetieth of the amount deposited by the Treasury. Suppose that bank had failed without assets while indebted to the Government for forty-five millions.
> This, too, was done in face of the fact that a sub-treasury of the United States where this money could be safely kept was located within a stone's throw of that bank. The value of the Government deposits to that bank during the period mentioned, estimating the interest realized on it at 6 per cent., was $765,000, a sum one-third larger than its whole capital stock.

Since then it is said that much larger Government deposits have been placed in that bank. Verily the Secretary of the Treasury has great faith in and affection for the First National Bank of New York, as well as all such banks!

As this bill, using the language of one of its sponsors, will add permanency to this unnecessary and expensive institution, as a democrat and representative of the people's interest I cannot on that account give it the sanction of my vote. Of course, I am as well aware as any of the usefulness and necessity for banks of deposit and of discount in the operations of the business world, but there is no need of any banks of issue or bank circulation.

Another objection to this bill is, that it has the tendency to destroy equality between greenbacks and gold. It withdraws gold from circulation and inflates the volume of greenbacks in the circulation; thereby gold is made scarce, and, as our foreign creditors can only be paid in coin, if gold becomes scarce it will necessarily become high and its price rule above that of greenbacks. Under the operations of this bill seventy-nine millions of gold will be locked and sealed in the vaults of the banks.

Our friend from New York [Mr. CHITTENDEN] yesterday seemed to be in great trouble because we have a national debt, alluding to the greenback circulation, on which we pay no interest. It seems the thing which mainly troubles him about the greenback circulation is that it is not interest-bearing. He wishes, it seems, to convert the greenback circulation into an interest-bearing debt. I have not time to have many extracts from his speech read, but will call attention to that part in which he declares in favor of retiring greenbacks because they do not pay any interest, and in lieu of them issue an interest-paying bond. He regards it as a blessing to the people to be compelled to pay interest to the bondholder. If my friend should have his way, the $346,000,000 of greenbacks would be converted into an interest-paying debt. How much then would be added to the taxes of the people every year, even at 4 per cent.?

Mr. CHITTENDEN. The gentleman has entirely misrepresented me. There is not a word of accuracy in what he has said.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let the Clerk read the extract from the gentleman's speech, which I send up.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Now, then, Mr. Speaker, if I possessed the power, though it were coupled with the severest penalty for its misuse or hurtful exercise, I would deprive greenbacks of their legal-tender quality to take effect prior to next July. I would also stop minting silver dollars to-day, and as soon as practicable convert all the silver bullion now on hand, owned by the Government, with twenty-five millions of the useless silver dollars, into gold, and with the gold thus acquired I would, in regular course of business, pay and extinguish an equal amount of greenbacks. I would further pay off greenbacks with surplus revenue instead of buying bonds not yet due, cautiously but steadily, and perhaps as rapidly as the national-bank currency expands under the operation of natural and safe laws.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Now, then, mark the language of the gentleman from New York; instead of extinguishing bonds, he would use the money for the purpose of retiring the greenbacks from circulation and leave the bonds in existence.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Not a syllable which confirms the gentleman's statement that I propose to convert greenbacks into interest-bearing bonds—not a syllable of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My friend from New York at times fancies, it seems to me, that he is the only one who has a right to speak on the currency question on this floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. As I have been interrupted so much, I ask that my time be extended.

The SPEAKER. The Chair gave the gentleman two minutes over on account of interruption.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I ask for a few minutes longer. [Cries of "Go on!"]

Mr. BUCKNER. I now resume the floor.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. With all due respect, I hope my friend from Missouri will not object to allowing me go on for the purpose of refuting the doctrine which has been promulgated by the gentleman from New York. My friend from Missouri and I stand together in favor of the demolition of the national-bank system.

Mr. BUCKNER. I take the floor in my own right, and will yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to do my friend from New York any injustice. I have too much personal regard for him to attempt it. I say that the logic of the extract I have read from his speech is as I have stated it: he would forbid the Secretary of the Treasury from buying and canceling interest-bearing bonds, and use the surplus money which he is now employing for that purpose to retire the greenback circulation on which no interest is paid. The very money now used to extinguish the interest-bearing debt he wishes to be used in extinguishing greenbacks; and then, of course, you must leave an equal amount of bonds afloat. Now, am I not justified in my remark?

Suppose we retire the greenback circulation and substitute a 4 per cent. bond in lieu of it, which I insist is the logic of his whole speech.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I propose to substitute gold.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. What would be the effect of it? Four per cent. interest on three hundred and forty-six millions of greenbacks, or that amount of bonds left in lieu of them if they are canceled, would amount to over $13,000,000 annually. The effect of his argument and his plan would be to impose on the already heavily burdened tax-payers of this country a further burden of $13,000,000 annually.

In further confirmation of my assertion that the gentleman from New York would change the nature of the non-interest-bearing greenback into an interest-bearing bond, or, to state his plan in another way, take up the greenbacks and let an equal amount of bonds remain afloat, I will call attention to the following extracts from his speech:

> It was provided in the act of February that the legal-tender notes should at all times be convertible into bonds bearing interest payable in coin. This explicit right to fund was the apology made by Government for its forced loan, and the promise coupled with the original demand for it.
> Now, then, let us inquire what our legal-tender money is made of? Is there a fiber of honest money in this greenback I hold in my hand? Does it represent, in any sense or degree, labor or capital? Is it not the representative of debt, and of repudiated debt?

There is not gold coin enough in the whole Union to pay off the greenbacks. If you pay them off speedily, the only way to do it is by increasing the interest-bearing debt.

Now I submit as the country is so well contented with the present status of the greenback debt, and we find our Treasury in a condition to commence the cancellation of the public debt, is it not the wisest policy for the tax-payer that we should first cancel the highest rate of our interest-bearing debt—the six percents—over eighteen millions of which will be due inside of this year, and all the remainder of that class, being $254,985,550, will be redeemable on June 30 or July 1 next year? There is no demand anywhere for the cancellation of greenbacks and the increase of our bonded debt, except that which comes from some of the national bankers and plutocrats. The one desires to suppress all paper circulation except bank paper, in order that they may have a complete monopoly on paper currency, while the other class aim at the establishment of a plutocracy on the ruins of a "government by the people, for the people," as framed by our fathers.

These gentlemen seem angry because the greenback is popular. They see it circulating freely in all the banks on a par with gold, and in some instances command a premium above gold; see it available as bank reserves and for every purpose within our country for which gold can be used. Not long ago the Executive and the Secretary were urging that the greenback be built up in its value in order that it might be maintained on an equality with gold. Now, when this is accomplished there comes a demand from that quarter to degrade and depreciate it. I can easily understand why the First National Bank of New York desires to see this non-interest-bearing debt funded into an interest-bearing bond, because it has made millions out of the funding operations of the Government; but I warn all who are more loyal to the interests of the people than they are to Shylocks that such a change will result in laying an additional heavy burden upon a people now bending beneath an enormous weight of taxation.

I have frequently heard the accusation in this House and from those charged with the financial department of this Government that danger to the prosperity of the country resulted from financial agitation, and the money-lords of the East have again and again denounced those of the West who have introduced measures of financial reform as dangerous agitators, demagogues, and lunatics.

Well, sir, when bounteous nature had, during the last season, with a lavish hand, poured her blessings among the people, and plenty abounded in the land, the cry came up from the West, from the South, and from the North, "Let well enough alone." The people everywhere seemed contented to leave to the process of natural causes a solution for our financial embarrassment. But as soon as this session opened the country was startled with announcements from the President and the finance minister boldly demanding a change in the financial situation. They disturbed the prosperous career of the people by springing agitation on the most vital points in our financial system. They have advanced propositions to strike down the silver dollar, to depreciate and dishonor the greenback, thereby tending to unsettle values and destroy the business and commerce of the country.

And now comes this bill, still further agitating the public mind in regard to the national banks, and with a further tendency to the depreciation of the Treasury notes. If the enemies of silver and the friends of the banks succeed in driving out all currency save gold and bank-paper, another opportunity will be afforded the gamblers of Wall street to hoard gold and inaugurate the satanic orgies of another "Black Friday."

Mr. Speaker, the legislation needed by the people to-day is that which will lighten the burden of taxation, which has for so long been crushing the energies and hopes of the tax-payers. What he who follows the plow, or he who wields the hammer, or the honest business man wants is a repeal, as far as consistent with public credit and the due administration of the Government, of those laws which lay burdens on the people. Taxation as now adjusted is unjustly and unevenly distributed.

By means of the legerdemain of the tariff and internal revenue laws the burden of tax is not distributed on the wealth of the country. The most profitable portion of the wealth of the country escapes its fair share of taxation, and the poor man pays as much as the wealthy. Of all the classes burdened with Federal taxation, the agriculturists are subjected to the largest share. Out of one hundred and thirteen millions collected last year for internal revenue agricultural products paid over ninety-two millions.

Why should this discrimination continue? All admit it is the basis of all private and public wealth. It is due to agriculture, by the help of God, that the greenback is on an equality with gold—not to Secretary Sherman as our friends on the other side would have us believe. It is by the act of God, not by the resumption act, that greenbacks have taken rank with gold, the money of the world. Now, when this has been accomplished, the officers of the Government and the money-jobbers propose to repeal the act of God and bring a return of financial derangement.

In what I have said concerning this bill I wish to disclaim any intention to reflect upon the motives of any member of the Banking and Currency Committee; I am dealing with it as a measure, not with the individuals who favor it. "Principles are everything; men are nothing." I entertain respect for every member on that committee, and have no doubt all of them are actuated by good motives; indeed, I have no doubt a majority of the committee agree with me in the views I have uttered concerning the national-banking system, but they honestly differ with me in regard to this bill. Yet I am well convinced that they are mistaken, and if it is adopted the tendency of its effects will be as I have described.

I thank the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] and the House for the extension of my time.

Mr. BUCKNER. Mr. Speaker, how long will it be before the morning hour expires?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour expires at eleven minutes to two.

Mr. BUCKNER. I propose out of the short time remaining of the morning hour to occupy five or six minutes, if the House will give me its attention.

Probably no one has felt more the impropriety of the debate which has occurred on this subject than I have myself. I have protested strongly against going into the discussion of questions totally irrelevant to the pending proposition. I will now very briefly attempt to show what is the object of the bill and the effect of it, and will not discuss anything irrelevant to it. Then I shall demand the previous question with the hope that whatever views gentlemen may have as to the passage of this bill, they will at least cut off all further debate and bring us to some action, whether they are opposed to it or in favor of it; for the time of this House during the morning hour, in my judgment, should not be devoted to discussions of the character of those which we have heard, and especially to the discussion of questions which have nothing at all to do with the measure before us.

Now, sir, I introduced this bill at the extra session, or one very similar to it, and my purpose was to unload the Treasury of a portion of its immense hoards of gold and silver for the purpose of diffusing them among the banks and the people of the country. That was the primary object. There are now upward of $200,000,000 of gold and silver in the vaults of the Treasury. It has not gone into the vaults of the banks, but it remains there in the Treasury. There remains there to-day over thirty-two millions of silver dollars doing no duty in the country in the way of circulation. The object of this proposition, if I know what it means, is to give this coin something to do, to compel it to perform some office in the circulation of the country. Incidentally, of course, it will have the effect of putting greenbacks into circulation. A year ago the reserves of the banks were about three-quarters in legal-tenders and the remainder in coin. By the operations of business that relation has been reversed, and now there is in legal-tenders only one-half of what there was a year ago. This bill is not only intended for the purpose of getting the coin out of the vaults where it is now performing no service either to the Government or the people, but also to relieve the legal-tenders now held as the reserves of the banks by substituting coin therefor. The object is to give something for the coin to do, whereas it has nothing to do in the monetary circulation, but, on the contrary, is locked up in the vaults of the Treasury by millions.

Just think; there are thirty-two thousand kegs, ordinary nail-kegs, of silver dollars now piled up in the vaults of the Treasury of the United States. Is it not time we should be doing something in reference to this immense sum of money now lying idle in the Treasury? Is it not better for the country to diffuse it among the banks, where it can be made the basis of loans to the people?

Mr. SPRINGER. But can they use any portion of their reserves in loans to the people?

Mr. BUCKNER. They do sometimes use a part of the reserve fund in their business. The Comptroller of the Currency a little while ago required the banks of New York to make up the deficiency in the reserve they are required to keep, and if they keep their reserves in coin it is not to be presumed that that will be all the coin they will hold.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Can they use their reserve funds without violating the law? Do they not subject themselves to having their charters taken away by any such violation of the law?

Mr. BUCKNER. By making the coin a part of the reserves of the banks it releases for loans to the people the legal-tenders now held by the banks. As my friend here says, it puts the greenbacks into active duty. Instead of $100,000,000 lying in the vaults, as was the case a year ago, it is now reduced to fifty million.

Mr. WARNER. I would like to know how it would either draw silver from the Treasury or put greenbacks in circulation.

Mr. BUCKNER. The law now is that legal-tenders may be used altogether for a reserve, while this bill makes it compulsory upon the banks to have half their reserve in gold and silver. Of course they have to get gold somewhere; and they can get it from the banks as well as go to the Treasury and get it.

Mr. WARNER. It will change the legal-tenders from the banks to the Treasury. I grant that.

Mr. BUCKNER. I grant that may be the effect of it under some circumstances. That depends upon the business operations of the Government. But this bill only compels that to be continued which is already done; and the result of that is, as the statistics show, that the greenback has gone into circulation and not into the Treasury. On the contrary, the greenbacks in the Treasury have diminished twenty-five or thirty million dollars in the last eight or ten months.

Mr. WARNER. Will this increase the circulation of the country?

Mr. BUCKNER. Beyond all question it will in greenbacks. Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer some of the objections that have been made to this bill. One of these is the objection which has come from my friend from Illinois, [Mr. TOWNSHEND,] in regard to the national banks. I yield to no man in my opposition to banks of issue, and at the proper time I will be ready to give effect to that opposition. I have spoken and written as much on that subject as any man in this House, and I have the firm conviction that banks of issue will be as they always have been, the rock on which the business of the country will be wrecked in time to come. They are increasing the paper circulation at as rapid a rate as silver is increasing, and are bringing on a condition of things that will ultimately drive the gold from this country. But I want the gold and silver to go into the banks instead of remaining in New York, and that will be the effect of this bill.

The question before the House is not whether these banks are to exist or not. The gentleman's idea is we cannot improve this bank system but must fight it at all points. I regard it as an existing institution of the country which we ought to improve and amend. But at the same time no man is more decided in his opposition to banks of issue than I am. That, however, does not concern the question involved in this bill. If we take away the circulation of these banks they will remain, as they ought to be, only banks of discount and deposit, with the gold and silver for the operations of their business as banks of discount and deposit, and not of issue.

Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

Mr. WARNER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri one question.

Mr. BUCKNER. I do not yield further.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Missouri whether pending the demand for the previous question he will allow a motion to be made to commit this bill to the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. BUCKNER. No, sir. I am opposed to any debate on this financial question. If the House wants to debate it it can vote down the demand for the previous question. But before the question is put on seconding the demand for the previous question I have a small amendment which I desire to offer.

The SPEAKER. Does it come from the committee?

Mr. BUCKNER. It does. I send it to the desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "keep," in line 4 of section 1, insert "in their own vaults."

Mr. BUCKNER. I demand the previous question on the bill and amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know whether the gentleman from Missouri will be entitled to an hour if the previous question is ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILSON. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. KEIFER. I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Rules.

ELIZA LIVINGSTON AND WOOLSEY TELLER.

The SPEAKER. Before the question is put on that motion the Chair desires to make a request of the House for unanimous consent. A report (86) on the petition of Eliza Livingston and Woolsey Teller, of San Francisco, California, was yesterday withdrawn by the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. ACKLEN.] The petition, which had gone to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, was not withdrawn. In order that the proper Journal entry may be made, the Chair asks that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the said petition, and that it be recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make a request of the House on behalf of the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY,] who asks unanimous consent that Rev. Dr. Porter, president of Yale College, be admitted to the privileges of the floor during the remainder of this week.

There was no objection, and leave was accordingly granted.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now insist upon my motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Rules on the revision of the rules.

Mr. GARFIELD. Allow me to suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] whether, if he make the motion, the House would not now be likely to consent to some limitation of general debate upon the report of the Committee on Rules. Public business of other kinds will soon be pressing on this House, and if we do not reach the discussion of this report by paragraphs very soon it will I fear imperil altogether the action of the House upon it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In reply to the gentleman, I will say that I believe he was absent yesterday when the House by a very decided vote negatived the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] for a limitation of general debate. The Committee on Rules has stated to this House that it was not its purpose to restrict debate at all upon their report. For one I should be very glad to see a limitation put on the general debate, which it seems to me has run long enough. The Committee on Rules, however, has not been heard from. The whole discussion has been conducted so far by gentlemen attacking the report of the committee. I think it would be but fair that at least a couple of hours should be allowed to the Committee on Rules to make its defense of its work.

In order to test the sense of the House, I will now move that all general debate on the report of the Committee on Rules on the proposed revision of the rules shall cease with to-morrow's session.

The motion to limit general debate was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The question was then taken upon the motion of Mr. BLACKBURN to go into Committee of the Whole; and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. CARLISLE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole, and resumes the consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules on the proposed revision of the rules, upon which the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CHALMERS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CHALMERS. I yield fifteen minutes of my time to the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. ROBERTSON.]

Mr. ROBERTSON. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read two amendments which at the proper time will be proposed on behalf of the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River to the proposed rules reported from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rule X: in line 25, page 31, strike out "11" and insert "13."

Rule XI: in clause 21, on page 33, insert "to the improvement of the Mississippi River and its navigable tributaries, and all surveys and estimates relating thereto."

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, as chairman of the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River, I deem it my duty to explain the exact position occupied toward the House by the committee over which I have the honor to preside. The Committee on Rules has taken and refrained from such action in reference to that committee as to compel the intervention of this committee to rectify its acts of omission and commission.

In the first place, while advancing this committee on the list from the forty-sixth to the twenty-first, and thus acknowledging its importance, the Committee on Rules has failed to assign its duties, (as in the case of every other committee,) leaving them indeterminate, and a blank space only for their subsequent insertion.

Secondly. The Committee on Rules has reduced the number of members of the committee from thirteen to eleven without assigning any reason therefor, and in contravention of the action of this House which added the two members now proposed to be stricken off.

In regard to the first matter a brief history of the committee from its inception to its present position will show that the exact extent of its duties never have been clearly defined, as was also the case of four other committees of the House whose duties the Committee on Rules has now endeavored to assign, leaving the Committee on the Improvements of the Mississippi River alone open still. Why this course has been taken I do not pretend positively to know, but presume it has arisen from a doubt as to the full scope and extent of the authority of this committee over matters cognate to its title, which I shall now propose to explain.

The committee into which the present committee has expanded was originally merely a select committee of the House, to which was referred all bills and matters relating to what was termed the Mississippi levees.

In the Forty-fourth Congress it was made one of the standing committees of the House by a resolution which did not define its duties in any manner, except in so far as they might be ascertained from its title. Under this title the committee proceeded to take jurisdiction over and act upon all matters referred to it in regard to the levees of the Mississippi River.

At the first session of the Forty-fifth Congress it was resolved by the House "that the Committee on Levees shall be styled Committee on the Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River," thus by its title greatly enlarging the scope and sphere of its authority and jurisdiction over all proposed improvements of the Mississippi River, of whatever character they might be.

The committee, of which I was at that time the chairman, proceeded thereupon to consider such bills as were referred to them, not only looking to the protection of the alluvial lands by levees, but also all looking to the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River.

The committee, after thorough examination and full discussion of all matters submitted to them, came to the unanimous conclusion, and so reported in their formal report to the House on the 3d May, 1878, that they considered "the questions of river improvement and the protection of alluvial lands as intimately and inseparably connected." The report further proceeded to say:

By resolution of the present session the jurisdiction of the committee has been extended, so as to include questions relating to the improvement of the river, as well as questions relating to levees and alluvial lands. In the past these have been rival interests, notwithstanding nature made them interdependent. At present however all parties in interest admit that levees are necessary aids to the improvement of navigation. Your committee therefore, in accordance with their new jurisdiction, and the fortunate adjustment of rival interests, report a bill combining these two very important questions.

The bill therein referred to provided for the formation of a permanent commission to examine and decide upon some adequate and comprehensive plan of improvement of the Lower Mississippi, as well as for the protection of the alluvial lands of the Mississippi Delta from overflow.

This bill was fully and thoroughly discussed in all its features in Committee of the Whole, and finally adopted by the House by an overwhelming majority, irrespective of sectional or party lines, thus giving the sanction of the House to the committee's construction of its duties and powers.

At the first session of the present Congress a similar bill reported from this committee to the House, entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of a Mississippi River commission for the improvement of said river from the head of the passes near its mouth to its headwaters," was passed under a suspension of the rules, amended in the Senate by increasing the number of the commission, which amendment was concurred in by the House and became a law, under which the commission is now acting. This of course is another indication of the interpretation given by the House of the jurisdiction, powers, and duties of this committee.

By section 3 of this act the commission is empowered and authorized to make surveys, examinations, and investigations into the tributaries of the Mississippi as well as the main trunk of the river itself, thus embracing the tributaries within the scope of the powers assigned to that commission.

From this brief statement of facts, it must be obvious that the same powers granted to the commission should appertain to the committee; and the amendment now proposed by the committee for better defining its powers and duties should be adopted by the House.

The propriety and necessity of extending the jurisdiction of this committee over the navigable tributaries, as well as over the main trunk of the Mississippi, are evident, in view of a connected system of improvements embracing both, it being difficult if not impossible to separate interests so closely intertwined. The duties of this committee thus extended could not possibly in any way conflict or antagonize with those of any other committee of the House. On the contrary, by such extension, relief and assistance would be given other committees now partially charged with the consideration of subjects connected with these matters.

It is a common practice, and forms part of the body of the rules of this House, to divide and apportion branches of the same subject-matter to different committees. Notable instances of this are in the assignment of claims against the Government to the Committees of Claims, on War Claims, Pensions, and other committees; in Pacific railroad matters, to a separate committee from the general Committee on Railways and Canals. A similar division is made between the Committee on Commerce and that on Railways and Canals, where the subject-matter is the improvement of the rivers.

The existing discussion on the relative rights and duties of the Committee on Appropriations and other committees of this House also proceeds on the same basis of joint jurisdiction. The arguments in favor of granting the jurisdiction required to this committee are so numerous that time will only permit me to enumerate a few.

In the first place, this committee perfected the bill, now a law, under which the Mississippi River commission is actively engaged in doing precisely that work which our committee should have jurisdiction over—positively, and not only by implication. The duties of this committee would be much more clearly defined by this addition to its title, and no possible collision with any other committee could arise from it.

In the next place, this commission, composed of eminent engineers and men of science, who may be considered experts, is expected to propose and lay down some permanent plan of improvement for this great river and its tributaries, whose great national importance merits a separate consideration and a separate committee. Furthermore, the plan reported by the present commission must, if right, be referred to this committee for its action, and the preparation of some practical measure to be proposed to the House for carrying out the suggestions made in such report. As that report will cover the tributaries, as well as the river itself, it will be necessary for the committee to possess and exercise the extended powers asked on this occasion.

The Senate has already taken this step. That which was formerly only a Select Committee on Levees is now extended to the improvement of the Mississippi River and its tributaries. As the committees of the two Houses have cognizance of the same class of subjects, their titles should concur and their scope of action should embrace the same subject-matters.

Mr. Chairman, the great and growing importance of this subject must forcibly impress itself on Congress, as it has on the popular mind throughout the whole country. This is no narrow, local, sectional, or partisan question. It is as vast as the mighty river, which bears on its broad bosom the commerce and the produce of more than half the States of this Union. It is as varied as the different interests and productions of the diverse communities who dwell on its banks, or on those of its tributaries, many of which are great highways of trade and travel in themselves, and dwarfed only by comparison with this mighty Father of Waters.

Since the genius of America's great engineer opened wide the mouth of the Mississippi and insured safe and sure egress and ingress to the Mississippi Valley, the importance of removing the obstructions and impediments to the navigation of the river and its tributaries have increased a thousand-fold, and it is the duty of Congress to insure the execution of the necessary works to effect this great object. A great stride has already been taken in the right direction by the appointment and labors of the commission which is now actively engaged in the preliminary surveys of the river and tributaries, and perfecting a general system of improvements. Yet that is but the first step, and it is essential that Congress should not weary in well-doing, in a work of which all American citizens must cordially approve, for the interests of the North, the West, the East, and the South are equally bound up in its successful accomplishment.

Of all the material ties which bind the people of all sections of the Union together, there can be none stronger and more indissoluble than this would be. The iron roads which join the East to the West, the North to the South, strong as the chain may be, cannot compare to the free current of this vast artery of commerce and communication, which when permitted its free flow will give life, strength, and energy to the whole body of the American people, who will be equal sharers in its benefits and its blessings. Well termed by Mr. Calhoun as our "great inland sea," the Mississippi is the property of the whole country, not of any State or collection of States, and as such is entitled to and should enjoy all the help Congress can give it, for which all will reap in return a rich harvest.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, it was not my intention to take any part in this discussion and I would not say anything now, if a committee of which I am a member had not instructed me to represent its interests, which I shall undertake now briefly to do. The new rules, as reported, reduce the number of the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River from thirteen to eleven, and omit to state what business shall be referred to this committee. I am informed that this omission was purposely made because there was a difference of opinion in the Committee on Rules as to what should be the jurisdiction of this committee.

At the proper time and in obedience to instructions from this committee I shall move to restore the committee to its present number, thirteen, and shall also move that the jurisdiction of this committee shall be extended to all subjects relating to the levees and improvements of the Mississippi River and its navigable tributaries, and that all bills and estimates touching these subjects shall be referred to this committee. The discussion of these rules has developed two antagonistic ideas in this House, the one favoring a concentration of power in the hands of a few; the other in favor of a distribution of the business and power of the House as much as possible to all its members. Under the rules as they now stand a committee may strangle any bill, however important it may be, and prevent its consideration, although a majority of the House might be anxious to pass it.

The Speaker appoints the committees, and the committees can strangle legislation, and hence the will of the Speaker may, if he sees fit, overthrow the will of a majority in the House. This defect in the rules was clearly pointed out by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. OSCAR TURNER,] and I hope the amendment suggested by him on this subject will be adopted when it is presented. But this is not the only manacle of power from which the House now seeks to relieve itself. It is the power of one or two great committees to absorb and control legislation which we now seek to break up.

The Administration makes known its past conduct of affairs through the reports of the President and his Secretaries, but the future wants of the Government are chiefly made known through the estimates from the different Departments. We would naturally expect the estimates as to the probable expenditures of the Government for the next fiscal year in the Navy Department to be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the same might be said of foreign, military, postal, and Indian affairs, and yet, under the rules as they now stand and as it is proposed they shall be continued, every estimate from the Departments is referred to the Committee on Appropriations or of Commerce. These other committees are mere figure-heads, and must learn the wants of the Government in respect to the affairs which they nominally represent from the sub-committees on appropriations, who are put in charge of the estimates from the Departments. Such a practice is detrimental to the public service, because too much labor is put on one committee, and detrimental to the House because too few members are given an opportunity to examine and understand the wants and demands of the Administration.

Not only do we who are members realize that the great business of the House is in making appropriations, but the people at large recognize it, and every newspaper but echoes the fact when it tells us we should pass the appropriation bills and adjourn.

But how can we pass proper appropriation bills until we can first understand what it is we are expected to appropriate about. We are ready, willing, and anxious to work, and yet we meet day after day and adjourn, or waste time in useless and uninteresting discussion, because two hundred and sixty-three members must sit here and wait until fifteen members on appropriations and fifteen more on commerce tell us what to appropriate. This is an obstruction to business. If a division of labor is beneficial and productive of good in the ordinary business of life, the same rule should be applied to congressional labor.

A more general distribution of the business of the House, which consists chiefly of appropriations, would not only bring more diversified talent to the consideration of public affairs, but the responsibility of legislation would be enlarged, the investigations into the wants of the Government would be extended, and the information of members on these all-important subjects increased. It is a source of mortification and humiliation that the great body of members is constantly called on to vote millions of appropriations without any information as to the necessity for it except that it has been recommended either by the Committee on Appropriations or on Commerce.

It is true we must trust largely to the investigations of committees, but this only makes it all the more necessary that the number and strength of these investigations should be increased. That is the principle upon which so many committees have been created, and our practice should conform to the principles of their creation.

The duty of making appropriations was once confided to the Committee of Ways and Means, but when the interests of legislation demanded it a separate Committee on Appropriations was created.

The Committee on Commerce was once a Committee on Commerce and Manufactures, but when the manufacturing interests of the country grew into sufficient importance to demand it a separate Committee on Manufactures was created to consider this subject.

If the duties of this committee are not now of the same magnitude and importance they once were the present committee can at least congratulate itself on the fact that it has a representative whose genius for manufacturing subjects for its consideration demonstrates how much is lost to the country by depriving such men of an opportunity to develop themselves, and whose eloquent description of the importance of his committee will live in history by the side of the celebrated description of theatricals in the Georgia scenes, where the Georgia boy was "jist a seein' how he could a fout."

The Committee on Railways and Canals once had exclusive jurisdiction of all railway bills, but when the great Pacific roads were being constructed a separate committee was created to consider Pacific railroads. These and other instances I might cite show that a division of labor has been the recognized rule of the House, and that as each great interest in the country grew into sufficient importance it was intrusted to a separate committee.

But, on the other hand, there has been during the last few years a gradual concentration of power in the hands of the Committee on Appropriations, and it has grown to such an extent that the whole House is ready to rebel against it.

The Committee on Commerce leads the revolt, but while it demands for itself a separate jurisdiction on appropriations, it seems unwilling to concede the same privilege to other committees. We who belong to the more insignificant committees of the House feel no interest in this battle between the giants, except a hope that the struggle may end in a more equal distribution of the business and power of the House between all the committees.

The Committee on Commerce, like the Committee on Appropriations, has more than its share of the labor, and while they are rivals for power, they are at the same time allies in attempting to confine all the appropriations to themselves, and the one is as much liable to the charge of encroachment as the other.

The Committee on Commerce was originally intended to regulate existing commerce and never had any jurisdiction by specific rule to build harbors or to clear out rivers. These subjects belong properly to internal improvements, and as the power of the General Government to make internal improvements was denied by many, its advocates defended it, under the power to regulate commerce, and hence all such bills were sent to the Committee on Commerce.

But that question has been long since settled by the practice of the Government, and it is unnecessary to confine such bills to the committee any longer if the interests of the country demand a division of this labor. Let us see, then, if it is not demanded. The internal commerce of the country has been growing so rapidly that it now equals the external commerce, and in many respects their interests are divergent. The railway commerce has increased so rapidly that it has created a necessity for the improvement of water-routes of transportation to lessen the railway exactions in rates.

Again, the rapid and recent increase in our exports of heavy productions, such as wheat, corn, meat, and cotton-seed meal makes it essential to improve the facilities of water carriage, because these heavy products are unable to pay the cost of railway transportation, and these articles are principally produced in the States bordering on the Mississippi River and its tributaries. These States have been classified in the census as the Mississippi River system, in contradistinction to the Atlantic coast system, the lake system, and the Pacific system; and this Mississippi River system contains 1,683,303 square miles, and exceeds the area of the other systems combined by 339,303 square miles. This Mississippi River system is not only great in territory but equally great in population, and under the census as it now stands has a majority of the electoral votes, and when the new apportionment is made that majority will be largely increased. The interest of this system is one, and it is unified and bound together by nature. It is interwoven by the Mississippi River and its tributaries, which percolate and sustain it as the veins and arteries percolate and sustain the human system. Its waters flow through many latitudes through a single channel to the sea, bearing upon their bosom the rich productions of its varied climates to the markets of the world; and if there is any one interest in the United States which demands separate consideration by a separate committee it is the improvement of the Mississippi River and its navigable tributaries.

In this connection I ask the Clerk to read the following extract taken from the memorial of the convention held in Quincy, Illinois, in October, 1879.

The Clerk read as follows:

In 1879 the total production of wheat in the United States and Territories was about four hundred and fifty million bushels. Of this amount the Mississippi system produced over three hundred million bushels, nearly twice as much as the others combined. Of corn the whole country produced, in round numbers, fifteen hundred million bushels; the Mississippi system produced nearly twelve hundred million, or four times as much as the others combined. Of other cereals, of cotton and hay, of tobacco, sugar, and rice, of cattle and hogs, and of all products not included in manufactured articles, there was produced in the river system an amount in value exceeding one and one-half billions of dollars, a sum that staggers the imagination to contemplate.

The summary would not be complete without considering the manufacturing interests and capabilities of this region. Careful calculations, recently given to the public by an eminent statistician, detailing the growth and progress in this particular, shows that it will soon equal, if it does not surpass, the older communities in the North and East. A few facts of growth will indicate what the near future will be. In 1878 the State of Illinois alone, which in 1850 had less than one hundred miles of railroad, and few or no furnaces, produced as many iron rails as the entire country did in any year prior to 1860.

In the same year the four States of Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, and Kansas produced 266,703 tons of rails, more than 30 per cent. of all made in the United States. In that year the total production of rolled iron of all kinds in this country was 1,555,576 tons, of which the States of Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Michigan, Missouri, and Kansas produced one-seventh.

* * * * * * *

The price obtained for the surplus fixes the value of the whole production, as the home market generally rules at the price of the foreign, less the cost of the transfer. Thus the saving to the people of the valley who till the soil of one cent a bushel on wheat and corn for the year 1879 would, according to the figures of production, aggregate a sum total of nearly $15,000,000. It is not unreasonable to estimate that the deepening of the channel of the Mississippi River will lessen the freight carriage of cereals alone to the sea-board at least five cents a bushel, which gives, in round numbers, $75,000,000 per year on the present yield. Your memorialists are, therefore, free to declare that the cost of the improvement, whether it be ten, fifty, or a hundred millions of dollars, will not deter the people by its magnitude, since the saving to the producers and tax-payers, on two articles alone, will annually equal the higher sum.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, there are still other reasons why the appropriations for this Mississippi River and its tributaries should be taken from the Committee on Commerce and given to a separate committee. The rule, as proposed by the amendment, limits the appropriations to navigable waters. There will be no danger, therefore, that the money of the Government will be thrown away in dry creeks and spring branches. All admit the constitutional power of the Government to make improvements of these great navigable streams; and those of us who desire their improvement are unwilling that our appropriations shall be jeopardized or stigmatized by association with the Kiskiminetas. If it is necessary that appropriations for such streams as the Kiskiminetas should be carried in an omnibus we are unwilling that they shall ride in our 'bus or at our expense.

There is still another reason. The Committee on Commerce was created for the purpose of considering external commerce; and it may sometimes happen that the interest of the Atlantic sea-coast commerce and that of the Mississippi River system are so much opposed to each other that it would be unfair to permit any one committee to represent both interests.

But, sir, this discussion, as I have said, has disclosed the fact that there are men of both political parties in this House who are in favor of a concentration of power in the hands of a few. They, sir, would erect a magnificent central figure composed of two giant committees standing back to back and raising their colossal heads far above the liliputian committees which surround them.

Now, I will admit that perhaps party discipline would be greatly enhanced if the whole business of this House could be controlled by one committee and if the Speaker, whether he belonged to one party or the other, could control that committee. But in that event I would like to know what use there is for the rest of us? [Laughter.]

They tell us that economy demands this course, and we have been warned of the fearful gulf of extravagance into which we will certainly sink unless the Committee on Appropriations is permitted alone to guide the helm of state. And yet the Committee on Commerce answer this and rest their case, too, upon the plea of economy. They tell us that their method of passing a bill in the committee-room and then putting it through the House under a suspension of the rules is also an economic measure, and that it has saved millions of dollars to this Government by preventing any amendments to the bill.

Perhaps that may be so. I, sir, certainly do not now undertake to dispute it; but I will say that if we are here merely for the purpose of making party capital by cutting down the estimates which the Administration make for carrying on the Government, then perhaps it is best that the work should all be done in the committee-room and pressed through the House under the rallying cry of sustaining the party in the committee. If the chief end of American statesmanship consists of a simple reduction of expenditures without regard to the growing interests of the country; if we are here simply to study how little we can compel Department clerks to live on—how low we can reduce the postal star service and how few mails we can send to the rural districts on the back of a mule; if parsimony is to usurp the place of economy—then I agree that all the appropriations had better be made through one committee, and that the members of that committee had better be selected with special reference to their supposed proficiency in tallow-candle retrenchment. If, on the other hand, the great national rivers of this country can only be improved by putting into the same bill with them dry creeks and spring branches; if the good and the bad appropriations must all ride in the same omnibus; if my distinguished friend the chairman of the Committee on Commerce must play the part of a legislative Buttercup and mix up the Mississippi River and the Kiskiminetas so no man can tell how ever he could do it——

Mr. WHITE. Nature has mixed them up.

Mr. CHALMERS. We find no difficulty in understanding what nature has done; we are only brought into trouble when we come to consider the mixture which men make.

Mr. WHITE. That is whisky and water.

Mr. CHALMERS. Thank you, I never drink, or I would take some with you. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, if the improvement of our rivers can only be made in this way, then I think perhaps the old plan of passing the bill in the committee-room and then putting it through the House is perhaps the best. It might be dangerous to bring a bill in here and permit amendments to be made upon it—dangerous lest some of these gentlemen who have constitutional scruples against making works of internal improvement by the General Government should be seduced into voting for the bill by the addition of a small appropriation for their districts. And it would be a great violation of the principles of retrenchment and reform to allow too many members to "get in on this bill." And it would certainly be a great violation of the rights of the members of the committee to allow any of their pet schemes to be taken out in order to let somebody else's in. The fact of the business is this: the river and harbor bill as it comes from the Committee on Commerce usually is like a life-boat setting out from a sinking ship. Its cargo is principally made up of the political fortunes of a favored few whose political lives are to be saved in the next election, and they are in a great hurry to get away unless some other drowning wretch might undertake to get in and sink the boat.

I am no advocate, Mr. Chairman, of the doctrine that a distribution of the appropriations to different committees will necessarily end in extravagance. Every committee of this House should be actuated by the same motives and should be equally anxious to do just exactly what is best for the interests of the country. Nor am I an advocate of that other doctrine, that a mere reduction of expenditures without regard to the interests of the country is either wise statesmanship or popular legislation. The people of the United States are neither idiots nor niggards, they are perfectly willing at any time to justify and sustain any proper, constitutional, and well-guarded appropriation of money which promises to develop largely the resources of the country.

The Eads jetties gave us a deep-sea entrance at the mouth of the Mississippi River, and the whole country has applauded the appropriation.

The Mississippi River and its tributaries should be deepened. It is a work of great national importance, and yet, as has been well said, this great channel, through its entire extent, is to-day "impeded with wrecks, choked with sand-bars, bristling with snags, and millions of dollars' worth of property have been kept out from the markets of the world" in consequence. Only last fall it was stated that a firm in the city of Saint Louis had failed for a large amount because they had sold wheat which they had on hand but could not deliver from want of water on the bars of the river.

Mr. FRYE. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. CHALMERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRYE. I was not in the Hall when the gentleman commenced his remarks. I desire to call his attention to the fact that the Committee on Rules left the jurisdiction of his committee untouched purposely so that the House itself should determine its jurisdiction. Therefore some proposition should be made to the House by the gentleman's committee defining the jurisdiction it should have.

Mr. CHALMERS. If the gentleman had been in and if my remarks had been of sufficient interest to attract his attention, he would have found I stated that very proposition myself and stated further that I had been instructed by the committee of which I am a member to ask an amendment to be made, which amendment has already been read by the Clerk.

Mr. FRYE. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I was not aware any mention had been made of it.

Mr. CHALMERS. To proceed, sir, I have simply to say that the reduction in the cost of transportation in two single articles, wheat and corn, will more than pay in every year the appropriations that have been made for the improvement of the Mississippi River; and the reduction in the single item of insurance will more than pay a hundred times over for pulling all the snags out of the Mississippi River. And yet, while $200,000,000 have been, through the bills coming from the Committee on Commerce, expended on other rivers and harbors, only $7,000,000 have been expended on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, as stated by the Quincy convention. This alone should entitle us to the amendment we ask.

This is certainly, then, a great work of national improvement, one which even the most strict constructionist in the House could maintain, and it deserves therefore a separate consideration; it deserves that its interests should be taken away from that omnibus bill which carries along with it so many appropriations that you, sir, and others are unwilling to vote for.

I now yield fifteen minutes of my time to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. DUNN.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has just fifteen minutes remaining.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to participate in this debate at the outset. It may be indeed considered somewhat presumptuous on my part to undertake a discussion of the rules, and I would not undertake it in the strict sense of discussing parliamentary law. But this discussion has taken a range and raised questions for consideration that forbid that I should longer be silent, inasmuch as questions materially involving the interests of my particular section of country, and I think of the whole country, are gravely involved in the settlement of these rules. I would have been content to sit at the feet of older members here and learn wisdom from them. I feel great deference to and great respect for the old managers of legislation here. But, sir, I do think that the settlement of these rules ought to be so arranged as to distribute the labors of the members of this House. A wise regard to the proper administration of affairs here will suggest to every thinking mind that the great duties and labors devolving upon members of this House should be so distributed as to secure the attention of every member of Congress. The rules should be so framed as to secure the greatest thoroughness of investigation and the most perfect accuracy of report.

A few members are not able to study all the great economies of the country. They are not able to get the bottom facts of all the great questions and interests involved and to be affected and disposed of by our legislation here; and it is the part of wisdom to distribute that labor to the greatest possible extent, so as to secure the labor and thought and ability of every member upon this floor. That has not been done. It is not being done. I have no assault to make upon any committee. I have no assault to make upon old members who are charged with monopolizing legislation here. But I appeal to this House for a just and wise distribution of the labors that are to be performed here. That is what we need, and that is what should be brought about. Have we that distribution now? Any one who will take the list of committees and notice the jurisdiction distributed or proposed to be distributed to those committees will find that about forty-three members stand out in the legislative horizon here bold and conspicuous as the sun in the heavens. The people see them, hear of them, know of them. About sixty-one other members have responsible duties to perform that do not make them conspicuous and that do not lead them into the inner temple of legislation, and about one hundred and eighty-nine members are retired to the shades of obscurity.

If any one of these retired underlings has cheek enough and brass enough and voice enough he may force himself upon the attention of the country to the great disgust of the older members here. [Laughter and applause.] That is unpleasant to do. I do not want to offend these older members at all; but I desire to perform my duties here. We stand here as equals in duties, equals in rights, equals in privilege, if not in ability, and all should seek to contribute their mite to the country's service.

Mr. Chairman, if you were the owner and proprietor of some great business, in which two hundred and ninety-three laborers were required and employed, and you should employ a man of business to superintend, organize, and administer that business for you, and after full and complete organization, with the business started and going, what would you think if you should visit your works and find one hundred and eighty-nine of your two hundred and ninety-three laborers absolutely idle—forty-three of them with the great burden of the labor thrust upon them, and the remainder doing just fair work? What, I ask, would you say of such a piece of administration? What would any sensible, practical man do but condemn it and discharge the "boss?"

Now, sir, what are we to do about this thing? The practical question that presents itself here is, how shall we correct this manifest error? We should take a wise view of it and see how far and how justly we can distribute these labors. In doing that let us take every committee and assign a just share of the duties to each one. The great contest and struggle here appears to be between the Appropriations Committee and the Committee on Commerce, with an occasional side-slap at the Committee of Ways and Means. I think, sir, the Committee of Ways and Means ought not to receive any blows from anybody. It has not done anything to hurt anybody lately, [laughter,] and I believe it will not.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion these great rival committees are overtaxed with work. If we will to-day take a view of the personnel of the Appropriations Committee, we will find its members greatly overworked. They are, in fact, broken down. Its dead, wounded, and dying lie thickly strewn along the line of the legislative battle-field like wrecked ships upon the sea-shore after a furious storm.

The chairman of that committee, a gentleman whom I honor and esteem highly, for he is a gentleman of splendid ability and wisdom, a conservative man, one who well administers his office as the chairman of that great committee—that gentleman now lies prostrate from overwork, but I rejoice to say not hopelessly so, but is convalescent.

The second member of that committee, the present acting chairman, a gentleman of equal worth, merit, and ability, in fact, the noblest Roman of them all, although not confined to his bed, looks pale, haggard, and much worn, as one whose burden is more than he can bear, and which he yet carries with true and admirable heroism. [Laughter.]

Other members of that committee may be seen moving about with abstracted look like somnambulists before whose distempered vision river and harbor bills for the improvement of the Kiskiminetas and like rivulets danced in endless profusion and wild extravagance. [Renewed laughter.] The members of that committee are all overworked and worn out. Yet notwithstanding all this agony of labor which they are assuming to themselves, they ask for more. Mr. Chairman, let them be delivered from themselves and preserved for future usefulness and, let us hope, greatness. I for one feel like rushing to their rescue, and think this whole House will join in the rush. I foresee that Sampson will be shorn of some of his locks.

And there is the Committee on Commerce, presided over by the distinguished gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] a gentleman whose acquaintance I had the pleasure of making at the extra session of this Congress. I first saw him on this floor two years ago. At that time he looked hale, hearty, ruddy, and robust. I am sorry to see now that pale, wan, and haggard look upon his countenance. His coat does not button so snugly around him as it did then. [Laughter.] He has too many rivers to wade, too many harbors to fix up. There is "too much water in his'n." [Great laughter.] I am in favor of depriving him of some "of the water."

I desire to see that great and important committee relieved of some of its duties. I would like to see the ruddy glow of health return to the cheek of its distinguished chairman, for his services will be invaluable to the country hereafter. I would like to see the elasticity return to his step; to see him move hopefully and bouyantly, giving promise of long life and future usefulness. Yes, as suggested by my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. MCKENZIE,] I would like to see his coat fit him better. [Renewed laughter.] Sir, long may he live to serve and honor our country! I am proud to have the privilege and honor of counting him among my friends.

There is one other committee which is capable of creating some excitement here—the Committee on Finance, or, I believe, it is called the Committee on Banking and Currency, or the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. That committee is not able to take to itself any more jurisdiction, but it has an interesting field, an exciting subject to handle. Whenever one of its members rises here with any proposition, I do not care what it is, whether a proposition to suppress the old-fashioned copper cent, or to sit down vigorously on the nickel five-cent piece, [laughter,] it stirs up everybody in this House. There seems to be a smell of money about them, and we all grow red in the face, our hair stands on end, our bristles get up. It is like an explosion of dynamite. [Laughter.] We easily get excited about our finances, as small a matter as it would seem to be with most of us. In this House, at this particular time, Mr. Chairman, I suppose there is more financial thunder and lightning to the square inch bottled up and held in readiness for the impending explosion than there is on any other part of this planet. [Renewed laughter.] The voice of that committee will never be heard above the din and roar of that explosion when all those bottles of financial wrath, thunder, and lightning are poured out upon the country. But I see no relief for them when it comes. They, too, must "stand back to back," shut their eyes, fold their hands in supplication, ask a blessing, and grin and bear it. [Laughter.]

This banking question is a very exciting question. We had an exhibition of it this morning, when the excitement ran so high that it came very near raising the Speaker out of his seat. Now, all these committees need relief by a more extended distribution of the work of this House. We should relieve them all from the terrible duties and burdens now imposed upon them.

But the principal question to which I desired to address myself was as to the jurisdiction proposed to be given to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River. That is a serious question for us to consider. Ought its jurisdiction to be extended so as to embrace the navigable tributaries of the Mississippi River?

Mr. Chairman, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Commerce tells us that the friends of the Mississippi River system will be better off with their interests in the hands of his committee than elsewhere. Sir, we have had a Committee on Commerce since we have had a Congress. We have also had the Mississippi River and its thirty-three tributaries nearly as long. How many miles have been added to the navigable waters of that system by improvements done under bills and measures brought in by the Committee on Commerce? How much have their channels been deepened? What did that committee do for the mouths of that mighty river? Scarcely a mile of navigable water added to nature's gift, and not an inch to the depth of its mouths.

Sir, the people of the Mississippi Valley long waited, watched, and prayed in vain to that committee and Congress for improvement of the navigation of that mighty system of water-ways, and a whole century of our national life closed without hope or promise of realization of their desires. In despair and sadness we turned away from the Committee on Commerce, and asked Congress for a special committee. We got first the Committee on Levees, which, by dint of hard labor, developed into the present standing Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River. This committee has had but a short existence; but, sir, it has accomplished much and deserves well of the country and of Congress. Under its auspices, aided by the select committee of the Senate on transportation routes, questions which were by the Committee on Commerce and a large portion of the people considered mere wild and visionary theories have passed from the realm of theory to that of accomplished fact, and the further fact shown that the probable cost of these now accomplished works was largely overestimated by the Committee on Commerce and the Congress under its lead. The Fort Saint Philip Canal project, at a cost of $8,000,000, was that proposed by the Committee on Commerce, and was passed through the House, and defeated on motion of the Senate Select Committee on Transportation Routes in the Senate.

It was reserved for our distinguished countryman James B. Eads to seize and harness the gigantic forces of the mighty floods of this great river which had hitherto bidden defiance to the skill and power of the Committee on Commerce and "the rest of mankind," and harness them into his service and subdue the hitherto imperious and unconquered river and compel it to perform the work of dredging its own channel to the sea. So incredulous and unbelieving was the Committee on Commerce and the Congress that Eads had to set up an insurance office and go on with the work at his own cost without aid from the Government until he had demonstrated the complete success of his plan. Sir, that grand work is now an accomplished fact, and we read in the press dispatches the daily announcement that the largest ocean vessels pass the Balize and compete at the docks of New Orleans for the commerce of the great Mississippi Valley.

The world has known but few if any physical triumphs grander than this which now links the name of Eads with immortality, the practicability and possibility of which the Committee on Commerce could not be convinced.

This grand work has been inaugurated and pushed to success under the auspices of the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River of the House and the Senate Select Committee on Transportation Routes.

Sir, the success of this grand work has evoked a power in behalf of the unobstructed navigation of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, as one grand harmonious whole, more irresistible than that which originally demanded an undivided ownership of its waters. The Committee on Levees and Improvements has been the first to recognize that power and that demand, and the first to respond to it. We brought in at the extra session of this Congress a bill to create a permanent commission composed of scientific engineers whose duty it shall be to complete the surveys of the Mississippi River and its tributaries and prepare and present to the Congress, through the Secretary of War, such plans and specifications as will deepen and render the channels of the rivers permanent, make their banks secure, give ease and safety to navigation, and prevent destructive floods. Sir, this is a move in the right direction, and the first that has been taken in the interest of true economy and permanent good and that gives promise of the complete and successful solution of the problem of that great water-way to the sea.

Heretofore some millions have been spent on these rivers under the plans of the Committee of Commerce to satisfy the clamorous demands of the people, without any well-matured or harmonious plan comprehending the whole Mississippi River system. That work has been fragmentary and worthless in a measure. Thanks to the wisdom and foresight of the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River, and Congress under its advice, a liberal appropriation for completing the surveys was made at the extra session of this Congress, and those surveys are now, doubtless, sufficiently advanced to justify the immediate commencement and vigorous prosecution of the work of improvement. The needed improvements, I feel sure, will be simple, comparatively inexpensive, and no good excuse can be given for their postponement.

Then, sir, as this is the offspring of our committee, its jurisdiction and the jurisdiction of the commission, should at once be extended to the navigable tributaries of the Mississippi River. If they have this jurisdiction they will treat that river and its tributaries as one grand system, and settle upon one comprehensive and consistent plan of improvement. Each part of that great work will consist with the other—in fact it will be one grand, harmonious work, having a beginning at the mouth of the Mississippi, continuing up its main trunk and tributaries, and ending only at their various sources. If you give the tributaries to the Committee of Commerce and the main trunk to us, we shall be pulling in contrary directions, the commission will be paralyzed between the contending forces, and all will end in a waste of money and in disaster.

This committee, then, thus far, has well performed its part; it has been a faithful servant over a small matter; let it now be made ruler over more. I said, Mr. Chairman, and I repeat, that true wisdom in the administration of this House would admonish us to make as equal a distribution of our labors among the members as possible, giving each his equal share of the work, so that all shall be constantly engaged studying the great economies, resources, and varied interests of the country, and maturing and improving plans for our advancement and progress and the development of our great and varied resources.

According to the best statistics I can gather we have in this country about twenty-eight thousand miles of navigable rivers, besides about seven thousand miles of sea-coast, dotted thickly with cities, towns, harbors, piers, light-houses, &c. The tonnage of the American sailing-vessels, steam-vessels, canal-boats, and barges running in these waters is 4,212,764.54 tons. The tonnage of foreign vessels entered at our seaports during the year 1879 was 10,718,394 tons. The exports for the year ended June 30, 1879, amounted to $717,093,777; the imports for the same period amounted to $466,073,775. Of all these vast interests the Committee on Commerce claims and holds exclusive jurisdiction except as to tariff.

The Mississippi River and its thirty-three navigable tributaries have fourteen thousand miles of navigable waters, about one-half of the navigable river water-ways of the United States. The tonnage of these rivers on June 30, 1878, was 457,757.60 tons, about one-tenth of the entire tonnage of the United States. It will thus be seen that the proposed amendment does not take away so much of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Commerce as gentlemen may imagine. I beg to assure the members of that committee that there will be left to them a broad field of labor and distinction, in which, by diligence, they may get them much honor.

The Mississippi River system is an entirety, isolated from, and entirely disconnected with all the other water-ways of the United States, and may well be set apart and assigned to one committee. Every consideration of wisdom and economy demands that it should be.

Sir, this will not emasculate the Committee on Commerce. We will still leave to it fourteen thousand or fifteen thousand miles of navigable rivers; we will leave to it the great lakes of the North; we will leave to it the Atlantic coast, the Pacific coast, and the Gulf of Mexico, with their great cities and towns, harbors, piers, and 3,755,006.94 tons of shipping, and all their vast commercial interests, to improve and foster. Sir, it is enough to satisfy the most ambitious and aspiring committee.

Mr. Chairman, I come now to consider a graver and more serious phase of this question, which I would not feel justified in passing unnoticed. That question is, whether this great work of the improvement of these rivers should be undertaken at all.

The opposition usually exhibited against the improvement of rivers and harbors has always seemed unaccountable to me. Sir, we appropriate annually near $300,000,000 for the support and progress of this Government. Of all this vast sum, nothing is left to show for the expenditure except the improvement of rivers and harbors.

The millions appropriated for other purposes, like the rain-drops that fall upon the desert plains, pass at once from sight without leaving a trace behind, while the limited sums so grudgingly given for internal improvements remain to bless and enrich the country for all time to come. The enemies of internal improvement never meet the question fairly, but are in the habit of selecting a few items of minor importance in river and harbor bills, and by holding these up to ridicule they seek to cast odium upon the entire policy. This is neither just nor fair, and will not be effective with the wise. Sir, the time was when it was in order to argue the wisdom of the policy and the constitutionality of the doctrine of improvement of the navigation of our rivers; but we have now passed beyond the regions of doubt and argument of these questions, and those who are still opposed to the improvement of our great water-ways by the General Government "Stand like mile-posts upon a deserted road."

Mr. Chairman, I do not hesitate to say that agriculture rises above all other of our pursuits in interest and importance. In my judgment, it is the noblest occupation of man. It usually bears the aspect of an humble servitor, but in the end it asserts its value and forces the confession that all wealth and prosperity are based upon the soil and the labor that brings forth its products. In this country it is the vital current that gives life and energy to all other pursuits and industries. The careful student of our political history beholds in our midst the various forms of organized and incorporated capital building up its selfish pursuits regardless of the weal or woe of our common country; its managers heed not the consequences of bad laws, provided they contribute to satisfy their own greed or carry out their selfish designs. Notable among these are railroads and banks. They go, organized and disciplined, into the political contests of the country; they hover over and hang around the capital, and usually depart flushed with victory and loaded with spoils. Sir, they are still here seeking to fasten deeper in the body-politic their fatal talons. They are in Congress and out of Congress. They have created that cesspool of political corruption called the lobby, in whose slimy atmosphere they find the conditions congenial to their growth and contributory to their power, a power usually most fatally wielded against defenseless shippers and helpless debtors along their lines, robbing the husbandman of the hard-earned fruits of his labor.

Sir, no lobby has ever been organized here in the interest of the farmer. Our vast system of rivers, thank God, is beyond the reach of corporations, and is the free gift of nature, free to all, and there is no lobby here to push schemes for their improvement. There is a vast difference in principle between the granting of Government aid in the construction of railways owned and controlled by private corporations and simply improving and keeping in repair river highways controlled by the United States, and which nature built without expense. The great question with the American producer is not how much he can produce, but shall he find a market at remunerative prices? Cheap, safe, and easy river navigation is the solution of that question. The opponents of river improvement say that the appropriations are increasing in amount to an alarming extent. It is said that of the $125,000,000 that have been appropriated since 1862 for improvement of rivers and harbors, $75,000,000 have been appropriated since 1868.

If gentlemen will take the trouble and pains to look to the commercial statistics they will find most satisfactory results. The report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics for the year ended June 30, 1879, (page 5,) shows that the export of agricultural implements has increased since 1868 from $673,681 to $2,933,338 in 1879; living animals of all kinds, from $733,395 to $11,487,754 in the same time; bread and breadstuffs, from $69,024,059 in 1868 to $210,355,528 in 1879; coal, from $1,516,220 to $2,319,392; copper and brass manufactures, from $496,329 to $3,031,924; cotton manufactures, from $4,871,054 to $10,853,950; fruits, from $406,512 to $1,916,382; iron and steel manufactures, from $5,491,306 to $12,766,294; leather, from $607,105 to $6,800,070; provisions, from $30,436,642 to $116,858,650; mineral oil, from $19,752,143 to $35,999,862, &c. That is not all; as a logical consequence of this increase of exports the balance of trade, then setting heavily against us, has been turned in our favor to the amount of nearly $300,000,000 per annum, enabling us to resume specie payments, and bringing a return of prosperity and giving life and energy to all of our industries. We have had abundant crops and cheaper transportation, and it has lifted the burden of debt from our country, given it credit with the world, and honor in the eyes of all nations.

Mr. Chairman, one of the most valuable and instructive reports ever submitted to Congress was that made by the present distinguished and able chairman of the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River [Mr. ROBERTSON] to the Forty-fifth Congress, second session. In that able report is presented a comprehensive review of the whole Mississippi River system. The committee say, (page 3:)

That the new era of peace, material development, revival of industries, and extension of trade which is succeeding several years of political strife and business depression finds in the Mississippi River system a fine field for operations The problem of cheap transportation, so important to the welfare of the producing classes, looks to the river and its many navigable tributaries for solution. Considering the national importance of that question at the present time, it is safe to assert that the river system has reached a point in its history where it will soon regain its lost prestige.

DESCRIPTIVE NOTES.

The Mississippi and its navigable tributaries intersect and supply with cheap transportation nearly every portion of the vast agricultural region extending from the Lakes to the Gulf, and the Alleghany to the Rocky Mountains, an area of about two million square miles; in other words, about two-thirds of the area of the whole United States. Strictly speaking, the Mississippi River basin contains but 1,257,545 square miles. That total is, according to Walker's Statistical Atlas of the United States, composed of the following minor basins or subdivisions, namely:

	Sq. miles.
Lower Mississippi	65,646
Upper Mississippi	179,635
Missouri	527,690
Arkansas	184,742
Ohio	207,111
Red	92,721

But the region drained and, in a business way, benefited by the Mississippi River system is more extensive than the mere basins, and it is fairer to use the first-mentioned area (which is that given by Foster, in his excellent work on the valley) as the proper measure of territory for the purposes of this review.

The following table shows the number of miles which the river, and each one of its tributaries, is navigable from its mouth to the place designated on the accompanying map as the head of navigation:

Missouri	3,127	Cumberland	653
Mississippi	2,166	White	460
Ohio	1,021	Washita	445
Red	820	Yellowstone	438
Tennessee	759	Wabash	369
Arkansas	668	Allegheny	325
Minnesota	295	Chippewa	90
Illinois	269	Iowa	80
Yazoo	240	Saint Francis	80
Osage	237	Saint Croix	65
Sunflower	207	Rock	64
Tallahatchie	200	Kentucky	60
Green	200	Black, (Louisiana)	54
Wisconsin	160	Bighorn	53
Black, (Arkansas)	136	Clinch	50
Monongahela	110
Kanawha	94	Total	14,086
Muskingum	94

On page 5, treating of it as a national highway, they say:

The navigable portions of this vast river system either intersect or border eighteen States and two Territories. Each one of these States and Territories has an extensive business interest in the Lower Mississippi, or trunk-line, as well as the particular portions of the river highway which touch its own territory. The mileage of the navigable portions of the system which cross or border each State is nearly as follows:

Arkansas	1,826	Minnesota	660
Missouri	1,504	Wisconsin	560
Louisiana	1,314	Ohio	556
Montana	1,311	Nebraska	400
Illinois	1,277	Pennsylvania	380
Tennessee	1,220	Texas	300
Mississippi	1,207	Dakota	285
Kentucky	1,187	Alabama	250
Iowa	845	Kansas	190
Indiana	840	West Virginia	104

An estimate of the political power of these States and Territories shows how national are the interests attaching to the river. Of the three hundred and one Representatives of the people in the present Congress, the eighteen States and two Territories send one hundred and seventy-one. This representation is based on population, and, according to the last census, those States and Territories had a population of 22,215,022, against 16,342,349 in the rest of the United States.

Again, a comparison of some of the leading products of those eighteen States with the products of the whole United States illustrates very clearly the national character of this comprehensive highway. According to the recent annual report of the United States Commissioner of Agriculture they, in 1876, produced 1,123,106,000 bushels of Indian corn of the total 1,283,827,500 bushels produced in the whole Union; in other words, over 87 per cent. of the whole national crop.

The wheat product of the same eighteen States was 200,899,000 bushels against the total 289,356,500 bushels of the whole United States, or 69 per cent. They produced 72 per cent. of the total rye product of the United States. During the same year they furnished 70 per cent., or $19,811,650, of the total $28,282,968 worth of tobacco produced in the United States. Of the total 4,438,000 bales of cotton grown in the whole United States in 1876 they produced 74 per cent., or 3,318,000 bales. As the statistics of pork-packing are usually given by cities instead of States, we will take for a further comparison the value of live hogs in 1876. According to the same authority, the Commissioner of Agriculture, the value of the hogs of the eighteen States was estimated to be $137,154,406, and those of the whole Union $171,077,196, or 71 per cent.

The chief coal-fields of the United States, those of Pennsylvania, Indiana, Ohio, Illinois, and Missouri, are in close proximity to the navigable waters of the Mississippi or its tributaries. The extensive iron deposits of Tennessee, Western Pennsylvania, and Missouri also adjoin this national highway. It furnishes water communication with the ocean for commerce and freights of such cities as Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Louisville, Nashville, Memphis, Saint Paul, Keokuk, Omaha, Little Rock, Shreveport, Jefferson, (Texas,) Saint Louis, New Orleans, and many others scattered over different portions of the great interior of the United States.

The statistical and crop reports for 1879 show that the percentage of leading products produced in these States is still greater than the rate here given.

Sir, this great work is in nature, in fact, and in law, national, and in accordance with the strictest principles of political economy as well as common sense. The most productive portions of the United States are the rich valleys extending up and down the Mississippi River and its tributaries. These fourteen thousand miles of natural highways, the free gift of nature, and yet unimproved to any considerable extent by man, are located where they will do the most good. True wisdom and public economy require that such laws of nature and trade be not neglected or disregarded.

Mr. Seward, in 1860, speaking from the steps of the court-house in Saint Paul, gave expression to his enthusiasm in these words:

I have never until now occupied that place where I could grasp the whole grand panorama of the continent, for the happiness of whose present people and of whose millions of millions it is the duty of an American statesman to labor. * * * Here is the central place where the agriculture of the richest regions of North America must begin its magnificent supplies to the whole world. On the east, all along the shore of Lake Superior, and on the west stretching in one broad plain, in a belt across the continent, is a country where State after State is yet to rise, and whence the productions for the support of human society in other crowded States must forever go forth. * * * I now believe that the last seat of power on the great continent will be found somewhere within a radius not very far from the spot where I stand, at the head of navigation on the Mississippi River, and on the great mediterranean lake.

Mr. Chairman, let us go in imagination and stand where Seward stood, and take one ravishing view of this glorious heritage. Standing there and looking toward the South, eighteen great States and two Territories lie stretched out before us "like giants reposing in their slumbers," while on either side rise in majestic grandeur the Alleghany and the Rocky Mountains, forming nature's rock-ribbed frontiers to what might be a mighty empire within itself. At our feet lie Minnesota and the great grain States of the Northwest, fast becoming, in their very infancy, the granary of the world. Farther to the east lie great Ohio, now becoming the young mother of Presidents, and glorious old Virginia which must now yield the budding honor of motherhood to her fair daughter and consent to be called and honored as the grandmother of Presidents in the future.

Farther east lies sturdy Pennsylvania, "the land of brotherly love," wombing untold and fabulous wealth in her rugged mountains. Below these lies hospitable Kentucky, the land of Daniel Boone and great "Harry of the West;" and by its side gallant Tennessee, the "Volunteer State" and the home of "Old Hickory Jackson." Looking far down south through the misty distance we catch a glimpse of beautiful Mississippi; Arkansas, the land of Davy Crockett; fair Louisiana, and Texas, the "Lone Star State," the brightest in the galaxy of States. Does not the heart swell with patriotic pride as this grand panorama passes in review before us? Sir, is not my enthusiasm pardonable? Is this not a work worthy of the best efforts of a great and growing nation?

In conclusion, I will say to those who now oppose this great work of improvement and progress, that when the time shall come, as it will, when the gathered forces and floods of this great system of waters shall have been made obedient to the genius of American engineering, and the great Father of Waters shall bear upon its bosom in security and safety the wealth and fortunes of the mightiest empire on the earth, and distribute blessings and benefits to the teeming millions upon its shores and to every part of the habitable globe, standing aloof and abashed they may well exclaim:

Shake not thy golden locks at me,
Thou canst not say I did it.

Mr. BAYNE obtained the floor and said: I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN.]

Mr. ROBERTSON. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CHALMERS] who is in charge of the time allotted to our committee is now absent. I was under the impression that two hours were allowed to this committee. I so understood the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] who has control of this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi has not had charge of the entire time of the committee. He had charge of one hour, and has consumed it. The floor now belongs to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BAYNE,] who yields fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN.]

Mr. REAGAN. I ask for the reading of the amendment proposed by the Committee on the Mississippi Levees.

The Clerk read as follows:

In Rule X, line 25, page 31, strike out "11," and insert "13."

In Rule XI, clause 21, page 33, insert "to the improvement of the Mississippi River and its navigable tributaries, and all surveys and estimates relating thereto."

Mr. REAGAN. It is to the latter amendment that I invoke the attention of the House for a few moments. I desire to point out what would be its probable, if not its necessary, effect if adopted. It proposes to confer upon the Committee on the Mississippi Levees and Improvements the preparation of a bill or bills appropriating money to improve the Mississippi River and its tributaries. If appropriations have not already been made for the harbors and the remaining rivers of the country it would leave the jurisdiction of those to the Committee on Commerce.

Now, as a friend of river and harbor improvements, desiring their success as one of the great agencies in promoting the welfare of the country, I suggest that this amendment is full of danger. I call attention to the fact that in each river and harbor appropriation bill for the last four years—I do not undertake to speak of what preceded that period, for want of special familiarity with it—in each bill within the last four years for the improvement of the navigable waters of the United States, the Mississippi and its tributaries have been made specially prominent on account of the great interests and necessities referred to so eloquently by the gentleman from Mississippi. By analyzing the appropriations it will be seen that the Mississippi and its tributaries have had their full share of each appropriation for rivers and harbors. They have never been neglected by the Committee on Commerce. The importance of those great rivers has never been underestimated; the commercial interests of the people who occupy the States and Territories bordering on them have never been overlooked or disregarded in any river and harbor appropriation bill.

The particular point of danger to which I desire to call attention is this: If you confer upon a committee power to prepare an appropriation bill for the improvement of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, (which would amount to perhaps about half the navigable waters of the United States,) it would, in my judgment, become impossible to get any more appropriations for the improvement of that great river and its many tributaries. Why do I say this? Because it is my belief (each member, upon the facts within his knowledge, will determine whether this belief is well-founded or not) that no bill proposing appropriations of money for one-half the navigable waters of this country, excluding the others, (whether such bill comes from the Committee on Mississippi Levees or from the Committee on Commerce,) will ever receive the sanction of this House. If you are to improve successfully the navigable waters of the United States you must enable one committee to deal with the whole question—to compare the needs of the various rivers and harbors of the country, and equitably and fairly adjust the appropriations according to the importance of these several rivers and harbors. Suppose this jurisdiction is conferred as proposed, and the Committee on Commerce should bring in a bill to appropriate money for the Atlantic waters and the Pacific waters, do you suppose it could ever pass this House? I have no expectation, no belief, that it could possibly do so.

I think, therefore, that if my friend from Louisiana should succeed in securing the adoption of the proposition which he has reported as the judgment of his committee in favor of dividing these appropriations, he will strike down the very object which it is his intention to promote, and will render it impossible to go on with the expenditure of the millions which we have appropriated in the past for improving the navigation of the Mississippi River and its great tributaries.

This is the chief objection I have to the amendment—not simply because of the claim to jurisdiction. If it is the sense of the House that any other committee can better deal with the subject of appropriating to the improvement of the navigable waters of the country than the Committee on Commerce, let the subject-matter be referred to another committee. But whatever committee takes it, let it take the whole subject. Otherwise you defeat, in my judgment, all hopes of future improvements upon navigable waters, all hopes of promoting security and cheapness of transportation and reducing the cost of insurance.

This is all I desire to say upon that point now. My eloquent friend from Mississippi urges the taking away of this much of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Commerce, on the ground that it will relieve the country from having money appropriated for the improvement of "dry creeks and spring branches;" that it will relieve the country from the selfishness, the corruption, and the weakness of the Committee on Commerce. I am sorry I do not see my friend in his seat, for I wanted to say, and I would rather have said it in his presence, that it may be a misfortune of the country that the Committee on Commerce does not enjoy the association of one so able, so earnest, so honest as himself.

It may be a misfortune the members of that committee have not the integrity, have not the virtue, have not the honesty to report a fair and just river and harbor bill. It may be a misfortune of the country we report bills to improve "dry creeks and spring branches." I had heard something of this before. I confess, when a member rises on this floor and uses language like that, I must be allowed to indulge a feeling of astonishment as well as the expression of my regret. What dry creek has ever been appropriated for? What spring branch has ever been appropriated for? What member of this House, respecting himself, can make such an assertion on this floor? I say respecting himself, in reference to whether he should respect the men assailed or not. I have explained all this before, repeatedly, that the Committee on Commerce, since I have been on the committee, have never made an appropriation that was not for the improvement of waters navigable by steam-vessels. It never made an appropriation which was not made pursuant to survey and estimates by the Engineer Corps of the United States and under the authority of the recommendation of the Engineer Corps.

Why, then, should gentlemen attempt to belittle a committee of this House or attempt to degrade the action of the House in making such an assertion so utterly unsustained by any solitary fact, so utterly at variance with the truth? Is there not enough in these questions to enable us to act on principles of common fairness and justness when we come to deal with them, and to deal with our adversaries as if they were disposed to do right and to deal justly with the country?

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CHALMERS] took a further objection, and it was the same taken by my friend from Virginia [Mr. CABELL] in advocating the claim of the Committee on Railways and Canals on this subject, that the original jurisdiction of the Committee on Commerce was over the foreign commerce of the country and not intended to embrace the right to report appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors. Why, sir, we are not discussing the past rules of the House, we are disposing of the report of the Committee on Rules which is before us, and we are to be governed by the adoption or rejection of the rules before us as to what jurisdiction we mean to give to each of the several committees of the House. But, sir, going behind them to the rules as they were, I submit my friends have greatly misunderstood the rules and the practice of the House when they assert that the Committee on Commerce has in any instance unjustly or improperly usurped power over this or any other subject. I assert it has acted under the rules of the House and according to the practice of the House at all times. I assert that its practice of reporting under the authority of this House bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors commenced in the year 1816. Among the first bills ever acted on by Congress on this subject and passed into laws were those reported by the Committee on Commerce. It continued for several years to be the exclusive committee which reported bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors. Subsequently, and for a time, the Committee of Ways and Means reported a few bills, but all of them only aggregated about $7,000,000 of appropriations. From 1854 to now the Committee of Ways and Means has never reported any such bill. From then until now the Committee on Commerce has made the recommendation and reported upon all the bills which have passed coming down through all the years since then. Upon these reports more than $60,000,000 have been appropriated.

It is true, sir, that under the rule creating the Committee on Railways and Canals in 1831 there is an expression which would give the jurisdiction of rivers and harbors to that committee; but from the fact that the rule was so shaped on the concurrent and simultaneous practice of the House under the power to regulate commerce, the Committee on Commerce continued to make appropriations which ought to have been satisfactory as to the purpose of the House and have exonerated the Committee on Commerce from any unjust usurpation.

Mr. CABELL. May I ask my friend from Texas a question?

Mr. REAGAN. Certainly.

Mr. CABELL. Is it not true that for seven years after the adoption of that ninety-fourth rule no bill for the improvement of rivers was brought here by the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. REAGAN. Nor by any other committee.

Mr. CABELL. Wait a moment. From 1841 for seven years following did not the Committee on Railways and Canals offer to the House bills for the improvement of rivers, which bills were referred to the Committee of Ways and Means just as the bills from the Committee on Commerce were referred to that committee? I am speaking of the bills which passed into laws; and the Journal does not show that any bill reported by the Committee on Roads and Canals ever passed into a law.

Mr. REAGAN. But, sir, I would call the attention of the committee to the fact that about thirty or thirty-two years ago a very full debate took place in the old Hall of the House in which the Committee of Ways and Means, the Committee on Roads and Canals, and the Committee on Commerce contended for the right to control this bill. The result of a full debate upon the subject was that the Committee on Commerce was charged with the duty of reporting the bill to the House; and this was the solemn judgment of the House after full debate and hearing the claims of the several committees. It is true also that the chairman of the Committee on Roads and Canals in the Forty-fourth Congress claimed jurisdiction of the subject, and the then Speaker of the House decided that the matter properly belonged to that committee; and from this decision there was no appeal. It is true also that in the Forty-fifth Congress the Committee on Roads and Canals made a report claiming jurisdiction of this bill, and after full debate it was the judgment of the House that the Committee on Commerce shall have the control of this bill.

Mr. KING addressed the committee. [His remarks will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to make any remarks on the amendment proposed, supposing the representative of our committee, who had been delegated for the purpose, would present to the House such reasons as would influence perhaps its mind to vote in favor of the amendment. There is one thing very certain, and that is, that this committee which we represent occupies an abnormal position in its relations to the system of rules which has been devised by the Committee on Rules for the government of the action of this House. In all respects it seems to be admitted by the new theory of the rules that appropriations shall go only to the Committee on Appropriations; that one committee shall have exclusive and entire supervision of the appropriations made by this House for all public purposes whatsoever. It is claimed by the Committee on Commerce that it should have exclusive jurisdiction of all such appropriations as may be necessary for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of the country.

And I infer from the support which that committee has received in the progress of this debate, that the committee will triumph when it comes to a vote on that proposition. In the event of such triumph the committee which I have the honor in part to speak for will be left in a worse predicament than it would be by the new system of rules. As it is proposed by the new system of rules, every committee which desires an appropriation and whose duty it is to consider the subject of such appropriation has to come cap in hand before the Committee on Appropriations and demand what it may need for the special branch of the service which it represents. In the event of the adoption of these rules, with the change suggested by the Committee on Commerce, the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River will have to suggest such an amount as it deems necessary for the improvement of that river and for the improvement of the levees, and then come cap in hand to the Committee on Commerce and that committee will recommend to the Committee on Appropriations the amount it should have. It is thus degraded to a third place and will have no opportunity or no standing on the floor of the House to advocate its purposes, but will simply require to advocate those measures and propositions before the Committee on Commerce. This is an unenviable attitude for any committee to occupy. Even to be only ancillary to that august body the Committee on Appropriations is a position against which many members of this House have during the progress of this debate pitted themselves. It is one which the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and the other committees representing the various branches of the service have opposed, because they believe that in advocating appropriations for the particular branch of the service which they represent they should be heard upon the floor of the House.

I think myself that debate should be distributed among a larger number than it is now limited to. That is a privilege which is now held by the aristocracy upon the floor of this House; an aristocracy not by virtue of blood, but by the creation of the rules and the appointment of the Speaker. I agree in the sentiment which has been so ably advocated by many gentlemen that the right to present such arguments as they may deem proper and influential should reside in those committees, and that they should have the right to present those arguments upon the floor of the House. I therefore heartily favor the amendment suggested by my colleague, [Mr. SHALLENBERGER,] and so ably advocated by him. The amendment suggested by the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Levees is in harmony with the proposition contained in the amendment of my colleague. It is that that particular committee which has jurisdiction of the Mississippi River should have in addition thereto jurisdiction of its navigable tributaries, and that the committee should suggest directly to the House the amount of money needed for the purpose of improving the navigation of that river and its navigable tributaries. Now, why should not this power be lodged in that committee? The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] suggests that if adopted it will defeat appropriations for the many rivers and harbors of the country. The implication of that argument is that there will not or cannot be such merit per se in the proposition which comes from the Committee for the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Tributaries, and for the separate propositions which would come from the Committee on Commerce for the improvement of the lakes and the harbors as would commend them to the judgment of this House.

The suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce implies that it is necessary to effect a combination of some sort in order to secure the appropriations for rivers and harbors. If it be necessary to effect a combination, then I say that the charge made by my colleague on the committee that the Committee on Commerce must resort to means not altogether commendable must prevail. I take it that if the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River presents to this House a measure for the improvement of that river and for the improvement of its navigable tributaries which is on its face a righteous, just, and proper measure, this House will sustain it. If it is not such a measure it ought to be voted down. And I take it that it does not need the aid of the Committee on Appropriations at the outset to enable this House to vote intelligently on a proposition for the improvement of the rivers of the country. I say, therefore, that when the gentleman from Texas opposes, as he does, the proposition to take away from his committee the power now lodged in it, and when he assigns as a reason for not taking away that power the fact that appropriations will not be made for the improvement of the rivers of the country if it be taken away, he admits that there must be some arrangement, some understanding, some log-rolling operation which secures appropriations, and that these measures do not depend on their inherent merit.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that the power asked to be conferred on the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River by the amendment proposed by its chairman ought either to be conferred upon the committee or the committee ought to be abolished. One of two things ought to be done. The committee should have functions, and perform those functions, or it should be put in the limbo of past things, and not exist merely in name. And it exists merely in name unless you confer upon it some authority to carry out the measures which its own judgment may suggest, or which the commission appointed under the auspices of that committee may devise for the improvement of the river. This power it should have, or else the committee should be deprived of existence altogether. And I take it, if this power be conferred upon the committee, the danger apprehended by the chairman of the Committee on Commerce will not be realized at all. It is the policy of the Government, recognized and approved by the people of the United States, that the natural highways of the country should be improved, and that money should be expended for their improvement. That policy has grown in favor so that it now commends itself to the judgment of nearly all the people of the country. There existed in the past, as we all know, in the minds of a respectable party in this country the idea that expenditures of that sort were at variance with the Constitution, and consequently should not be made. It is now recognized, however, that such expenditures are proper, and the most strict constructionist of the Constitution is now willing to come in and obtain the largest possible appropriation for the rivers and harbors that border on his district. It is generally conceded now, I believe, that wherever in this country there is a navigable stream, money should be appropriated for the improvement of that stream if needed.

Now, sir, look at the condition of the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River. The Ohio River, which runs from Pittsburgh to the Mississippi River, bears upon its bosom an immense amount of commerce. Yet it is not ordinarily in nearly so navigable a condition as the Mississippi River. Indeed it is only periodically that the Ohio is in a navigable condition, while, for certain kinds of heavy craft, as I understand it, the Mississippi River is navigable at all seasons of the year, with the exception now and then of a very brief period, for all kinds.

Congress has authorized the appointment by the President of a commission to survey the Mississippi River, to ascertain its depth, to ascertain the character and quality of the soil at the bottom of its bed; to ascertain and recommend what plans, if any, should be adopted for the improvement of the navigation of that river. The proposition for that commission came from our committee, and the commission is now acting. Distinguished engineers are at the head of it and we may expect it soon to report. It will perhaps say that so much money is needed, and that if so much more money shall be appropriated for the improvement of the navigation of the Ohio River, it would also improve the navigation of the Mississippi River; because, as I understand, by the new system of dams that is now obtaining in this country and has obtained for some time in Europe, the economy of water, the saving of the water, is the most important factor presented by that system. By the economy of water in the navigation of the Ohio River, which will be had by the adoption of the new system of dams, the navigation of the Mississippi River will also be improved. It is important that the Ohio should be navigable at the same time with the Mississippi, in order that there may be an uninterrupted flow of commerce from the head of the Ohio River to the mouth of the Mississippi. All these suggestions will come in here, and we will be asked to approve the action of this commission, to appropriate money, and perhaps to vote more money for the extension of the commission. All these things will come before us under the auspices of our committee; and yet the committee which suggested these things, and from which these propositions should properly emanate, will have no voice in pressing the appropriation of money for the improvement of this vast system of rivers. The Mississippi and its navigable tributaries constitute substantially the natural highways of the inland commerce of the country. These rivers are by nature parts of one system whose integrity should not be broken. It reaches out in all directions and invites the enjoyment of its benefits. Whatever affects a part of this system affects the whole. The most remote navigable tributaries, if improved, will swell the tide of commerce. The study of the wants of any part involves the contemplation of the whole. It seems to me, therefore, the most reasonable and proper thing in the world to place the consideration of this subject in the hands of one committee. This end will be accomplished by the adoption of the amendment we propose.

I hope, therefore, the House will sustain this amendment, and I hope it will also sustain the amendment of my colleague, [Mr. SHALLENBERGER.] In the distribution of the moneys of the people, it is proper that the whole matter should be brought to the eye of a common committee for revision at last. I believe that is necessary to the preservation of the public Treasury. But while I advocate that, I believe also that the question of examining the interests of the people, of their commerce, of the improvement of the rivers, should be distributed among the various committees of the House, so that each one of them shall have an opportunity of advocating its measure and submitting to Congress the appropriation of such an amount of money as may be necessary to accomplish the object.

I now yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HARRIS,] my colleague on the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and its Levees.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I had not intended, Mr. Chairman, to participate in this debate at any time. But I am prompted now to call the attention of this House to the fact that it has determined to create a new committee for the purpose of ascertaining if possible what ought to be the future policy of this country with respect to the navigation of the Mississippi River and its tributaries.

You have committed to that committee the great question of whether that river can be controlled in time of floods so as to be safely navigable, and also whether it can be made navigable in times of low water. These are problems to be settled which will require the assistance of the ablest minds of this country. The committee is charged with the duty of hearing and investigating the subject, and of coming at last into this House, I suppose, to report the result of its investigation.

It seems to me that such a committee as this should at some time have the power to say whether the true policy of the Government requires that special appropriations shall be made for this purpose. But as the rules now stand that committee with its important duties must lay its conclusions at the feet of the Committee on Appropriations. Nay more, in order to be successful it must instruct that committee and teach it what it has itself learned before there can be any hope of an appropriation for the improvement of that great river.

I speak, Mr. Chairman, from an experience of now nearly seven years in this House, first on the Committee on Indian Affairs, where I learned how utterly powerless was that committee to control or to guide or even to point out the policy which this Government should adopt in the management of Indian affairs.

For nearly five years now I have served—faithfully, I trust—upon the Committee on Naval Affairs. And I am to-day convinced that that committee, important as it is, is utterly without power upon this floor. With one hundred and forty-two vessels in the Navy, thirty-three of which are rotten and worthless, twenty-seven of which are mere tugs and good for nothing in time of war, and only forty-two ships of war, beside iron-clads, which can go to sea and serve as vessels of war, yet Congress refuses to appropriate one dollar to build up the Navy. The Committee on Naval Affairs may come to the conclusion that the safety of the country requires the construction this year of ten new ships of war. We may come in with our bill proposing that this work be done; but if our bill becomes a law we must wait until next year before an appropriation can be obtained for the purpose, no matter what the exigencies of the country may be.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the time has arrived when these various committees should have power to come in here and be heard at any time with their bills recommending what the future policy of the country should be upon such questions as naval affairs, military affairs, and Indian affairs. I maintain that the Committee on Naval Affairs of this House as now constituted (and I make no apology for the remark) is as competent to come into this House and say what ought to be the policy of the Government on naval subjects as is the able Committee on Appropriations. If I have the opportunity I shall vote for the amendments which have been proposed here distributing the powers of this House among the committees charged with the especial consideration of the national policy upon these several subjects. Without trespassing further upon the time of the House, I will conclude with the remark that if this great committee on the Mississippi River is to be useful to the country, it should be clothed with the right to be heard when the time arrives for it to make its report.

Mr. BAYNE. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut will have eighteen minutes.

Mr. HAWLEY addressed the committee. [His remarks will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, Mr. Chairman, I do not pretend to be a good parliamentarian, and my knowlege of the rules of the House comes from experience; and sometimes it has been an unpleasant experience, especially when I have been tripped by their operation when charged with matters under consideration. The object of rules is to facilitate the business of the House, to get the best action possible in the least time, and I am satisfied the rules reported by the committee are a very decided improvement upon the present rules. If in nothing else, a number of obsolete rules are dropped out, and there is order and consistency in the codification where now there is disorder and inconsistency; and while in some respects, if I had power to adopt rules governing the House, I would amend the proposed rules, yet I will cheerfully vote for the adoption of the report of the committee as a whole, even in event no amendments are made.

It is impossible for any one member to master all the business of the House; indeed, but few members can answer the many drafts upon their time by constituents and master the business of any one committee of the House. Therefore the House is divided into committees, to which the business of the House is referred for preparation, report, and action, and every facility should be given to the committees to report and to the House to consider the reports.

Under the present rules committees report in the morning hour for consideration, and it is no uncommon thing for a single report to be locked up in the morning hour for days, and even weeks. In the mean time no other committee can report, except privileged matters. Under the operation of clause 2, Rule XXIV, and Rule XIII of the codification this is remedied, so that every committee can report almost daily, and the bill is printed with the report and placed upon a calendar for consideration by the House whenever a majority shall desire. I feel quite sure the operation of these two rules will, to a very great extent, counteract the tendency to legislate upon appropriation bills by enabling the committees to promptly bring their reports before the House for consideration. Clause 7 of Rule XI, which requires the Committee on Commerce to report the river and harbor bill for reference to the Committee on Appropriations, has given rise to much discussion, and in some instances an exhibition of temper.

In my opinion, it makes but little difference whether it is adopted or not, for the reason that the practice has grown up to pass the river and harbor bill under a suspension of the rules by a two-thirds vote, and if this clause is adopted I am satisfied the rules would be suspended, including clause 7, and the bill passed as heretofore, so that to my mind it makes no practical difference whether the provision requiring the river and harbor bill to be reported for reference to the Committee on Appropriations is adopted or rejected.

I now desire to address myself to the proposed amendments to Rule XI made by the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. HOOKER,] which in effect takes from the Committee on Appropriations subjects relating to the appropriation of the revenues, and refers them to a number of committees; or, in other words, enables the Committee on Military Affairs to report the general Army appropriation bill, the Committee on Naval Affairs the general naval appropriation bill, &c., thereby making some seven or eight appropriation committees instead of one Committee on Appropriations.

I have no personal feeling as to this matter, and in my votes shall only seek to adopt those rules that will facilitate the public business and subserve the public welfare. I do not believe the amendments of the gentleman from Mississippi should be adopted; for the reason, among others, that each matter of legislation should stand for consideration and passage upon its own merits. If you group many matters of legislation in an omnibus bill, the meritorious measures frequently drag through the objectionable and vicious measure, and this is especially the case where matters of general or special legislation are hitched to one of the general money bills. The general appropriations must be made or the Government stops, and the practical result of the gentleman's amendment, if adopted, would be that all matters of legislation for any one session touching the Army would become a law in connection with and upon the Army appropriation bill; and all matters of legislation touching the Post-Office would become a law in connection with and upon the Post-Office appropriation bill, and so with the bills from the other committees. Such proceeding, in my judgment, would result in unwise and vicious legislation.

In theory and practice the appropriations of moneys for the support of the Government should be made in pursuance of existing law, and no legislation whatever changing existing law should be in order upon a general appropriation bill. I am satisfied that much of the dissatisfaction with the Committee on Appropriations arises from the amendment to Rule 120, which makes in order a provision changing existing law upon a general money bill if it shall retrench expenditures, under which the practice is gradually growing up to admit almost unlimited legislation changing existing law upon a general money bill. This provision of Rule 120 is retained in the new rules as proposed by the committee in the latter part of clause 3, Rule XXI, and in my opinion should be stricken out.

Mr. ACKLEN. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question just there?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. With pleasure.

Mr. ACKLEN. Does the gentleman propose to strike out the words "nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures?"

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. No, sir; what I propose to strike out are the words "except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures."

So that no legislation should be in order upon appropriation bills in the first instance.

Mr. ACKLEN. Right there I would like to know if it would not be in order to increase the salaries.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Not at all; and if there be any doubt about that proposition we can provide for it by an amendment. I desire legislation of no kind upon appropriation bills.

Mr. ACKLEN. Will the gentleman allow me to read to him, as he says there can be no doubt about it, what is the decision in the Digest on that very point?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I will save the gentleman the trouble of reading the decision referred to in the Digest. I understand that there was a former ruling made in the House, under this rule before it was amended, that in certain cases legislation that looked toward an increase of salaries was in order. Now, I do not believe that ruling was a good one. But whether it was good or not, I would cut up by the roots that kind of legislation as well as all other kinds. In other words, I would have no legislation of any kind upon a general appropriation bill, as it passes the House in the first instance, changing existing law.

Mr. ACKLEN. The gentleman could not obtain that by the amendment he proposes; and it was to that point I desired to call his attention. The ruling was different in the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Congresses.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I am not discussing this question except as a general matter of policy. Whether or no my amendment is a good one to attain the object desired is another thing. I think it is. But when we come to consider this matter under the five-minute rule, if I am not apt in my amendment I know that my friend from Louisiana will be.

This provision was added in the Forty-fourth Congress. I recollect in the Forty-third Congress that very little legislation changing existing law was put on the general money bills in the first instance, and when it was done it was by a suspension of the rules on a two-thirds vote, making it in order. The result was that the other committees of the House were vigilant, and reported legislation, which was considered and passed by the House. It is true that in many instances the Senate would take such House bills, and with or without amendment, as a matter of convenience, amend the general money bills by attaching them thereto, and in that way such legislation was had on money bills, but, in fact, ordinarily the legislation changing existing law on money bills was first reported from the appropriate committees in the House, and passed as a separate measure. I am satisfied that we should return to the former practice at once.

Mr. Chairman, a stranger listening to the debates for the last few days upon the rules would suppose that the committees of the House of Representatives were supreme and the House a mere sideshow, a useless appendage to the committees; especially have many gentlemen been severe upon the Committee on Appropriations.

Now the House is supreme, and the committees are the mere servants of the House to prepare and report measures for the consideration of the House under the rules, and this much-abused Committee on Appropriations in reporting and recommending measures for the consideration of the House is exercising the privileges of the House and in no sense exercising its own privileges, and there is no time from the moment a bill is reported by that committee to the House until it is passed that it is not at every step under the absolute and unconditional control of a majority of the House or Committee of the Whole, and it is in the province of a majority of the House to refuse to order the previous question and take the bill from the management of the committee at its pleasure, and I fail to see the propriety or correctness of attacks that are constantly being made upon the committee in this respect.

The committee is charged with grave responsibilities. It is required under the rules to report annually general money bills appropriating almost $200,000,000 for the public service; it must defend the bills as reported and antagonize individual members in amendments offered whose constituents have special interests to be promoted, make points of order upon and otherwise antagonize amendments that are not in the line of public policy or would unduly swell the aggregate of the appropriations. In all this it is but the instrument in executing the will of the House; and it is no uncommon thing for individual members, smarting under what appears to them unmerited defeat in some pet project, to curse the Committee on Appropriations instead of the House for the failure, to smite the instrument instead of strike at the House which uses it. I know how it is myself, for I have frequently been sat down upon in this way by the House through the Committee on Appropriations.

But it is said that the committees to whom these general money bills are to be given over have nothing to do, and they would do the work better than it is now done. I have before stated why I think it bad policy to give the committees this additional jurisdiction, and now want to add, there is no one of the seven or eight committees that it is proposed to make into appropriation committees but has more now to do in maturing and recommending general legislation than they can or do accomplish. Indeed, I am satisfied that you may take the thirty-seven or thirty-eight other committees that are not charged with the preparation of these money bills by the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi and almost all of them are or will be extremely busy if they will exhaust the business that is referred to them under the rules of the House.

Mr. ROBESON obtained the floor, and yielded to

Mr. SHELLEY, who moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CARLISLE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the report of the Committee on Rules on the subject of the proposed revision of the rules, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 3108) amending the charter of the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of the District of Columbia.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, and requested the concurrence of the House in, bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. No. 52) for the relief of John N. Reed; and

A bill (S. No. 298) for the relief of Van. B. Bowers.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 3034) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Macon, Georgia, and to transfer certain counties from the northern to the southern district in said State.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN OHIO.

Mr. CONVERSE. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table, for non-concurrence in amendments of the Senate, the bill (H. R. No. 582) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Columbus, Ohio, and transferring certain counties from the northern to the southern district in said State.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table; and the Clerk was proceeding to read the amendments, when

Mr. CONVERSE said: I move that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate and ask a conference with that body on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHELLEY. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair requests the gentleman to withdraw that motion for a moment, that he may lay before the House for reference various executive documents which ought to go to committees at once.

Mr. SHELLEY. I withdraw the motion for that purpose.

GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS—NEW YORK HARBOR, AND COLUMBUS, OHIO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the construction of additional buildings at David's Island, New York Harbor, and Columbus Barracks, Ohio; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SUPERINTENDENT OF FREE-DELIVERY SYSTEM.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Postmaster-General, relative to the salary of the superintendent of the free-delivery system; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

R. H. THURSTON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a request for an appropriation to pay R. H. Thurston for services as secretary of the board appointed to test iron, steel, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

HARBOR AT ROCKY RIVER, OHIO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the harbor at Rocky River, Ohio; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

HARBOR AT PETERSBURGH, VIRGINIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the improvement of the harbor at Petersburgh, Virginia; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL M. BLAIR.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting papers relative to the claim of Samuel M. Blair; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

LOUISVILLE AND PORTLAND CANAL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report on the superintendence, management, and repair of the Louisville and Portland Canal; which was referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

IMPROVEMENT OF GREAT KANAWHA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the improvement of the Great Kanawha; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM WILLIAMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a petition of Ordnance-Sergeant William Williams to be placed on the retired list; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED SOLDIERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the annual report of the board of managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT AND NEW YORK CLEARING-HOUSE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, in reply to a resolution of the House calling for information as to when and under what authority the United States became a member of the New York clearing-house; which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with law, a schedule of claims certified to be due by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, with authority to have the same printed should the committee deem it necessary.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BERRY, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

RULES AND ARTICLES OF WAR.

On motion of Mr. WHITE, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 744) to amend article 103 of the Rules and Articles of War was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

INFRINGEMENT OF PATENTS.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3767) to regulate practice in suits brought to recover damages for infringement of patents; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and ordered to be printed.

SURVEY OF BAYOU BARTHOLOMEW.

Mr. KING, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3768) providing for the survey of Bayou Bartholomew, Louisiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

TIME-BALLS ON CUSTOM-HOUSES.

Mr. KING also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3769) to provide for placing time-balls on custom-houses at ports of entry and other cities, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

INTEROCEANIC SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. KING also, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the Joint Committee on Printing be, and is hereby, instructed to inquire into and report to this House upon the expediency of printing one thousand copies of the various reports of explorations and surveys made for the purpose of ascertaining a suitable route for the construction of a ship-canal across the American isthmus, to wit: the reports of Commodore Shufeldt, of the Tehuantepec route; of Commander E. P. Lull, of the Nicaraguan and Panama routes, and of Commodore Selfridge and Lieutenant Collins, of the Napipi route, and such other surveys as may have been made by the Government for a like purpose, as also of the report of the commission appointed in 1872, for the information of Congress touching the various routes proposed.

IMPROVEMENT OF OUACHITA RIVER.

Mr. KING also, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested and directed to furnish to this House a statement showing the amount of appropriations made within the past ten years for the surveys and improvement of the Ouachita River, what amount has been expended, and in what manner and for what purposes these expenditures have been made.

HOMESTEAD SETTLERS.

Mr. LEWIS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3770) for the relief of homestead settlers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

SURVEY OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. BRENTS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3771) to amend section 9 of an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to create the office of surveyor-general of the public lands in Oregon, and to provide for the survey and to make donations to the settlers of the said public lands,' approved September 27, 1850," which said act was approved February 14, 1853; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Then, on motion of Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware, (at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

By Mr. ANDERSON: The petition of ex-soldiers of the United States of Marshall County, Kansas, against the passage of Senate bill No. 496, relating to pension claims—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ATKINS: The petition of Mrs. J. B. Long, for pay for property taken and used by the United States Army during the late war—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BLAKE: The petition of the Grand Temple of Honor and Temperance of New Jersey, for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic—to the Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 22, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HAMLIN. I present the petition of Thomas J. Stewart and others, citizens of Bangor, Maine, who represent that they are interested in the balance of the Geneva award fund, and praying that some bill be passed during the present session for the distribution of the money remaining of said fund. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I present another and like petition, signed by Phineas Pendleton and others, citizens of Searsport, in the State of Maine. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and I want to express again my hope that we may have a report from the committee at as early a day as possible. Whatever that report may be, if we can have the subject before the Senate in time for the Senate to consider it and for Congress to come to a conclusion, we shall be doing but an act of justice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JONAS presented the petition of the Grand Temple of Honor and Temperance of the State of Louisiana, officially signed, representing ninety-five members, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GROOME presented the petition of the Grand Temple of Honor and Temperance of Maryland and the District of Columbia, officially signed, representing between two hundred and three hundred members, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WALLACE presented the memorial of William Lyons and others, citizens of Pennsylvania and soldiers in the late war, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of A. W. Raymond and others, citizens of Pennsylvania and soldiers in the late war, praying for the passage of a law for the equalization of bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. INGALLS presented the memorial of John W. Ellsworth and others, citizens of Kansas and soldiers in the late war, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of George L. Turner and others, citizens of Kansas and soldiers in the late war, praying for the passage of a law for the equalization of bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 83) donating condemned cannon to the Morton Monumental Association, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. No. 55) granting a right of way across Water Shops Pond, in Springfield, Massachusetts, to the Springfield and New London Railroad Company;

A bill (H. R. No. 2053) authorizing the assistant treasurer of the United States at New York to waive the enforcement of section 3477 of the Revised Statutes so far as the same affects certain drafts upon him now held by the Masonic Bank of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania;

A bill (H. R. No. 3518) authorizing the importation of articles for exhibition at the millers' international exhibition, to be held at Cincinnati in 1880, free of duty; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2790) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint a deputy collector at Seaford, Sussex County, Delaware, and for other purposes.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WALLACE, from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 523) for the relief of Charles H. Nicholls, late superintendent of the Government Hospital for the Insane, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WALLACE. I am also directed by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, to whom were referred the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. No. 19) to provide for the publication and distribution of a supplement to the Revised Statutes, to recommend concurrence in the amendments of the House with amendments. I ask that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Fifty cents a copy is a pretty heavy charge on the consumer.

Mr. WALLACE. The committee recommend paying to the reviser a specific sum for his copyright, and for the indexing and clerical work, and the Government shall then have it. The joint resolution provides that the Secretary of State shall make a pro rata distribution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution with the amendments?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rather think it had better be printed as now proposed to be amended. It can be taken up to-morrow. There are amendments to the House amendments, I understand.

Mr. WALLACE. Very well. I move that the amendments of the Senate committee be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am in favor of the general proposition, most decidedly.

Mr. GROOME, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 996) for the relief of Monroe Donoho, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 715) for the relief of N. Boyden, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. VOORHEES, from the Committee on the Library, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. No. 1117) to provide additional accommodations for the Library of Congress; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. GORDON, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom were referred the bill (S. No. 836) directing the removal of obstructions from the harbor at the Delaware breakwater, and the bill (S. No. 493) directing the removal of obstructions from the harbor at the Delaware breakwater, reported that the bills ought not to pass, the subject having been provided for by a measure already passed; and the bills were postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of William Collins, of Waldo, Maine, praying payment of certain moneys alleged to be due him as bounty for services on the schooner Sarah Franklin, employed in the cod-fishery in the year 1866, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 420) for the relief of George H. Plant, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1075) to authorize Dr. Daniel M. Appel, of the United States Army, to receive pay for discharging the duties of physician to the Mescalero Apache Indian agency, New Mexico, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. WHYTE, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 887) to authorize printing at the Government Printing Office for members of Congress, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

PRINTING FOR THE LAND COMMISSION.

Mr. WHYTE. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back favorably the joint resolution (H. R. No. 145) authorizing certain printing for the land commission, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It authorizes the Public Printer to print, upon requisition of the chairman of the public land commission, created by the act of March 3, 1879, for the purpose of codifying the laws relating to the public lands, and for other purposes, such letters, testimony, and documents as may be necessary for the performance of the duties prescribed for the commission. The cost of such printing is not to exceed $2,000, and the number of copies printed of the letters, testimony, and documents is not to exceed two hundred.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SIGNAL OFFICE REPORT.

Mr. WHYTE. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back favorably, with an amendment, the joint resolution (S. R. No. 56) authorizing the printing and binding of additional copies of the report of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Printing was, in line 4, to strike out "ten" before "thousand" and insert "five;" so as to make the joint resolution read:

That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized to print and bind, for the use of the Signal Office, 5,000 additional copies of the annual report of the Chief Signal Officer for the year 1879; and the Public Printer is authorized to contract for the illustrations with the person now furnishing the illustrations for the congressional edition.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, (by request,) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1101) for the relief of Charles W. Foulke; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1102) for the relief of Jacob Dundore; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PADDOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1103) for the relief of Manly B. McNilt; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. SLATER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1104) for the relief of certain parties on account of labor, material, and money furnished in the construction of the revenue-cutter Thomas Corwin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MCMILLAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1105) to protect and promote the naviga-bility of the navigable rivers of the United States, and to prevent the deposit of sawdust or other material in said rivers to the injury of navigation, and to punish persons guilty of depositing such material therein; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SLATER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1106) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Willamette River between the city of Portland and the city of East Portland, in Multnomah County, State of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CALL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1107) to authorize the State of Florida to incorporate the agricultural college and seminary fund donated by Congress with the common-school fund of the State; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CALL. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MORRILL. I think the bill should be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. CALL. I moved the reference of the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary on the ground that it involves a question of law, whether it is competent to have such legislation as the bill provides. I think it would be necessary to be examined in that point of view by the Committee on the Judiciary at some stage of the proceeding.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not object to its being referred to the Committee on the Judiciary from any apprehension of the results that may be arrived at; but it is a proposition that, it seems to me, naturally belongs to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont make a motion?

Mr. MORRILL. I will move to have the bill referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The question being put, a division was called for; and the ayes were 11——

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CALL. Before the question is voted on I will state the reason why I moved the reference of the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

An act of Congress provided for the donation of certain quantities of land to the State of Florida for certain educational purposes. One of those purposes was that there should be established two seminaries of education in the State—one in East and the other in West Florida. By an act of the Legislature of Florida, passed many years ago, the act of Congress was sought to be carried into effect. Recently the Legislature of the State made a request by resolution that a bill should be introduced into Congress asking the consent of Congress to another and a different direction of the fund.

A question of vested rights arises between the two seminaries, which were located and have for many years been in operation in the State, and the action now sought by the State and carried into effect by the bill which I have just introduced in pursuance of the resolution of the Legislature of the State. I am myself of opinion that it is entirely incompetent for Congress to pass an act of this description and give away rights which have become vested in particular individuals and bodies of men under an act of Congress providing for such direction years ago; and in order that this question of law——

Mr. MORRILL. If the Senator will permit me, I did not understand the scope of the proposition contained in the bill from hearing the title of it read. I withdraw my motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the yeas and nays having been ordered, the motion will be considered withdrawn, and the bill referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KERNAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1108) to provide for the further distribution of the moneys received under the Geneva award; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HEREFORD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1109) for the relief of Anthony Lawson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WINDOM (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1110) for the relief of the American Grocer Association of the city of New York; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1111) for the relief of George T. Marshall; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1112) to transfer the military reservation at Fort Ransom, Dakota Territory, to the custody and control of the Interior Department; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WITHERS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1113) granting a pension to Peter K. Morgan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1114) granting a pension to Luman Case; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WHYTE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1115) for the relief of William H. Rogers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. TELLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1116) to amend title 32, chapter 6, of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. GARLAND asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1118) for the relief of George S. Tramel; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1119) for the relief of Winfrey N. Swayne; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HOAR asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1120) for the relief of Mrs. Mary S. Porter; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FERRY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 67) to authorize the Secretary of War to sell or lease to the Port Huron and Northwestern Railway Company a portion of the Fort Gratiot military reserve, and to authorize the city of Port Huron to grant to said railway company the right of way through Pine Grove Park; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. WITHERS, it was Ordered, That the papers in the claim of John S. Worthington, of Fairfax County Virginia, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Ordered, That the papers in the claims of Methodist Episcopal churches of Arlington, Falls Church, Fairfax Court House, Dumfries, and Mount Crawford, in Virginia, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. GROOME, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the claim of Clement D. Hill be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. WHYTE, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw the petition of Elizabeth Joins, widow of John Joins, late a sailmaker in the United States Navy, praying to be allowed a pension.

CONTRACTS FOR INDIAN SUPPLIES.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to introduce a resolution this morning and to ask for its immediate consideration. I also wish to give the reasons, in a few words, why I present it.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate whether at any time since March 4, 1877, any contract to furnish Indian supplies of any kind or character has been made with any member of the board of Indian commissioners, or with any firm or corporation with which any member of said board was at that time connected or interested in, and if any such contract was made, with whom it was made, at what time, and the terms of said contract.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to say that I do not by the resolution charge any member of the board of Indian commissioners with having received a contract for Indian supplies; but the charge has been made, it has gone out to the country, that this board, or at least some members of it, have had contracts for the furnishing of Indian supplies within the last two years. As by the statute it is made the special duty of this board to see that the contracts are properly made, and that the money which is appropriated by Congress shall be properly devoted to the purposes for which it is appropriated, it seems to me that such a charge made against this board is one that ought to be immediately investigated. It is impossible for any Senator to say whether there is truth in the charge or not. Therefore I call upon the proper authorities, who have the proof if any such contract has been made, to furnish us the proof, if any such exists. If there are no such contracts, if none such have been made, then the public ought to know that the charge is false which has been made against this board, who are designated in the statute as being men selected on account of their intelligence and philanthropy. I repeat, that I make no charge against the board; I am anxious to arrive at the truth in the matter.

The resolution was agreed to.

RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is instructed to furnish to the Senate such information as is contained in the books and papers of the Interior Department in answer to the following inquiries:

1. What grants of public lands made by acts of Congress to railroad companies, or to States or Territories in aid of such companies, remain incomplete by reason of the failure of the grantees or the beneficiaries to comply with the terms or conditions of such grants.

2. In cases, if any, where there has been a partial compliance with the terms or conditions of the grants, to what extent has there been such compliance, and to what extent is there a just cause for declaring the forfeiture of the grants; and what reasons of justice, equity, or of public faith or public policy are there why Congress should abstain from declaring a forfeiture of such grants in whole or in part?

3. In cases where the States or companies to which land grants have been made for the benefit of railroads and a just cause of forfeiture exists; where bona fide conveyances have been made to purchasers for value, what proportion, as near as may be, of the lands so granted, have been sold to such purchasers, and what further legislation, if any, is necessary to secure to such persons their full, equitable right to such lands.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 83) granting condemned cannon to the Morton Monumental Association, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The question being put, a division was called for; and the ayes were 30——

Mr. EATON. We may as well have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 30, nays 21; as follows:

UNITED STATES NOTES AS A LEGAL TENDER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired, and the order of the day is the joint resolution (S. R. No. 49) in relation to United States Treasury notes, which is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and on which the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, if a proposition were made now for the first time to issue Treasury notes with the legal-tender quality, or if it were proposed to increase the existing volume of such notes by a new issue, believing as I do that the Constitution of the United States confers upon Congress no power to make any character of paper, or to recognize any other than gold and silver money a tender for payment of private debt, I would unhesitatingly oppose it. But when it is proposed to strike down the legal-tender quality of the $346,000,000 of Government notes heretofore issued and now in circulation a different question is presented. Either of the two first propositions would involve a constitutional question which cannot arise in considering the latter. The power of Congress to provide for the issuance of the legal-tender notes now in circulation was fully debated and considered in 1862, when the first of the series of acts under which they were issued was passed. The action of the law-making power has been decided repeatedly by the Supreme Court of the United States and by the supreme courts of all the States to be in harmony with the Constitution, and the Treasury notes of the United States to be a lawful tender for private debt. These decisions by the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the Government, national and State, have been accepted by the country, and for nearly twenty years these notes have been almost the only currency in circulation among the people. No question of their constitutionality exists in the public mind, nor in any department of the Government, for the plain and sufficient reason that all questions of this sort have been conclusively settled by every tribunal in existence in this country, commencing with the great body of the American people and running through all the ramifications of their State and national governments, and are in every possible form res judicata.

It makes no difference that the "war powers" of the Government were invoked by these tribunals to sustain this issue of paper, nor that necessity in a great crisis constrained its sanction; it is none the less a fact that it has been sanctioned, and that fact is imbedded and concreted in the political, financial, and industrial history of the country.

Constitutional objections to the methods through which slavery was abolished, the Thirteenth, Fourteenth, and Fifteenth amendments were adopted, and to the manner in which West Virginia was erected into a separate State out of the territory of old Virginia, could as well be heard and would be no less absurd than similar objections to the original issuance of legal-tender notes. If it were admitted that it was originally unconstitutional, it is no more so than very many other infractions of the Constitution since 1862, through which changes have have been ingrafted on our Government, which have become so interwoven with the texture of our institutions that, with one accord, all men of all parties would denounce any attempt to reopen them for discussion and correction. None of these changes have been more thoroughly acquiesced in and accepted than that relating to the legal-tender Treasury notes now in circulation; none of them have more fully the sanction of prescription from lapse of time and official and popular acceptance, none of them have affected the great body of the people in their daily business affairs to a greater extent, and none of them would in its ultimate consequences bring greater detriment to the public interests if opened for readjustment, than will, in my judgment, ensue from a re-opening of this. The greenback legal-tender currency is one of the results of the war, and, whether rightfully or wrongfully created originally, is no more a legitimate subject of inquiry now than the other great fundamental facts evolved from that memorable struggle, of much more doubtful constitutional origin, but which are universally and rightfully accepted because accomplished. For one I will not single out this measure from the mass of changes which occurred during that period of social, industrial, and constitutional revolution for reconsideration, but will let that, as well as the others, rest where the upheaval left them, to be disturbed, if at all, by the Supreme Court. It is true we have peace now, but it is a peace freighted heavily with the burdens of war. Our great war debt, which hangs like a millstone around the necks of the people, must be paid. If this and other results of the war have surrounded the country with conditions which make it inexpedient and unwise to interfere with the currency made necessary by the stress of war, I hold it to be our plain duty to allow it to remain as it is. But, sir, there is a constitutional provision which protects the legal-tender notes from demonetization in the mode proposed, and expressly sanctions them as lawful money. They are a part of the public debt; the laws under which they were issued provided for their reissuance, with the legal-tender quality as originally issued, as fast as they should come into the Treasury. Every holder of one of these notes has the guarantee of the fourth section of the Fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, that "the validity of the public debt of the United States * * * shall not be questioned."

The public debt consists of various kinds of Government obligations. Bonds are one kind, some due at one time, some at another; some bearing one rate of interest and some another; some payable in coin and some in lawful money. United States notes are another variety of Government obligations, bearing no interest, no time fixed for their redemption or payment, and possessing the quality of being a legal tender in payment of all debt, public and private, except duties on imports. The Government in respect to bonds has bound itself to pay interest at a stated rate, at a stated time, and in a stated species of money. This obligation of the Government has, by the acceptance of the holders, become a contract, and the "validity" of this contract to pay the agreed interest at the agreed time and place, and in the agreed character of money to the holder, is the thing which under the constitutional amendment cannot be questioned; that is to say, the Government is not permitted to question the validity of any one of these stipulations, which in the aggregate constitute a valid debt or obligation. So of the United States notes: the Government agrees to pay the amount named in the note with no interest and at no stated time, but that the note shall be a legal tender at its face value in payment of all debts, public and private, except duties on imports. To destroy the legal-tender quality is of course to destroy one of the essential and therefore binding stipulations of the contract and invalidate so much of the "public debt," which is forbidden. As long as the note remains outstanding unpaid, the legal-tender quality inheres in it, because such is the contract between the holder and the Government, and its validity cannot be "questioned."

The stipulations as to the debt-paying power of these notes to be found in the law under which they were issued, and indorsed on the notes, are as binding upon the Government as are its obligations to the holders of bonds, and Congress can no more annul the legal-tender quality of the Treasury note than it can change the rate of interest or the time of payment of Government bonds. They are both contracts with the Government, both "public debt," and the validity of each in accordance with the terms of the respective contracts is prohibited, by the constitutional provision referred to, from being "questioned."

The Fourteenth amendment became a part of the Constitution on the 28th day of July, 1868, and that part of the "public debt" evidenced by the legal-tender notes of the United States was then in circulation as money, with all the money attributes it now possesses, and its validity with those attributes having been guaranteed by that amendment, it has unquestionably since been constitutional money if it had not been before, and will remain such until Congress shall see fit by law to order it in for redemption and retirement. Congress may, if deemed expedient, call in these notes, pay them, and reissue them without the legal-tender quality, but cannot demonetize them in the hands of the people unless after due notice and a reasonable time given they fail to bring them in for payment.

By its terms the resolution of the Senator from Delaware is to take effect "from and after" its passage, and, if adopted, at that instant, without giving notice to the people to bring these notes in for redemption, would destroy in their hands four-fifths of its power as money, would annul the stipulations of the contract between the holders and the Government, and, so far as congressional action could do it, would invalidate $346,000,000 of the public debt. It would, I respectfully submit, be an act of the most flagrant and indefensible bad faith, even if no constitutional provision were violated—such an act as, perpetrated on the holders of interest-bearing bonds, would produce a howl from Wall street that would reverberate from one end of the country to the other.

The legal-tender notes bear on their face—say one for $5—this inscription:

The United States will pay the bearer $5, Washington, D. C.
Legal-tender for $5.

And indorsed on its back, the following:

This note is a legal-tender at its face value for all debts, public and private, except duties on imports and interest on the public debt.

It is true that any holder of these notes to the amount of $50 could, since the 1st of January, 1879, have presented them at the national Treasury and had them redeemed in gold and silver, and a large amount have been so redeemed, but the law requires them "reissued and kept in circulation," and forbids their retirement and cancellation, so that the existing volume of $346,000,000 shall remain in circulation as money, thus continuing indefinitely the contract with the holders indorsed on the back and written across the face of the notes. Upon the faith of this declared policy of the Government these notes have become a rule of property, and a law of contracts throughout the length and breadth of the country for millions of people. Every contract in all the States and Territories of the Union is solvable in these notes, except the few which especially stipulate for coin, and a destruction of their debt-paying power will impair the obligation of all these contracts in gross violation of the constitutional rights of the people, and produce a shock in business affairs which will vibrate throughout the country. The States are forbidden by express constitutional provision to pass any law which impairs the obligation of contracts, a power to do which, without that prohibition, they would have possessed. There is no such prohibition upon the Federal Government, because it can exercise only the powers that are granted, and no power to impair the obligations of contracts is granted or can arise by implication out of any granted power, because contrary to natural justice and common honesty and unworthy of exercise by any enlightened government. The Government pledged its faith to redeem these notes in coin, but every act of Congress providing for their issuance also provided for their reissue.

The act of January 14, 1875, "to provide for the resumption of specie payments" intended to carry out the pledge of the Government and to be a final consummation of the policy of the Government in respect to them, was construed by the Secretary of the Treasury in connection with the acts under which the notes were issued to authorize their reissuance. The whole purpose of the Government has been, as its legislation will show, to bring these notes to par with coin, and to be able to redeem them, on the demand of the holder, in coin. Whatever may have been the intention at the inception of their issuance, there is not a line of legislation to show that they were regarded as a mere temporary expedient, but on the contrary, as they grew in popular favor, abundant evidence is found in all the legislation on the subject, of an intention, if not to perpetuate, at least to continue indefinitely in circulation such an amount of them as can be maintained at par with coin. As soon as the amount was reduced to this point through the process of funding, the act of May 31, 1878, the last act on this subject, was passed, which forbade the Secretary of the Treasury to cancel or retire them further, and required, like the first law under which legal-tender notes were issued in 1862, that as fast as they came into the Treasury they should be reissued and kept in circulation. On the 1st day of January, 1879, the quality of irredeemability which before that time had characterized these notes ceased to exist, and from that date each holder has had the right to present these notes and receive coin in exchange. As the result of the policy pursued, we have in circulation among the people $346,000,000 of Government notes with full legal-tender power, redeemable on demand in coin, and the gold and silver in the Treasury to redeem or maintain them at par, not only free from constitutional objection, but expressly sanctioned by the Fourteenth amendment as long as Congress shall deem it wise to allow them to remain in circulation—a currency which our people prefer to any other, because it is familiar to them, and they know it to be safe and sound, and the question we have to determine is whether we will destroy it or let it alone.

I am not troubled with any doubts in deciding this question for myself. My convictions are that the best interests of the country require that it be "let alone" where the policy of the Government, after nearly twenty years' experience, has left it, and where the country is satisfied with it.

The resolution of the honorable Senator from Delaware seems to contemplate the reissue and continued circulation of legal-tender notes after their demonetization, and the impression exists in the public mind that such will be the case. This is a great misapprehension.

The adoption of the resolution will as effectually destroy the entire volume of legal-tender notes, and eliminate them from our financial system, as would a law directing the Secretary of the Treasury to call them in, pay and burn them, as a very brief consideration of its operation will conclusively show. I read the resolution, and call attention to its language:

That from and after the passage of this resolution the Treasury notes of the United States shall be received for all dues to the United States, excepting duties on imports, and shall not be otherwise a legal-tender, and any of said notes hereafter reissued shall bear this superscription.

In order to exhibit the full operation of the resolution upon these notes I read from the act approved February 25, 1862, section 1, being the first act under which legal-tender notes were issued, to show the debt-paying qualities with which they were invested, as follows:

And such notes herein authorized shall be receivable in payment of all taxes, internal duties, excises, debts, and demands of every kind due to the United States except duties on imports, of all claims and demands against the United States of every kind whatsoever except for interest upon bonds and notes, which shall be paid in coin, and shall also be lawful money and a legal tender in payment of all debts public and private within the United States, except duties on imports and interest aforesaid.

It is clear that while under this resolution the notes would be receivable for all dues to the United States, they would be demonetized as to demands and dues from the United States, for the language of the resolution is that they "shall not be otherwise a legal tender" than for dues to the United States. They would not be lawful money for the payment of a single dollar of the expenses of the Government, or of any debt or demand or salary due to any corporation or individual from the United States, and no person could be required to receive them. They would be legal tender for nothing of public or private debt except dues to the United States. In other words, the resolution leaves clear the way to get them into the Treasury by continuing them receivable for all taxes, debts, demands, &c., due the Government, but would render it really and truly "impracticable" for the honorable Secretary of the Treasury to pay them out or reissue them. It would be a virtual repeal of the act of May, 1878, which requires the notes reissued. If these notes shall circulate at all, after being thus demonetized, it must be in competition with the national-bank notes, and to show the relative debt-paying powers of the two kinds of paper money I will read from section 23 of the act known as the national-bank act, as follows:

Such association is hereby authorized to issue and circulate the same [meaning national-bank notes] as money, and the same shall be received at par in all parts of the United States in payment of taxes, excises, public lands, and all other dues to the United States, except for duties on imports, and also for all salaries and other debts and demands owing by the United States to individuals, corporations, and associations within the United States, except interest on the public debt and in redemption of the national currency.

Section 32 of the same act provides that every national bank shall receive at par the notes of any other national bank for any debts or liability due it.

The legal-tender power of the national-bank notes, it will be perceived, covers all dues, debts, &c., to the United States except import dues, and all debts, dues, and demands owing by the United States except interest on the public debt and the redemption of United States notes, and including all that vast amount of private indebtedness accruing daily to the national banks in their dealings with the people and with each other. Why not allow the greenbacks this same range of debt-paying power? There can be surely no constitutional objection to giving them the same debt-paying power possessed by national-bank notes. National-bank notes would also possess the additional value of being redeemable over the bank counters in gold and silver, while Government notes could be redeemed only at the national Treasury and in sums not less than $50, and by a process unknown to one in five thousand of the people who handle them.

Would Government notes thus stripped of their debt-paying power and difficult of redemption be accepted when national-bank notes or gold and silver could be demanded? They would in general business be valuable for but one purpose, and that would be to exchange for coin. The difficulty to the general business public, remote from the Treasury where they are redeemable, of presenting them would throw them into the hands of the national banks, most likely at a discount. The banks already hold $112,000,000 of these notes as a reserve fund, and in due course of business would speedily obtain possession of the greater portion of the balance, and, for the double purpose of supplying themselves with the coin they would be compelled to have, and of taking them out of circulation and putting their own notes in their place, would present them at the Treasury for redemption as fast as received. The entire volume of greenbacks would thus, and in payment of Government dues, go rapidly into the Treasury, and could not be reissued or paid out if the Secretary desired to reissue them, because no person will be compelled to receive them in payment of any demand against the Government, nor, of course, would voluntarily receive them when gold and silver and national-bank notes, much better money, could be demanded. Thus they would disappear from circulation. If I am answered that national-bank notes, though inferior in money power now to greenbacks, are equally current in circulation, an obvious reply is that the inferiority of greenbacks in money power, if the demonetizing resolution is adopted, will be very much greater than that of national-bank notes to greenbacks as they now are; but the great and controlling reason is that the power of the Government and of two thousand and forty-eight national banks is and has been sustaining the bank notes, and the same power is now exerted against the greenbacks to force them into retirement. It is very clear, Mr. President, that any measure, or any combination of circumstances which sends the $346,000,000 of outstanding legal-tender notes to the Treasury for redemption will operate to retire them. If reissued when paid, it is as if they had not been paid, and the same amount remains still to be paid, and so on indefinitely. One hundred and fifty-eight million dollars of coin now in the Treasury for resumption purposes is the largest amount ever there since specie payments were resumed, and there has been no time since January 1, 1879, when one-half of the greenbacks could have been redeemed without resorting to sale of more bonds. When it was desired to maintain them in circulation every step possible was taken necessary to inspire confidence in them; their paying power was enlarged by instructions from the Secretary of the Treasury to collectors of customs to receive them at par in payment of import duties, although by law not a legal tender for such dues. All this was done to prevent their presentation for redemption, to make them as good as coin and preferable to coin; and the desired result was accomplished. The provision for reissuance under such conditions is practicable because the notes are now rarely presented for redemption, being preferred to coin because more convenient.

But when, on the other hand, with a full knowledge of the impracticability of redeeming and reissuing them, and continuing to redeem and reissue indefinitely, the Government deliberately dishonors them, destroys their power as money, makes them greatly inferior not only to coin but to other paper money in circulation, as the resolution of the honorable Senator from Delaware will do, so as to cause their presentation for redemption in the superior money, it is neither more nor less than a provision to retire them from circulation, and such I take to be the meaning and purpose of the resolution. That the effect of the resolution, if adopted, will be to effect a speedy retirement of the entire volume of legal-tenders, nobody doubts. The combined capital of the country, the national banks, the President, and the Secretary of the Treasury, and the whole influence of the Administration are waging war upon these notes, and the legal-tender quality, the debt-paying power, alone sustains them. Strike that out, and they will sink under the onslaught and disappear from our financial system. If the resolution of the honorable Senator from Delaware shall be adopted the national banks will be masters of the situation. They are struggling to obtain a monopoly of the paper circulation of the country, which they can expand or contract at pleasure. This power carries with it the power to affect the values of all property, the wages of labor, and the burden of debts, as they may choose to permit money to be scarce or abundant. The existence of $346,000,000 of legal-tender Government notes under the control of Congress is an effectual check in the interest of the people upon the power of these corporations. Hence their determined effort to remove it. They also wish to remove it in order that they may reap the profit to be derived from filling its place with their own circulating notes. The entire circulation of all the national banks on the 31st of December last is reported by the Comptroller to be $340,388,012, nearly six million less in amount than the Government notes sought to be demonetized. If they can drive these notes out of circulation they will make room to more than double their own note circulation; at the same time they become supreme masters of the financial affairs of fifty millions of people. This is a grand stake to play for, and all they have to do to win it is to secure the passage of the resolution demonetizing the legal-tender notes. This done, their victory is won, their monopoly is complete, and their supremacy is undisputed. All else they desire will follow naturally, easily, and speedily.

The next step, already foreshadowed in the message of the President, the reports of his Secretary of the Treasury and Comptroller of Currency, for they have all strongly recommended it, as well as the demonetization of greenbacks, will be to stop the coinage of silver. To do this will as surely be followed by renewed demonetization of that metal as the destruction of the greenback notes will from striking down their legal-tender quality. The very recommendation, coming from the source it does, is well calculated to depreciate silver. All those engaged in the advocacy of the scheme for demonetizing legal-tender notes and for stopping the coinage of silver were opposed to the remonetization of silver, even to the limited extent it is now coined, and sought to make gold the only standard of value and the only lawful money. Gold and national-bank notes will be our only currency if they succeed in the measures proposed. This is the "honest money," the "hard money," of which we hear so much. The silver dollar of the United States—made in the ratio of 16 of silver to 1 of gold, while the ratio of France, Belgium, Switzerland, Italy, Spain, and Germany is 15½ of silver to 1 of gold, and the ratio of Holland, Great Britain, Ireland, and Portugal is 15$\frac{6}{10}$ of silver to 1 of gold, and of Austria 15$\frac{9}{10}$ of silver to 1 of gold, and of Russia is 15$\frac{3}{10}$ silver to 1 of gold—a silver coin which contains a higher proportion of silver than the coin of any other country in the world, which has been the standard of value from 1792 until this time, except for the short period it was demonetized, and United States legal-tender notes, redeemable on demand in coin, at par with coin and preferred by the people to coin, are denounced as "soft," "dishonest" money, and why? Because the bondholders and national bankers know that contraction such as will result from the destruction of silver as money, and of legal-tender notes as money, will lower all values of property and labor, and at the same time increase in the same proportion the purchasing power of the gold interest received on their bonds, and of national-bank notes with double circulation, while consolidating and centralizing the vast money power of the country into a supreme and irresistible force in the affairs of this Government and people.

Why stop the coinage of silver? The production of silver is declining, as reported by the Director of the Mint. The world's production is estimated at $81,849,300 per annum, and the United States produced of that in 1879 $40,812,132, having declined from $45,281,385 the preceding year. The great mines of Nevada, which in 1878 were officially reported to have yielded $47,076,863 of both gold and silver, fell in 1879 to a product of only $19,305,473.97 of both metals. During the last twenty-five years the Director of the Mint reports that India and China have annually absorbed an average of $47,000,000 of silver, with no prospect of an abatement of the demand. He says further that Europe and America consume in the arts and ornamentation from twenty-five to thirty-five millions of silver. Add these demands together, and to the result add a fair per cent. of the whole stock of silver in the world for loss and for abrasion from use of silver coin, and it will be found that the amount will exceed the world's annual production.

To repeat the question in another form, why should the United States adopt the single gold standard? There is no dispute about the fact that the world's annual yield of gold has been declining since 1856, when the highest point of its production was reached, the amount being placed by the Director of the Mint at $134,000,000 for that year. He gives a table showing the annual product for a number of years, commencing with 1853 and concluding with 1879, for which year the product is given at $86,399,858. The United States produced of that total $38,899,532 against $51,206,360 produced in 1878, showing a decline of nearly thirteen million in one year in this country alone. Scientific men, who have made the question the subject of profound study, estimate that the annual production of gold is only 2 per cent. of the stock of gold in existence, while the annual loss from abrasion, accident, and use in the arts is estimated at from 4 to 6 per cent.; so that the actual supply of gold is supposed to be diminishing, notwithstanding the annual product, which itself is rapidly declining. The yield of gold declining, and of silver inadequate or not more than adequate to existing demands, yet human numbers are increasing and commercial and industrial developments are advancing and extending with a rapidity unparalleled heretofore. The world must have money to grow on, and trade and commerce cannot be extended nor industries increased without money, and money the world will have, for civilization cannot exist without it. If deprived of silver a margin is left for more bank paper. Leaving out the silver in Asia and Africa, which is not supposed to affect commerce, the estimate of Mr. Fawcett, in his work on Gold and Debt, is that there is of metallic money in the world $2,150,000,000 of gold and $2,350,000,000 of silver, almost equally divided, but with a slight preponderance of silver. To demonetize silver means, then, to destroy one-half of the world's money to the great enhancement in value of the other half, and the corresponding increase of the burden of debts and depression of labor. A recently published work, entitled Hughes on the Currency Question, gives the following figures in relation to the public debts of the world, taken from the Westminster Review of January, 1876:

At the close of the Napoleonic wars, in 1815–'20, the public debts of the world amounted to $7,650,000,000.

In 1848, the year of the French revolution, they amounted to $8,655,000,000.

In 1875, after the civil conflict in the United States and the several wars in Europe which preceded the Russo-Turkish war, they amounted to $22,889,000,000.

The author adds $1,100,000,000 for the Russo-Turkish war, making the whole aggregate $24,000,000,000. To this is added, from Poor's and from Fawcett's works, railroad indebtedness, and in addition an estimate is made of municipal debts, (state, city, county, and town,) which bring it up to 1878, as follows:

Public debts in 1878:
National debts	$24, 000, 000, 000
Railroad debts	6, 000, 000, 000
Municipal debts	5, 000, 000, 000
Total	35, 000, 000, 000

Supposing these figures to give a proximate idea of the truth, it is very clear that public indebtedness is increasing at a rate of progression which quickens as it advances, and that the uses of money are increased in this direction with each year as they are in other expansions of human affairs. Will there not be other great wars and enormous increases of the public debts of the world? I suggest the question, and leave it for the future to take care of, and deal with the troubles of the present. At an average of 5 per cent. interest, the enormous sum of seventeen hundred and fifty million annually is necessary to pay the interest on the public debts of the world as stated above, to say nothing of private debts.

England, holding the bonds of the world, and owning her public debt at home to enhance the value of her credits and the annual interest on them, demonetized silver. Germany, whose capitalists hold the bonds of every country in the world, for the same reason followed in discarding silver. After the enormous public debt of the United States was securely funded in bonds, silver, without the knowledge of the country and, for the most part, of the Congress which passed the law and of the President who approved it, was demonetized in the interest of the holders of bonds. The power of the bonds, representing the public debts of the world, procured the demonetization of silver in order that its millions of annual interest should be increased in value. These bonds are chiefly in the hands of the world's bankers, and they also saw in this decrease of metallic money an enlarged area for the operation of bank paper. It was done in the interest of the few and to the oppression of the many. Recent events have gone a long way to disclose to European thinkers and statesmen that the people who produce have been burdened more heavily than they can bear for the benefit of the privileged and moneyed classes. Labor strikes, land agitations, and threatened famine, communism, socialism, nihilism, and all the other isms which express human misery are rampant there, and the legitimate consequences, of enormous public debts intensified in their burden by the destruction of one-half of the money in which they ought to be paid, and the stagnation of all industry for want of the money thus destroyed to satisfy the greed of a few of the nobility and men of wealth. Seeing these things, European opinion is undergoing a radical change. Germany has suspended the sale of her discarded silver, and some of her leading statesmen are denying the wisdom of having demonetized it; while some of the best thinkers and ablest financial writers in England are advocating a return to bimetallism, notably Mr. Henry Hucks Gibbs, late governor of the Bank of England, and one of the representatives of the English government at the Paris conference, who joined his colleagues in the adverse report made, but has since, in view of the present condition of European industries, publicly recanted. The patent fact is seen and acknowledged by all men that depression and stagnation sat upon the United States like an incubus until gold was drawn here from Europe, and that the withdrawal of gold from Europe produced the same distress in Europe which it relieved here, and the governing classes of Europe are being made to see by the inexorable logic of events what the practical intelligence of the American people has comprehended since 1873, that the commerce and industry of the world in its marvelous growth and extension and the immense burden of debt to be paid, demands more money than the gold in existence will furnish, and that the single gold standard cannot be maintained, except by loading down all industry to a point where the danger of revulsion and revolution and general repudiation becomes imminent.

In view of these facts it is significant that at this critical juncture the enemies of silver remonetization in Europe should be re-enforced by the high authority of the President of the United States and his Secretary of the Treasury, in official papers laid before Congress, recommending in effect an abandonment of silver as money, except the insignificant sum of $45,000,000 now coined. The moral force of such action from the chief executive officers of the greatest silver-producing country in the world, supposed to represent the views of the great people who first demanded and enforced the restoration of silver as money, and to speak from experience of its effects, must act with tremendous power upon the public judgment of Europe on the silver question. The advocates of wholesale demonetization of greenbacks and a cessation of the coinage of silver ground their whole argument on the alleged abundance of gold and silver coin in the country, and the existence of the balance of foreign trade in our favor to keep it here. The Director of the Mint estimates that on the first day of November last our stock aggregated $427,206,852, not quite three-fourths of it gold, and the remainder silver, besides some fifty millions of gold bullion. It does not seem to be remembered that the conditions which produced the great inflow of gold for three or four years past are abnormal, and in the natural order of things cannot continue. The unparalleled depression of trade and all the industries, commencing in this country in 1873 and continuing until a short time past, enforced with an iron hand the most rigid economy upon the people. Our own products, which were sold almost at the cost of production, and that too when labor was cheaper than ever before, satisfied our home markets, and we bought very little abroad; hence, the importation of foreign goods and products fell to a very low figure. The cheapness of our products, our exceptionally abundant crops, and the unprecedented failure of crops for two years past in Europe, bringing the people in many parts to the verge of famine, conspired, at the same time that our imports were rapidly falling off, to increase our exports and bring the balance of trade largely in our favor. The extent to which we are indebted for this balance to the failures of crops in Europe will be seen when the fact is stated that, while the total of our imports for 1879 is $710,439,441, I am informed, in a note from the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, that 77.85 per cent. of the amount is for agricultural products, and the value of breadstuffs alone exported to meet the extraordinary demand is $210,355,528 against $98,743,151 worth of breadstuffs in 1873. And it must be borne in mind that prior to 1873, from the beginning of the Government, the balance of trade, except for an occasional year and an insignificant amount, at long intervals, has been uniformly against us. The annual average of the balance against us for the ten years which ended June 30, 1873, was $104,706,922, as shown in the Treasury reports. The Secretary of the Treasury says, in his last report, that, "with one or two unimportant exceptions, the United States stands alone among the commercial nations in having an excess of exports over imports of merchandise," the word merchandise being used to include the total of all our imports of every character. This exceptional status of the United States, notwithstanding the unprecedented European demand for our agricultural products, has been produced in much the largest degree by the poverty and enforced economy of our people and their consequent inability to buy foreign goods, and the cheapness of our own commodities, which excluded foreign goods from our markets, as the following table of imports and exports from 1873 to 1879 will show:

Fiscal year—	Net imports, (less re-exports.)
	Merchandise.	Coin and bullion.	Total.
1873	$624, 689, 727	$10, 777, 909	$635, 467, 636
1874	550, 556, 723	21, 524, 187	572, 080, 910
1875	518, 846, 825	12, 625, 704	531, 472, 529
1876	445, 938, 766	9, 469, 070	455, 407, 836
1877	438, 518, 130	27, 746, 915	466, 265, 045
1878	422, 896, 834	23, 143, 074	446, 039, 908

Fiscal year—	Domestic exports.
	Merchandise.	Coin and bullion.	Total.
1873	$505, 033, 439	$78, 905, 546	$578, 938, 985
1874	569, 433, 421	59, 699, 686	629, 133, 107
1875	499, 284, 100	83, 857, 129	583, 141, 229
1876	525, 582, 247	50, 038, 691	575, 620, 938
1877	589, 670, 294	43, 134, 738	632, 804, 962
1878	680, 683, 798	27, 054, 985	707, 738, 783

These figures show but little average increase of exports until 1878, when the highest figure was reached, and then in excess of the exports of 1874 only about $76,000,000, while the falling off of imports is shown to be continuous and enormous, thus proving conclusively that the balance of trade now and for several years in our favor and the inflow of gold from that cause comes, not except in a small degree from increasing exports, but from a constantly diminishing volume of imports. Hard times and bed-rock prices for labor and material cheapened everything here to a point which excluded foreign importations as nearly as it can possibly be done, while crop failures and famine prices in Europe carried there our enormous surplus of agricultural products and brought back gold.

Sir, we cannot base a permanent financial policy upon results from such conditions as these, fleeting and transitory as they are, and even now in process of being reversed. Under the influence of this abnormally increased supply of the precious metals hard times are giving place to renewed prosperity, the wages of labor and the price of all the products of industry are advancing rapidly, and the time seems not far distant when we will have recovered from the recent prolonged depression. With the advent of that period will come a reversal of the conditions which have given us the heavy trade balance and drained European gold into our coffers. The inflow of gold is raising high the tide of prosperity here, while a corresponding depression has been caused by the outflow there. Prices are raised here, but lowered there. High prices here will bring low-priced European products into our markets, and exclude our commodities from European markets, except such agricultural products as they are compelled to buy. Extravagance, which ever accompanies prosperity, will take the place of that economy which adversity forced upon us, and was the chief factor in the change which has occurred.

The result probably will be a re-establishment of the trade balance against us and a reactionary outflow of gold, to be increased by the amount of interest on the public debt, because our bonds will not remain here, where money is worth 6 and 8 and 10 per cent. interest, but will go abroad where 4 per cent. is regarded as a good investment.

I read from the London Times of December 1 on this subject in support of this view:

> The money that has flowed in such profusion from Europe to the United States cannot always remain there. Its presence will soon be felt in a rise of prices throughout the Union, and as soon as a rise has been established a demand for European goods will follow, and the current of money from the east to the western shores of the Atlantic will be arrested, if not reversed. A process of this kind cannot be completed within a week or a month, but its development may be anticipated as confidently as the movement of the tides.

Also from the New York Herald of December 2:

> As soon as prices rise high enough a flood of foreign goods will come pouring into the country. The drain of money from Europe will lower prices there, inflation will enhance them here, and European commodities can be sold at a high profit in our market. Then the resumption experiment will begin to be tested; then the tide of money will begin to flow back into Europe, and greenbacks will be offered at the Treasury to procure gold for exportation. If, after the stream is turned, there should be a prospect of short crops in America and an abundant harvest in Europe, it will require all Mr. Sherman's skill to weather the change. The Government is trusting altogether too much to luck and accident.

Truer words were never written than these. The supreme test of our financial policy has yet to come. Europe, taught as we were in the school of adversity, is preparing now to renew the struggle for the gold, the loss of which destroyed her prosperity, and the gain of which built up our own. The struggle will be a desperate one, such as famine and want and misery drive men to make. It can be kept here by perpetuating the conditions through which it was acquired, by making money scarcer, cheapening agricultural products, cheapening labor, raw material, and consequently manufactured products, so as to compete with European pauper labor, as we were driven to do in the terrible years succeeding 1873. To do this the value of money must be increased, its purchasing power must be inflated. To demonetize the legal-tender currency, and stop the coinage of silver, or either of these measures, will produce this result. The policy of those who advocate these measures involves a sacrifice at the hands of the great mass of the people for the benefit of a favored few alike unreasonable and unnecessary.

The producers who create the wealth of this country cannot, will not, and ought not to sanction a policy such as this, which would enslave them for all future time to the rapacity of money-changers and reduce them to the level of starving European labor. Handicapped as they were by legislation which increased the burden of all debt, public and private, when gold had fled the country and silver was destroyed as money, with only legal-tender greenbacks they rescued the country from impending bankruptcy and have placed it upon a foundation of solid prosperity, and they can and will maintain it there against all competition, if we will only let the legal-tender currency remain as it is and give them what they have so often and vainly demanded, free coinage of silver. If, instead of disarming them in front of the enemy, when about to receive his charge, as the demonetizing process proposes to do, we place in their hands every weapon of defense within our reach, we can rely confidently on them to meet the onset successfully.

There is no inflation of values. As evidence of it the Director of the Mint, in a carefully prepared table, shows that gold has been constantly increasing in value since 1873. The existing partial remonetization of silver has not checked this advance. This table shows that a piece of gold possessing a purchasing power of ninety-one cents in 1874, in 1879 had a purchasing power of $1.16. Advancing value for gold means receding value for commodities and labor. There is no inflation of anything, then, except gold. One dollar of gold will buy one-third more of labor or commodities than it would in 1874. This ought to satisfy even the New York bankers; still they are not satisfied and want further inflation of gold. I am opposed to inflation of either gold or commodities, but, if one or the other must need be inflated, I prefer it to be the latter. But if it were true that we have too much money in circulation and all values were inflated, why not curtail the national-bank issues, which cost the people money to sustain, and let alone the United States notes, which cost nothing while in circulation, but nearly two-thirds of which will have to be funded into interest-bearing bonds if retired, for there is only coin enough in the Treasury to redeem a little more than one-third of them? The banks are steadily expanding their note circulation, as the Comptroller in his report informs us, having increased it $14,742,503 during the year 1879. The greenbacks are certainly the most economical circulation, for surely it is cheaper to use them as money than it is to put them into bonds and pay interest on them. If, as alleged, the volume of currency should act automatically and expand or contract as business demands, we will always need more than $346,000,000 of paper, that being the amount of Government notes. Let that alone, and let the bank circulation respond to the vibrations of trade.

Again, the legal-tender notes hold the volume of circulation steady. It is a breakwater between it and the fluctuations of coin, as it ebbs and flows out and into the country. The coin may leave the country now and the volume of circulation need not be diminished, because greenbacks are to the banks as good as coin. The national Treasury has to look out for gold to keep the greenbacks at par, but the banks need have no care for it, and would in a great degree be undisturbed by its movements. But when greenbacks are demonetized, the bank circulation will be sensitive to every movement of coin, and must conform to its fluctuations. In other words, the demonetization of greenbacks will subject the financial affairs of this country to all the shocks and convulsions produced by the erratic movements of coin in the commercial world, which in a great measure they now protect us from. If we should actually lose our coin, as we have done before, and as Europe has recently done, a crash and general bankruptcy, from which the legal-tenders would in a great measure save the country, would surely ensue if they are demonetized. As a banking basis, these notes now fill exactly the place of gold. They will remain at home under circumstances which would carry the gold away. They will protect the banks and people against European panics, will be "lawful money" when gold has fled, and sustain the country in adversity, as they have done since 1873, and harm nobody; on the contrary, bless everybody who can get them in prosperity; a tried, true, trusty friend in adversity as in prosperity, that will stay with us if every bank in Europe should break or should become gorged with gold. Why should we abandon this currency? Especially why abandon it at this time, when our exports are diminishing and our imports rapidly increasing, with a prospect in the not far distant future of having the balance of trade re-established against us, and a consequent scarcity of coin? This currency, sir, is one of the very few good things that the war brought the working people of this country, and I am in favor of holding on to it, and keeping the volume up to full $346,000,000 by reissuing from time to time enough new notes to supply the place of all that may have been lost or destroyed. In addition to all this, these notes are a check upon the power of the banks over the people, which the people's representatives should never surrender.

Whence comes the demand for the destruction of the legal-tender currency? Not from those who raised the agricultural products which constitute 77.85 per cent. of the vast volume of exports which has brought a golden current into the country; not from the people who redeemed the misfortunes of the country with labor, and, invoking the statesmanship of the plow, won back the prosperity which a different character of statesmanship had lost; not from the people who cast four-fifths of the votes in the election of officers to administer the Government; no, sir; all these protest against it; but from bankers, merchants, factors, railroad presidents, transportation agents, insurance men, money and stock traders and brokers, &c., who grow rich from handling the wealth which others have produced—all good men and doing a perfectly legitimate business which must be done by somebody, but knowing full well how to take care of their own interests. When a few days ago the honorable and justly honored Senator from New York, whose seat is near me, rose in his place and presented a mammoth petition signed by fifteen hundred gentlemen of the city of New York, including presidents of national banks, merchant princes and railroad kings, large holders of gold interest-bearing bonds, money and stock brokers and traders, and a few pursuing other professions and avocations, praying that the legal-tender quality be stricken from the greenback notes, I was forcibly reminded of the warning given the American people in his celebrated farewell address, when retiring from the Presidency at the close of a long term of distinguished public service, by Andrew Jackson, the great apostle of the people's democracy. I will read from it:

> It is one of the serious evils of our present system of banking that it enables one class of society, and by no means a numerous one, by its control over the currency, to act injuriously upon the interests of all the others and to exercise more than its just proportion of influence in political affairs. The agricultural, the mechanical, and the laboring classes have little or no share in the direction of the great moneyed corporations; and from their habits and the nature of their pursuits, they are incapable of forming extensive combinations to act together with united force. Such concert of action may sometimes be produced in a single city, or in a small district of country, by means of personal communication with each other; but they have no regular or active correspondence with those who are engaged in similar pursuits in distant places; they have but little patronage to give to the press, and exercise but a small share of influence over it; they have no crowd of dependents about them, who hope to grow rich without labor, by their countenance and favor, and who are therefore always ready to execute their wishes. The planter, the farmer, the mechanic, and the laborer, all know that their success depends upon their own industry and economy and that they must not expect to become suddenly rich by the fruits of their toil. Yet these classes of society form the great body of the people of the United States. They are the bone and sinew of the country, men who love liberty, and desire nothing but equal rights and equal laws, and who, moreover, hold the great mass of our national wealth, although it is distributed in moderate amounts among the millions of freemen who possess it. But with overwhelming numbers and wealth on their side, they are in constant danger of losing their fair influence in the Government, and with difficulty maintain their just rights against the incessant efforts daily made to encroach upon them.
> The mischief springs from the power which the moneyed interest derives from a paper currency which they are able to control, from the multitude of corporations with exclusive privileges, which they have succeeded in obtaining in the different States, and which are employed altogether for their benefit; and unless you become more watchful in your States, and check this spirit of monopoly and thirst for exclusive privileges, you will in the end find that the most important powers of government have been given or bartered away, and the control over your dearest interests has passed into the hands of these corporations.
> The paper-money system, and its natural associates, monopoly and exclusive privileges, have already struck their roots deep in the soil, and it will require all your efforts to check its further growth and eradicate the evil. The men who profit by the abuses and desire to perpetuate them will continue to besiege the halls of legislation in the General Government as well as in the States, and will seek by every artifice to mislead and deceive the public servants.

I read again from his message vetoing the bank bill, to show that among all the changes which have occurred since Jackson's time, human nature has remained the same:

> It is to be regretted that the rich and powerful too often bend the acts of Government to their selfish purposes. Distinctions in society will always exist under every just government. Equality of talents, of education, or of wealth cannot be produced by human institutions. In the full enjoyment of the gifts of heaven, and the fruits of superior industry, economy, and virtue, every man is equally entitled to protection by law. But when the laws undertake to add to these natural and just advantages artificial distinctions, to grant titles, gratuities, and exclusive privileges, to make the rich richer, and the potent more powerful, the humble members of society, the farmers, mechanics, and laborers, who have neither the time nor the means of securing like favors to themselves, have a right to complain of the injustice of their Government.
> Experience should teach us wisdom. Most of the difficulties our Government now encounters, and most of the dangers which impend over our Union, have sprung from an abandonment of the legitimate objects of government by our national legislation, and the adoption of such principles as are embodied in this act. Many of our rich men have not been content with equal protection and equal benefits, but have besought us to make them richer by acts of Congress. By attempting to gratify their desires we have, in the results of our legislation, arrayed section against section, interest against interest, and man against man, in a fearful commotion, which threatens to shake the foundations of our Union.

Suppose the prayer of the petitioners from New York is granted and the legal-tender currency is retired, do we get gold and silver in its place? By no means. We will see its place filled, of course, with national-bank notes. Yet in the war made on legal-tender notes the people are sought to be deluded with the cry of "hard money," when in truth it is sought to destroy silver (which is half of the hard money) and greenbacks only to replace both with national-bank notes—national-bank notes in place of silver, national-bank notes in place of legal-tender greenbacks, and national-bank notes in place of gold, if that, under changed conditions, shall flee the country as it did after 1873. The country must have money of some sort, and if the resolution of the honorable Senator from Delaware is adopted, and the recommendation of the President and Secretary of the Treasury to stop the coinage of silver shall be adopted, we will have left a little gold locked up in bank vaults and a great flood of national-bank notes in circulation among the people. This is the "hard-money" feast to which the people are invited. State banks of issue have been taxed out of existence, and not one is left, in order to create a monopoly for national banks; and now the people's currency, issued and backed by the people's Government, redeemable on demand in coin, at par with coin, the safest and soundest currency in the world, the creation of necessity, molded by the circumstances of nearly twenty years of change and revolution to fit the times successively from flagrant war to profound peace under burdens inherited from war, perfected by the wisdom of experience, tried by the country and found good in every crisis, is sought to be destroyed to make way for more national-bank notes, and all in the name of "hard money," "honest money." Money cannot be "hard" or "honest" money according to this theory, which does not rob the laborer and producer and enrich the banker. A few democrats are found who call this a return to the principles of good old Jacksonian democracy. If Andrew Jackson, Martin Van Buren, and their compeers who believed that the United States Bank with a capital of $40,000,000, surrounded by competing State banks, was too powerful; that it corrupted the press and sought to rule the Government; that it was about to acquire a controlling influence in politics to be used for its own gain and the people's oppression; that by its power to expand or contract the currency at pleasure it could worry and distress the people and bend them to subserviency and through that means control elections, and was therefore dangerous to the liberties of the country as well as its material interests, and for that reason, in the name of the democratic people of the United States, of whom they were distinguished leaders, overthrew it—if they could be reanimated and could hear the principles of the democracy invoked in behalf of a measure which will destroy the only check in the hands of the people upon the power of a system of bank corporations animated by a common purpose and common interests, possessed of aggregate capital, including surplus, amounting to $570,000,000 and with power of indefinite expansion, besides large amounts of public money always on deposit with them, a huge, overshadowing monopoly to which every objection they urged to the Bank of the United States will apply with twenty-fold force, beside which the bank they devoted the best years of their lives to crushing out was utterly insignificant, they would come to the conclusion that the principles of the democratic party had undergone a tremendous revolution since they led the party. Andrew Jackson was the ardent advocate not of gold alone but of gold and silver money, as the people of my State are and as I am and have ever been; but every word or line to be found in his state papers on the subject is coupled with expressions of undying hostility to a national bank as the greatest enemy to free government that had ever taken root in American institutions; and his messages and farewell address teem with the most impressive warnings to the people against the danger from such powerful corporations.

The reserves of the national banks in the city of New York alone, whence the mammoth petition referred to came, are one-third larger in amount than the entire capital of the Bank of the United States, which Jackson slew because, he said, its existence was incompatible with popular liberty and representative government.

Sir, this country is corporation-ridden already, without aggrandizing them further.

I read again from Jackson's farewell address. This address was issued upon the retirement of that great man from a long life of distinguished and honored public service. It was issued when he was going back to the Hermitage. It was his last word of warning and of advice, his last precept to the American people. I ask attention to it:

> But when the charter for the Bank of the United States was obtained from Congress it perfected the schemes of the paper system, and gave to its advocates the position they have struggled to obtain from the commencement of the Federal Government down to the present hour. The immense capital and peculiar privileges bestowed upon it enables it to exercise despotic sway over the other banks in every part of the country. From its superior strength it could seriously injure, if not destroy, the business of any one of them which might incur its resentment; and it openly claimed for itself the power of regulating the currency throughout the United States, in other words it asserted (and undoubtedly possessed) the power to make money plenty or scarce, at its pleasure, at any time and in any quarter of the Union, by controlling the issues of other banks, and permitting an expansion, or compelling a general contraction, of the circulating medium, according to its own will. The other banking institutions were sensible of its strength, and they soon generally became its obedient instruments, ready at all times to execute its mandates; and with the banks, necessarily, went also that numerous class of persons in our commercial cities who depend altogether on bank credits for their solvency and means of business, and who are therefore obliged, for their own safety, to propitiate the favor of the money power by distinguished zeal and devotion in its service. The result of the ill-advised legislation which established this great monopoly was to concentrate the whole moneyed power of the Union, with its boundless means of corruption and its numerous dependents, under the direction and command of one acknowledged head, thus organizing this particular interest as one body, and securing to it unity and concert of action throughout the United States, and enabling it to bring forward upon any occasion its entire and undivided strength to support or defeat any measure of the Government. In the hands of this formidable power, thus perfectly organized, was also placed unlimited dominion over the amount of the circulating medium, giving it the power to regulate the value of property and the fruits of labor in every quarter of the Union, and to bestow prosperity or bring ruin upon any city or section of the country, as might best comport with its own interest or policy.
> We are not left to conjecture how the moneyed power, thus organized, and with such a weapon in its hands, would be likely to use it. The distress and alarm which pervaded and agitated the whole country when the Bank of the United States waged war upon the people in order to compel them to submit to its demands, cannot yet be forgotten. The ruthless and unsparing temper with which whole cities and communities were oppressed, individuals impoverished and ruined, and a scene of cheerful prosperity suddenly changed into one of gloom and despondency, ought to be indelibly impressed on the memory of the people of the United States. If such was its power in a time of peace, what would it not have been in a season of war, with an enemy at your doors! No nation but the freemen of the United States could have come out victorious from such a contest; yet, if you had not conquered, the Government would have passed from the hands of the many to the hands of the few; and this organized money power, from its secret conclave, would have dictated the choice of your highest officers, and compelled you to make peace or war, as best suited their own wishes. The forms of your Government might for a time have remained, but its living spirit would have departed from it.

I read from Jackson's fifth annual message:

> It being thus established by unquestionable proof that the Bank of the United States was converted into a permanent electioneering engine, it appeared to me that the path of duty which the executive department of the Government ought to pursue was not doubtful. As by the terms of the bank charter no officer but the Secretary of the Treasury could remove the deposits, it seemed to me that this authority ought to be at once exerted to deprive that great corporation of the support and countenance of the Government in such a use of its funds and such an exertion of its power.
> In this point of the case the question is distinctly presented, whether the people of the United States are to govern through representatives chosen by their unbiased suffrages, or whether the power and money of a great corporation are to be secretly exerted to influence their judgment and control their decisions. It must now be determined whether the bank is to have its candidates for all offices in the country, from the highest to the lowest, or whether candidates on both sides of political questions shall be brought forward as heretofore, and supported by the usual means. At this time the efforts of the bank to control public opinion through the distresses of some and fears of others are equally apparent, and, if possible, more objectionable. By a curtailment of its accommodations, more rapid than any emergency requires, and even while it retains specie to an almost unprecedented amount in its vaults, it is attempting to produce great embarrassment in one portion of the community, while through presses known to have been sustained by its money it attempts by unfounded alarms to create a panic in all.
> These are the means by which it seems to expect that it can force a restoration of the deposits, and, as a necessary consequence, extort from Congress a renewal of its charter. I am happy to know that, through the good sense of our people, the effort to get up a panic has hitherto failed, and that through the increased accommodations which the State banks have been enabled to afford, no public distress has followed the exertions of the bank; and it cannot be doubted that the exercise of its power and the expenditure of its money, as well as its efforts to spread groundless alarm, will be met and rebuked as they deserve. In my own sphere of duty, I should feel myself called on by the facts disclosed to order a scire facias against the bank, with a view to put an end to the chartered rights it has so palpably violated, were it not that the charter itself will expire as soon as a decision would probably be obtained from the court of last resort.

And again, from his celebrated protest spread on the records of the Senate, against a vote of censure for removal of the deposits:

> The Bank of the United States, a great moneyed monopoly, had attempted to obtain a renewal of its charter by controlling the elections of the people and the action of the Government. The use of its corporate funds and power in that attempt was fully disclosed; and it was made known to the President that the corporation was putting in train the same course of measures with the view of making another vigorous effort, through an interference in the election of the people, to control public opinion and to force the Government to yield to its demands. This, with its corruption of the press, its violation of its charter, its exclusion of the Government directors from its proceedings, its neglect of duty, and arrogant pretensions, made it, in the opinion of the President, incompatible with the public interest and the safety of our institutions that it should be longer employed as the fiscal agent of the Treasury.

The Senate censured but the people sustained him, and have canonized his memory.

Such are the views which the greatest leader of the democratic party since the days of Jefferson labored for a life-time to impress upon the people of the United States, and such the principles which guided his administration of this Government. The changes which have occurred since, seem only to illustrate the profound sagacity and patriotism of the illustrious statesman who bequeathed them as a legacy to his countrymen. The great railway corporations whose roads span and gridiron the continent, and are the carriers of our vast internal commerce, being rapidly consolidated and concentrated in a few hands when "profits are pooled" to the utter destruction of competition, with unlimited power to tax the marketable products of the country, which have to this time defied every effort to bring them under control of the people's Government, had then no existence, nor had the thousand other methods of using corporate power which have been since developed. Then no power existed in less than a half dozen railroad presidents to meet in secret conclave as they do now, with blinds closed and curtains drawn, and by raising their tariff of charges impose a tax amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars on the products of labor, to which the people are compelled to submit, which imposed by a law of Congress would almost drive them to a rebellion. Vast combinations of capital, corporate and otherwise, which now, under a most oppressive tariff, exact bounties from the people averaging $40 for every $100 they expend for any purpose, not excepting even the very iron over which their products are rolled to market, then were hardly dreamed of.

The prophetic vision of Jackson pierced the future as that of no other did, and we feel it and know it, because the greatest question now pressing for solution upon the American people is, not how to subject corporate and money power to the people's will, but how to prevent these powers from dominating the Government of the people. The national-bank system, the most powerful aggregation of corporate powers in the world, based on Government bonds, the property of private individuals, controlled by officers and directors in whose election the Government has no voice, is nevertheless a part of the machinery of the Treasury Department, which must run in harmony with the balance, or the whole must stop. It is the depositary and fiscal agency of the Government; it is the connecting link which transmits the power of concentrated capital to the point where it controls the greatest Department of the Government. It is the Briareus whose hundred hands grasp the machinery of the Treasury Department, and rules it in his own interest. There is no important financial operation that can be executed by the Government without the consent and co-operation of the national banks; their negative will defeat any move proposed by the Secretary of the Treasury. He dare not antagonize them. They have put silver under the ban in their clearance-houses, and boldly defied the national authority, which by law has declared it a legal tender, and the Secretary of the Treasury had to succumb. They are bold, aggressive, and defiant, and claim the right to rule the people through a control of the values of their property and the burden of their debts, and to dictate in their own interest a policy which will enrich them at the expense of the producers of the country. Active political agents, their immense power is exerted in every election in favor of those who will advance their interests, and against those who oppose them. Hon. Moses W. Field, of Michigan, is reported as saying in a speech a few years ago:

The Forty-third Congress, to which I belonged, was composed of three hundred and seventy-nine members. In this number there were six lumbermen, thirteen manufacturers, seven doctors, fourteen merchants, thirteen farmers, three millers, one land surveyor, one priest, one professor of Latin, one doctor of laws, one barber, one mechanic, ninety-nine lawyers, and one hundred and eighty-nine bankers, which included stockholders in national banks.

This statement, which I presume is correct, will give some idea of the immense political influence wielded by these corporations, permeating the whole country as they do with their crowds of officials and dependents, and their power over the press, and we can understand from it the reason for the earnest vigor with which Andrew Jackson denounced the bank of the United States for using its money and power to influence the people and control elections. It is the power of the banks which up to this time has defeated the thrice-repeated demand of the people for free coinage and full restoration of silver, and, while nominally legal-tender money, has reduced it to insignificance in the business and commerce of the country. The reason is plain: the less silver we have the greater the room for bank-notes. They denounce silver as dishonest money, because silver bullion is discounted slightly by the side of gold; but that power demonetized silver in 1873 when silver outvalued gold three cents on the dollar. They will not have it on any terms if to be avoided.

But one single thing remains to be done to make these corporations supreme over all the labor and all the values of all the people in this great country, and that is to demonetize the $346,000,000 of legal-tender notes. The money circulation placed thereby exclusively in their control, its volume to be expanded or contracted at their pleasure, the last remaining check upon their power will be gone, and they will be the completest and most powerful monopoly that ever existed under any government. Once intrenched in power it can never be dislodged. It would perpetuate the public debt on which it is based. Itself a centralized power, it would for its own protection consolidate all political power in a strong central government and be aided in the work for the same purpose by the other great corporations. If the strong man with mailed hand shall ever come to erect an imperial throne over the ruins of popular liberty in America, which God forbid, the way will have been prepared and he will come at the bidding of organized, concentrated capital. I will never add by vote or act of mine to this already overgrown and overshadowing power. If a stand is ever to be made against it, at least it is not too early to make it. The real issue is between the money power and the people. This issue, sir, extends far beyond any mere question of money; it involves the continuance of free representative government and popular liberty. We cannot doubt this if we heed the solemn admonitions of one of the wisest and most far-seeing patriots who ever impressed himself upon the history of this or any other country. Whatever may be the opinion of the duty of the Government in respect to furnishing a sound currency for the people, there can be no doubt of a paramount duty to protect the country against the danger of domination by corporations of its own creation. Wherever such danger exists the high duty arises to remove it, and if no other means can be devised it would be far better that the Government issue itself the volume of paper needed by the country and abolish the national banks.

It is infinitely better to have paper issued directly by the Government than build up in our midst a banking power which, in the experience of some of the wisest men, is a standing and growing menace to the liberties of the people. That the Government can constitutionally issue a currency less expensive and more safe than any other I have no doubt. The question before the Senate and the country now is as to the expediency of doubling the circulation, and consequently doubling the power of the national banks, already too powerful to be controlled, by demonetizing legal-tender notes, for this would be the effect of the adoption of the resolution of the honorable Senator from Delaware. All who favor hard money must oppose this measure, because it will install in undisputed power a force hostile to silver, one-half of the hard money of the world, and will visit the little we have of it with swift destruction. All who believe in the democracy of Andrew Jackson, who crushed out the old national bank, and of his successor in the presidential office and in the leadership of the democratic party, Martin Van Buren, whose battle-cry in the contest resulting in his election was "Eternal hostility to a national bank," should oppose this measure. All who believe that "monopolies and perpetuities are contrary to the genius of a free government" and that no power should be tolerated which experience proves will corrupt the press and destroy the freedom of elections should oppose it. All who believe in the old democratic maxim of "equal rights for all and special privileges for none" and are opposed to exercising the powers of Government to enrich and make powerful a few at the expense of the many and are opposed to class legislation should oppose it. All who desire the supremacy of the great body of the people in the affairs of this Government and the unshackled influence of that great bulwark of free government, a free press, unawed and uncorrupted by the power of money, of organized corporate capital, should oppose it. All who believe in the wisdom of Jackson's solemn warning against the power of banks, the evils of bank paper, the danger lurking in great corporations to free government and the people's liberties, verified as they have been by the experience of more than half a century, should oppose it. These, sir, are my profound convictions, and while I freely concede the highest purity of purpose, of patriotism, and of conviction to every gentleman on this floor who holds opposing views, I must maintain them. I believe this a question which should be discussed, and the country aroused to an appreciation of its importance, for none greater, involving as it does the essential principles of free government, can challenge the popular intelligence. No consideration of party expediency should be permitted to hide it from the people, whose liberties and whose substance as well are involved in its proper and speedy solution.

The people of the State I have the honor in part to represent on this floor, sir, so far as I have been able with good opportunities to learn their views, are opposed to all extremes in finance. They are opposed to the absolute or fiat money theory, and believe it a delusion and a snare, not much more vicious and destructive, however, than the other extreme, which would destroy silver and erect the single gold standard. They believe in the middle ground between these two extremes, a constitutional gold and silver currency, with as full money power and as free coinage for silver as for gold, and oppose any paper money except that which is at par with coin and redeemable at the will of the holder in coin. They do not believe that the Government has now the constitutional power to issue paper money which shall be a legal tender for private debt, but that the legal-tender notes now in circulation are, for the reasons I have given, valid and constitutional, and are unalterably opposed to their demonetization. They favor an honest, bona fide payment of the public debt in accordance with the terms of the Government contract with the holders liberally and justly interpreted. They are profoundly attached to our free Government, and jealous of any power which may endanger its stability or change its character, and are therefore opposed, as well as for economic reasons, to the existing system of national banks and to any increase of their already dangerous power. They view with alarm the growing power of corporations and centralized capital, and fear, if not checked, that the substance if not the form of our Government will be overthrown. It is needless to say that I concur most heartily in all these views.

INTEREST ON ARREARAGES OF TAXES.

Mr. WHYTE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HARRIS. Senate joint resolution No. 64 was unanimously reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia last Monday. I desire to put it upon its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. WHYTE. Yes, sir; if it will only take a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution indicated by him.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in the Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. No. 64) extending the provisions of the first section of an act entitled "An act fixing the rate of interest upon arrearages of general taxes and assessments for special improvements now due to the District of Columbia, and for a revision of assessments for special improvements, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1879. It extends the provisions of the first section of the act named so as to apply to all general taxes in arrear on the 1st of July, 1879, and to all special assessments due the District of Columbia and which may be paid on or before the 1st of July, 1880.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the first section of the act which the joint resolution proposes to extend be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be reported by the Secretary.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the rate of interest to be collected of any person owing arrearages of general taxes, or assessments for special improvements now due to, and the liens for which are held by, the District of Columbia shall be 6 per cent. per annum in lieu of the rate and penalties now fixed by law: Provided, This provision shall apply only to taxes and assessments paid on or before the 1st day of October, 1879.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WHYTE. I now renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 22, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. SAMUEL DOMER, pastor of Saint Paul's English Lutheran church, Washington, D. C.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

Mr. HAWK. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent that General John C. Smith, State treasurer of the State of Illinois, be admitted to the privilege of the floor of the House to-day and to-morrow.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

PRINTING OF A PETITION.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the unanimous consent of the House to have a preamble and resolution which I hold in my hand, signed by 500 citizens of the county of Greene, in the State of Illinois, on the subject of the action of Congress on a measure now before it, printed in the RECORD. I should not make this request, but the resolutions are new and contain something of interest to every member of the House. I therefore ask that the petition be read and printed in the RECORD.

The Clerk proceeded to read the petition.

Mr. McMAHON. I rise to a question of inquiry. Has consent been asked for the presentation of this petition?

Mr. KEIFER. I do not understand that the Speaker has asked the House whether there is objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know how any member can object until he knows what it is in reference to which unanimous consent is asked.

Mr. KEIFER. We only want to reserve the right to object.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Is it in order to object after the petition has been read?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. McMAHON. I object.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, the ordinary rule would recognize that silence gives consent.

The SPEAKER. It has been ruled often that a member reserves the right to object until the subject in reference to which unanimous consent has been asked has been placed before the House so he may know whether he will object or not.

Mr. WEAVER. It has been almost read and I hope there will be no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made the petition is not before the House.

Mr. McMAHON. This is too serious a body to have a petition like that read here burlesquing a large body of our fellow-citizens.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. There is nothing so serious on which, and there is no place in which, the people have not the right to be heard.

Mr. McMAHON. It is a slur on the other large number of men who have sent in petitions here by the hundred and thousand in favor of the Weaver bill.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I do not know how the gentleman can know it is such a slur when he has not heard the petition read.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to submit for adoption at this time a report from the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. McMAHON. I desire to say——

The SPEAKER. There is another subject now before the House.

Mr. McMAHON. I desire only to say, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Illinois showed me yesterday a memorial which I supposed was the one now pending, and before it was read wanted to object so it might not go upon the RECORD. It was a memorial against the Weaver bill and ridiculing it.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made it would not go upon the RECORD.

Mr. McMAHON. The gentleman now informs me——

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. That it is a very different thing.

Mr. McMAHON. And, therefore, I withdraw objection.

The SPEAKER. Another subject is now before the House, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois afterward.

PRICE OF GAS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island, by unanimous consent, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported the following preamble and resolution; which were read, considered, and agreed to:

Whereas Congress has undertaken by legislation to regulate the quality and price of illuminating gas manufactured and sold in the District of Columbia; and

Whereas it is alleged in the memorial recently presented to Congress, signed by reputable citizens of the District, that the gas manufactured by the Washington Gas-Light Company is of a very inferior illuminating quality, and that said company otherwise conduct their business contrary to the letter and spirit of the act of Congress regulating gas-works: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States, That the Committee for the District of Columbia are hereby directed to inquire into the alleged infractions of law by the said Washington Gas-Light Company, and also to inquire what further legislation, if any, is necessary to secure to the Government of the United States and to the people of the District of Columbia a better and cheaper gas supply, and for this purpose the said committee are authorized to employ an expert and send for persons and papers, and to report by bill or otherwise, the expenses of the inquiry not to exceed $200, to be paid from the contingent fund of the House.

IMPROVEMENT OF OCONTO HARBOR.

Mr. POUND, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial of the common council and board of trade of the city of Oconto, in the State of Wisconsin, for the improvement of the harbor adjacent to said city; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

THE WEAVER BILL.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I now ask, Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMAHON] has withdrawn his objection, to present the petition of 500 officers and soldiers and sailors of the county of Greene, in the State of Illinois, praying for the passage of the Weaver bill, and to ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, the petition will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and printed in the RECORD without the names.

The petition is as follows:

GREENE COUNTY, STATE OF ILLINOIS, January 10, 1880.

We, undersigned officers, soldiers, and sailors of the Union Army in the late war of the rebellion, in mass-meeting assembled at Carrollton, in the aforesaid county, do hereby petition Congress and subscribe our names to the following preambles and resolutions:

Whereas all good men and true patriots, with whom the national supremacy, unity, and prosperity were at heart, and who upon the President's call voluntarily responded in defense of the nation, at the sacrifice of family ties and everything that man held dear; and

Whereas the time has come when the Government of the United States should do justice to the officers, soldiers, and sailors who served and defended the national honor in the war of the rebellion, and who were paid in greenbacks at a greatly depreciated value, while all other creditors of the Government were paid in gold or its equivalent; and

Whereas we deem it an act of justice to pay the officers, soldiers, and sailors, as set forth in the bill introduced by Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa, and now pending before Congress at Washington: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That we earnestly request our Senators and Representatives in Congress (without regard to political parties) to support this most just and righteous measure, in justice to the men who periled their lives and home interests in defending the Union, Constitution, and integrity of our Government in the nation's darkest hour of trial and danger, pledging ourselves to support all honorable measures tending to an honest adjustment of this our just claim; and

Be it further resolved, That we now organize all over the nation, and that a record of the action of the respective members of Congress be kept as to their respective opposition or support given this measure, for future reference.

Resolved, That the foregoing petition, preambles, and resolution be forwarded to JAMES W. SINGLETON, our worthy Representative in Congress, including all the names subscribed thereto, to be presented by him in support of our claims as embodied in the Weaver bill.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. SCALES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a personal explanation. I find in the Daily Herald the following editorial, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WHAT IT WILL COST.

The proposition of one of the North Carolina statesmen in Congress to send free to every voter in the country a daily copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is so excellent that we hope the trifling item of expense will not be interposed as an objection to the passage of the bill. In order to convince Congressmen how insignificant the expenditure really is, in view of the great advantages to be reaped by all our citizens from a daily perusal of the document in question, we have been at the trouble of making a few rough calculations on the subject. The cost of printing and circulating the RECORD would be nearly as follows:

	Per week.
Paper	$600,000
Postage	1,020,000
Pressmen	25,000
Stereotyping	25,000
Mailing	25,000
Incidentals, gas, coal, &c	200,000
Total	1,995,000

In round numbers the amount would be about $2,000,000 a week, not including the cost of presses and other machinery, which would probably run up to $6,000,000. A printing office covering at least one-fourth of the District of Columbia would have to be built, and in addition the post-offices all over the Union should of necessity be enlarged. We sincerely hope Congress will not hesitate to give every voter a free RECORD, no matter what the expense may be. It would be cheap at any price.

Mr. SCALES. Mr. Speaker, that was published in the Herald of last Friday; and I say for myself, and I think I can say for every North Carolina member, that no such bill or petition was presented by any Representative from that State. In the RECORD of the 13th instant it is stated that such a petition was presented by Mr. WILBER, of New York. North Carolina desires to take none of the laurels of New York, and I rise for the purpose of disclaiming, on the part of North Carolina, the responsibility for this and giving it to New York.

BANK RESERVES.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at twenty-five minutes past twelve o'clock; and the House now resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2715) requiring the reserves of national banks to be kept in gold and silver coins of the United States, reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BUCKNER.]

Mr. BUCKNER. I demand the previous question on the bill and amendment.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 74, noes 44.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. A quorum has not voted.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. TOWNSHEND, and the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. BUCKNER.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 100, noes 48.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was ordered.

Mr. BUCKNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKNER. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. GILLETTE.]

Mr. GILLETTE. The bill before the House I regard as a most serious one. Like that famous "act to strengthen the public credit," passed March 18, 1869, the object of which was to rob the public of $600,000,000, and like almost all financial measures passed by Congress for the last twenty years, the title of this bill is designed to hide its real object. There is more in it than is apparent at first sight. Let no man be deceived. This is a direct, adroit shot at the greenback, at the legal-tender paper money of the country, and the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. MARTIN] to demonetize it wholly is in perfect harmony with the bill. It is germane to it and more creditable to its author, for it is frank and manly, and can be understood by all.

Though the bill and amendment mean the same thing, the committee reporting the measure prefer to introduce the thin end of the wedge first, making the greenback unfit to redeem more than one-half the notes and other obligations of the national banks; then it will be excluded wholly from bank reserves; and, rejected by bankers, it will be easy to demonetize and destroy it. Then the triumph of these chartered corporations will be complete; the people will have surrendered their most sacred rights to usurpers, and our Republic will be such only in name.

As the law now stands, the banks may keep all their reserves in coin if they prefer; so this bill is not to increase their privileges. It simply accomplishes what they are all struggling for, the degradation of the greenback, creating a new market and an exclusive use for coin, and imposing new limitations upon greenbacks.

We have tried this before. The greenback was created with degrading limitations. The Government that issued it refused to accept it for duties—repudiated its own money at every custom-house for about seventeen years, when our present Secretary of the Treasury, without law or authority, commenced on January 1, 1879, to honor and receive it. From that moment, because of that act, greenbacks at once took their legitimate place as the best money in the land, preferred even by importers, and actually commanding a premium over gold in many parts of our country. The original ruinous exceptions to the legal-tender qualities of the greenback have cost the country more than the whole war debt by its depreciation; and shall we, after such experience, try to reopen the gold-gambling rooms by imposing new limitations upon our money at this late day? Experience has been a dear teacher, and yet the Banking and Currency Committee of this House have already succeeded in forgetting it.

Nearly $800,000,000 of United States bonds will become redeemable during this and next year. The leader of the republican side of the House [Mr. GARFIELD] has already introduced a bill to refund all these bonds into others that cannot be paid for a generation, (for thirty years,) no matter how great our resources. The leader of the democratic side of this House, [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD,] wishing to go one better than his republican competitor, introduced a bill to refund these bonds into new ones which cannot be paid for fifty years. Neither party proposes to pay one dollar of these bonds out of the mountain of coin (over $200,000,000) in the Treasury, which the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency [Mr. BUCKNER] says "is now performing no service either to the Government or people." This sum can be indefinitely increased before pay-day; but, lest the people should discover the fraud, the lack of a single excuse for these refunding schemes, and demand the payment and destruction of these cancerous bonds, that their children may be freemen, some step is necessary to reduce the coin in the Treasury, if possible, before the bonds mature. This bill is that step, as its author [Mr. BUCKNER] admits in these words:

"I introduced this bill at the extra session, or one very similar to it, and my purpose was to unload the Treasury of a portion of its immense hoards of gold and silver."

In case it becomes a law the banks will exchange their greenbacks for coin at the Treasury, if not immediately, certainly as soon as their present stock of coin is withdrawn by an unfavorable balance of trade. Thus the greenbacks will be driven into the Treasury, and as effectually retired as if burned; not put into circulation as the advocates of this measure claim, and the coin will be hidden in the vaults of banks when pay-day comes. The syndicate vultures will then proceed to quietly fasten the shackles of a perpetual debt upon the people, mortgaging to capitalists the labor of succeeding generations, perpetuating and strengthening an untaxed aristocracy that already claims greater power than this Government, and boldly attacks the very principles upon which it was founded. The title of this bill should be, A bill to create a market for coin, to depreciate the greenback, and prevent the payment of the public debt. It is a shot from a masked battery at every interest of the people. How long do you imagine they will submit to such tactics by which bondholders and bankers would still further rob and degrade them by continuing and intrenching that sum of all financial villainies, a perpetual interest-bearing debt with the national-bank monopoly resting thereon?

Henry Clay, describing the country in 1816, in a speech "on the bank question," said "he beheld dispersed over the immense domain of the United States about three hundred banking institutions. These institutions were emitting the actual currency of the United States, a currency consisting of paper, on which they neither paid interest nor principal, while it was exchanged for paper of the community on which both were paid. He saw these institutions in fact exercising what had been considered at all times and in all countries one of the highest attributes of sovereignty, the regulation of the current medium of the country." Had Henry Clay been describing the condition of our country to-day he need have changed only one figure. Instead of a paltry three hundred banking institutions he would have said he beheld dispersed over the immense domain of the United States over two thousand banking institutions emitting the actual currency of the United States, on which they neither paid interest nor principal, while it was exchanged for paper of the community on which both were paid; in fact, exercising what had been considered at all times and in all countries one of the highest attributes of sovereignty.

It is time for alarm when this bold measure is introduced to strengthen this usurping and powerful monopoly. It is time for alarm when these two thousand odd corporations, having already entire control over the volume of our currency, and hence over the price of labor and its products, are daily not only strengthening their grip upon the people by rapidly inflating their currency, but are reaching out through this bill to possess the whole field, impatient that the people have any share in the circulation. Already they own the officers of our Government. The President, Secretary of the Treasury, the Superintendent of the Mint, the Comptroller of the Currency, whom they have actually made an honorary member of their bank association without a protest from him, are but their willing tools. When they speak to the people, by message or report, it is the voice and words of the national banks we hear. Every day brings new evidence of the fact that this administration in all its branches is sold out to this arch enemy of republican institutions, that is everywhere proclaiming that the people cannot be trusted with their own most important affairs, but must be turned over entirely to the tender mercies of these self-appointed guardians, whose only interest is self-interest.

A leading member of the republican side of this House, who is famous for his devotion to the national banks, said just after the President's late message, "There won't be a greenback left in this country in six years." This bill is a response to the President's message, and in accord with the prophecy just quoted. Either the greenbacks or the national-bank notes must go, and that at no distant day. The greenback stands to-day the sheet-anchor of this Republic. It represents the honor, the majesty, the independence from foreign and domestic usurers of the people of the United States. It is our Fort Sumter, and the rebels of Wall street have surrounded it, and this bill is their first shot. It will arouse and alarm the country, and the enemies of the people will be overwhelmed by the Grand Army of the Republic, under the battle-cry, "Greenbacks and victory!"

The only difference in the councils of those who propose in six years to destroy every greenback is as to the most favorable time and manner. Some say now. Others say wait until we are re-elected. Some say make open war upon it. Others say attack it in the night under disguise, lest the people be alarmed. The councils of the latter have prevailed in this bill.

How has this bill been managed on this floor? The members of the committee have taken four or five hours of our time, all in its favor, and allowed only a little over a half hour for its opponents to reply, showing a dogmatic purpose to crush out opposition to their measures.

I see by the morning papers that an effort was made yesterday by prominent members of this Banking and Currency Committee—which fortunately was unsuccessful—to postpone the consideration of all financial measures before the committee, including even the President's message, referred to them by the House for their report, until next December, after the presidential campaign. This is a President-making Congress with a vengeance! The leading members of the old parties trying to put an extinguisher on the people, trying to smother the bills that have been referred to them by their representatives on this floor, willing to violate every obligation and their own oaths by neglecting their duties as members of one of the most important committees in this House, because they dare not take sides with the people, and dare not take sides against them in favor of the national banks until December next, after they are re-elected. I see with shame that a colleague of mine, representing a district of Iowa, favored this measure. This same gentleman, [Mr.

PRICE,] who in the beginning of this session hastened to introduce a resolution condemning the President's proposal to destroy the greenbacks and condemning "any agitation of the financial question at this time," was, strange to say, the first man on this floor to make a speech on the subject, in which he agitated every controverted point in the currency question in a most flippant manner.

He denied the acts of Congress, the decision of the Supreme Court, Webster's Dictionary, and every other authority, by affirming that the greenback is not nor can be money, in these words: "There is no paper money, and under our Constitution never can be." His committee, too, was the first one in this session to introduce a bill to change our whole financial system, and he not only favored the bill, but, I understand, has heretofore himself introduced one of similar import. To be sure, he eulogized the greenback to quiet the nerves of the people, while his committee, with his co-operation, try to give it a death-thrust. The friends of the banks loudly deprecate agitation unless they are the agitators. "Let us have no tinkering with the finances," they say; then proceed more zealously than ever to tinker the banks up and the greenbacks down. "Let us have peace on this money question," they insist; then introduce bills like the one under discussion to knock out the corner-stone of our monetary system. Away with such insults to the people! Away with such mockery, such hypocrisy! There is an irrepressible conflict between the banks and the people, as much so as between freedom and slavery, for it is a conflict between freedom and slavery, and no temporizing, no compromising, no deception will be tolerated. The war is inevitable, and let it come! The issues are made up in this bill. The little party of the center, with the people behind them, ask for no delay, demand no quarter; for with truth and justice one man can chase a thousand, and two can put ten thousand to flight.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN OHIO.

Mr. CONVERSE. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House on yesterday non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 582) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Columbus, Ohio, and transferring certain counties from the northern to the southern district in said State, and asked for a committee of conference thereon.

BANK RESERVES.

Mr. BUCKNER. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WEAVER.]

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I desire for a few moments to notice the real purpose and effect of this bill. It requires very tersely every banking association to keep in gold or silver coins of the United States one-half of the reserve fund now required by law. What are silver coins of the United States? The 412½-grain dollar, subsidiary coins, and the trade-dollar are all silver coins of the United States. The first is a full legal tender, the second only to the extent of $5, and the trade-dollar, although a coin of the United States, is not a legal tender in any amount whatever. And yet, if this bill becomes a law, the national banks may keep their entire coin reserve in subsidiary coin or trade-dollars, or in both; so that by this bill these debased silver coins are exalted above the greenback which is a legal tender for all amounts. Again, to the extent that this bill requires the banks to keep gold and silver coin as a lawful money reserve it prohibits the keeping of greenbacks for such purpose, and is a discrimination against the greenback and inimical to the interests of the people. No one is so blind as not to see this.

We heard something from the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHITTENDEN] about our standard silver coins, which he styles "clipped" dollars. He sneered also at the greenback, saying it was "a popular snare and an evil device." The dollar of 412½ grains is a "clipped" dollar, in the estimation of the gentleman from New York, when you want to pay the bondholder, who had solemnly contracted to take it for his bond. But when the same bondholder and banker wishes to pay off his national-bank notes held by the common people, then a "clipped" dollar, a subsidiary dollar, or a trade-dollar is good enough for that purpose, and he accordingly supports this bill. [Applause.]

Sir, this is a most iniquitous discrimination against the people and in favor of the bondholder. It is the same old obnoxious class legislation over and over again.

The gentleman from New York says that the greenback is corrupting and destroying individual honesty and public virtue. Nothing could possibly be farther from the truth than such a declaration. The greenback is the only reliable dollar in America to-day. It stays at home, and is always as good as gold. There is absolutely neither sincerity nor truth in that plea; none whatever.

We owe, says the gentleman, three hundred and forty-six millions of legal-tender war debt. I beg to remind him of the fact that on the 30th of May, 1878, Congress passed a law that the three hundred and forty-six millions of greenbacks should be kept in circulation, and thus the greenback became the perpetual legal-tender money of this country. They may be a debt in their present form, but they have been made by law perpetual legal-tender money. The gentleman says Mr. Lincoln approved the act February 25, 1862, because there was no other resource; that "it was the fiat of the Government to save the nation's life." Mr. Lincoln did approve it for the very reason stated. Gold, silver, and the Shylocks of the country failed the Government in the hour of its trial, and we were compelled to resort to legal-tender paper. It was the fiat of the Government to save the nation's life; and the same fiat is doubly necessary to-day to save the liberties of the people. But he says, the Government cannot create legal-tender paper.

A lawyer once said to an Irishman who had been placed in the stocks for some minor offense, "They can't put you in the stocks for such an offense." "They can't?" said the man, "but you see I am here already." [Laughter.] The Government has made legal-tender money, and it has been sustained on the broadest constitutional principles by the Supreme Court. But the gentleman sustains his doctrine that you can make legal-tender money, by the story of the descendant of Roger Sherman; a boy who bought a dog, and lost him, and then piled up an enormous debt to recover him again. The boy desired to convert his indebtedness into legal-tender money. Let me tell you that if there was any Sherman blood in that boy's veins he would never have wanted anything of the kind. He would have gone to his cousin, the head of the Treasury Department, where he would have received this advice: "Deposit your dog with me, get him exempted from tax, then draw 90 per cent. of his value and go into the banking business, and I will keep your dog free from expense to you, and will stamp a gold-bearing coupon, payable quarterly, on that dog's ears and on every inch of his tail." [Laughter.]

But, says the gentleman, "Tell me what is right and I will show you the law for it." That is a very fine maxim. Let me tell the gentleman that it is right to preserve the liberties of the people, and we will show you a law for it. The issue fairly before the people is this: Shall we have in this country legal-tender paper issued by the Government, or shall the people depend upon banking corporations for their circulating medium? Shall the Government or the banking corporations control the volume of the currency? Let gentlemen meet that issue fairly and squarely. The issue is between the corporations and the people. Shall we depend upon banking corporations for the volume of our currency, and in that way give the banks the control of all values in this Republic?

The House will recollect how furious the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHITTENDEN] appeared when he spoke of the soldier bill. You remember he stooped over and shook his little fist in my innocent face! His speech, fury, and clenched fist, reminded me of the old rhyme:

Two magpies sat on the garden wall
An hour or two together;
At first they talked of nothing at all,
And then they talked of the weather,
When, drawing into a fist his little claw hand,
Says this magpie, "Upon my word,
This is more than flesh and blood can stand,
Or magpie or any other bird."

[Laughter.]

The gentleman goes into hysterics the very moment he mentions the soldiers' bill. He regards it as an assault upon the peculiar interests which he represents. But he is not the only gentleman who is seriously annoyed by it. A very distinguished gentleman, a citizen of the State of Illinois, a distinguished ex-soldier and philologist, said on the 20th day of this month, in a speech made not very far from this Chamber, (see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, January 21, page 4,) that the bill introduced by General WEAVER into the House of Representatives to equalize the pay of soldiers was the worst piece of "demagogy"—"demagogy" is good—ever introduced into an American Congress.

Mr. HAWLEY. And he was perfectly right.

Mr. WEAVER. No doubt the gentleman who classes the greenbackers as among the rag-tag and bobtail of the country would say that that was perfectly right. The country, however, is not prepared to take any such declaration as that from the citizen JOHN A. LOGAN, a man who voted for the back-salary grab, and then put $3,800 into his pocket as his part of the swag. Any such man as that, one would naturally suppose, would be opposed to doing justice to the soldier.

I understand that the gentleman from the first congressional district of Missouri has recently written a letter in which he says, that the author of the soldiers' bill is not in earnest, and that the bill will not pass. Sir, let me say that the author of that bill and the more than five hundred thousand men who stand behind him were never more in earnest than now. They were not more earnest when storming the heights of Fort Donelson or fighting the bloody battles of Shiloh, Gettysburgh, and the Wilderness. And this House must give the relief asked for, or these men will send a Congress here that will grant them their prayer.

My colleague from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] in his speech to the House a few days ago told us that we must let well enough alone. He is, in fact, the author of a resolution that we shall not agitate this question any further before Congress. He holds up his flag of truce and commands silence until he gets the currency reformers in the right position, and then he violates his flag of truce himself, and fires upon us from every stand-point, from every controverted position.

He told us that France had $426,000,000 of silver money, and 60 per cent. more than that of gold. That would give France $19 per capita in gold, $12 in silver, and she has $12 per capita in paper, making in all $43 per captia for the entire population, while in this country we have not to-day $8 per capita in actual circulation, although we have a population 50 per cent. greater than France, and an area of territory eighteen times larger than the territory of that country.

My colleague has occupied every sign in the zodiac upon this question of finance, and no man can tell from what he said in his speech whether he favors this bill or is opposed to it. I have read the speech carefully, but am unable to determine.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. COX.) The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PHISTER. As the gentleman represents on this floor a minority, who have not had a chance to present their views fully, I hope that by unanimous consent he may be allowed fifteen minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Any extension of time must come out of the time of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BUCKNER.]

Mr. BUCKNER. I want to dispose of this bill to-day. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. WHITTHORNE.]

Mr. WHITTHORNE. As the gentleman from Missouri gives me ten minutes, I will yield four minutes of my time to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WEAVER.]

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman. My colleague [Mr. PRICE] stands recorded in the proceedings of this House as having voted for the Bland bill. That was a bill for free, unrestricted coinage of silver. He also stands recorded at the extra session of this Congress as voting against the passage of the Warner bill, which was in substance the same as the Bland bill. Now, how he can reconcile his votes on these two measures I cannot understand, nor can they be explained, for the reason that they are absolutely contradictory. Nor can I understand how the gentleman can justify himself before this House and before the country. Let him explain if he can. Why should not this country have as much money as France? In material resources, population, and extent of territory we are vastly her superior. But my colleague [Mr. PRICE] lauds the greenback!

There is one thing I do not want him to do. He must not try to crawl into bed with the greenbackers without first taking off his republican boots and overcoat. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will refuse to pass this bill—will recognize it as a serious attack upon the greenback, and an attempt to degrade the best curreney we have, to a place even below the subsidiary silver dollar and the trade-dollar. The bill is calculated to take the greenback out of the reach of the people and place it in the hands of those who will hoard it. Under the law as it now stands they cannot do this as well as they could desire. The people have some little protection. But if this bill becomes a law they will be largely deprived of the legal-tender paper dollar. It will disappear from circulation. It is not the intention of men who have coin to sell to put the greenback in circulation. They are the enemies of the greenback. It is their intention to retire it from circulation—nothing else.

Mr. Speaker, the attempt has been made in this House since the assembling of Congress to suppress the discussion of the financial question. It cannot be done. The pressure is from without. It comes from the people, who are masters of the situation. They are discussing it in every village and hamlet, in every public meeting, in the workshops, and even in the churches, [laughter;] and they will continue to discuss it until it is settled in their behalf.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was about being put upon its passage some days since I sought the floor and made the statement that we were about to pass a bill the full scope and purpose of which were not comprehended. The more I have looked at the bill the more I am disposed to regard it as a Trojan horse. In my judgment it discriminates against the legal-tender note—a portion of the lawful money of the United States at the present time.

Let me turn for a moment to the existing law so that we may understand what is meant to be done or what will be accomplished by this bill. By reference to the law this requirement will be found:

Every national-banking association in either of the following cities: Albany, Baltimore, Boston, Cincinnati, Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit, Louisville, Milwaukee, New Orleans, New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Saint Louis, San Francisco, and Washington, shall at all times have on hand, in lawful money of the United States, an amount equal to at least 25 per cent. of the aggregate amount of its notes in circulation and its deposits; and every other association shall at all times have on hand, in lawful money of the United States, an amount equal to at least 15 per cent. of the aggregate amount of its notes in circulation, and of its deposits.

Now this bill proposes—

That the national bank act be, and it is hereby, so amended as to require every banking association to keep in gold and silver coins of the United States one-half of the reserve fund now required by law.

Mr. BUCKNER. The gentleman does not understand the law.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Under the existing law, as I understand it, the security for the holder of the note of a national bank is in the credit of the Government. If to-day a national bank suspends, and for any reason becomes insolvent, the note-holder cannot claim a single dollar of the lawful money of the bank in reserve, unless he does so at the termination of the receiver's work. He would have to go, and under existing laws would go, to the Secretary of the Treasury for the redemption of national-bank notes. Now we come to inquire as to this reserve. It is intended, if for anything, under the national-bank law, as security for safe business to be done by the banks, for safety in the business of the banks, and to prevent too much discount and unnecessary and wild speculation. You propose right here under this bill to take away from the lawful money of the United States a part of its high character. Under existing law any national bank of the country can have its reserve altogether either in silver or in gold, or in greenbacks, or legal-tender notes. You come here by this bill and propose to say you shall or may have under the law all in gold, or all in silver, but you shall not have but one-half of it in greenbacks or legal-tenders. That is the plain English of this bill.

I repeat it, sir, under this new bill you may have all the lawful reserve either in silver or gold, but you may and shall not have it all in legal-tender notes. That is the plain English of it; and will any gentleman of common sense say to me that it is not a drive at legal-tender notes? It is the entering-wedge, and intended, in my judgment, to be the entering-wedge, to the total discredit of the greenbacks of the country. Are we ready for such a contingency? Is the business of the country ready for it?

Gentlemen say, "Let well enough alone." I respond, "Let well enough alone." Let us pause right here in this era or day of prosperity and inquire what caused it to be brought about. Has it been because of accumulation of gold and silver? Having gone through an era of extravagance, a time of speculation, a period of high taxes, has that speculation given us any relief? Have high taxes given us any relief? But has it not been, on the contrary, because we have come right down to hard pan, and because the labor of the country has stripped its brawny arm and gone to work, and because the products of the earth have come to the relief of the country—has it not been because of this we have found prosperity has visited our land? And will we in the next twelve months be blessed with the seasons of plenty we have already had? Will famine visit other portions of the earth as it has in the last two years? Shall we be blessed with the same good fortune the next two years that we have seen in the past two? If so, we could then tell whether it would be necessary and proper to make any change in our existing currency laws. What this country needs, what our currency needs, is stability as much as convertibility. Mr. Speaker, stability is necessary to healthy trade, and that benefit is to be secured, not by reliance on the national banks and their stockholders, but it is to be secured by the common good sense of the people as against these men, whose interest, if not at present, may be in conflict with that of the Government and the people. What shall be money should always be the sovereign right of the Government to determine, and should never be delegated to any person or corporation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the painful regret expressed by the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency [Mr. BUCKNER] yesterday in reference to the matter of members indulging in irrelevant debate, we have been obliged to-day to listen to a great deal more of that kind of debate. But I wish to give a reason or two in the moment I have to occupy the floor why I shall vote against this bill. I shall not be in harmony with some gentlemen who have spoken against the bill here to-day.

First, let me say when this bill first came before the House for consideration the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] having charge of it told us in substance that the bill was to have no effect at all upon the country. He took pains as long ago, I believe, as the 14th of January, to demonstrate, by putting into the RECORD a table, that there was coin enough now in all the banks of this country to meet the requirements of this bill. We were then to be soothed with the idea that we were to make no draught upon the reserve coin in the Treasury except to secure resumption. He then assured the House we were engaged in harmless if not useless legislation. That was the burden of his speech, and he demonstrated then that there was more coin already in possession of the national banks than was essential for the coin reserve required by this bill. But yesterday, to our surprise, he told us that he introduced this bill at the extra session, or one very similar to it, and he further said:

But my purpose was to unload the Treasury of a portion of its immense hoards of gold and silver for the purpose of diffusing them among the banks and the people.

But, Mr. Speaker, when we read the bill, we find the sole effect of it is to put the padlock of the law on $50,000,000 of the coin of the United States, that the people cannot reach under any process known to the country. The effect of the bill is to lock up, in round numbers, $50,000,000 of coin that the people cannot reach under any circumstances. The coin reserve required to be kept in the sixteen principal cities of this country, where they are required to keep in "lawful money of the United States" a sum equal to 25 per cent. of their circulation and bank deposits, and in the other banks of the country, in like lawful money, 15 per cent. of their outstanding circulation and deposits, which reserves aggregate, in round numbers, $100,000,000—we are, then, Mr. Speaker, by this bill to say that one-half of that large aggregate is to be locked up in the banks, where it is not to be reached at all. It is to be absolutely withdrawn from circulation.

We are, it is true, to turn out instead $50,000,000 of greenbacks. What for? Do the people want them? I venture to say there has not been a petition presented to this House or to the Senate, asking that these greenbacks shall be turned out and taken from the reserves of the banks—not a single one.

We are here taking up time in trying to legislate upon a subject that is not demanded by the wants of the country or by the wishes of the country anywhere. And what is the real design and purpose of this bill? If not the design, what will be the real effect of it? Not to use up, as I understand it, for we ought not to do that, the amount of coin that is now in the banks for the use of the people whenever they go to the banks to get it; not to take up the coin in the pockets of the people, for they need that for their own uses and will be likely to hold on to it, but to compel the banks to go to the Treasury of the United States and to draw from the fund now there $50,000,000 of the coin reserve, to lock it up so that it cannot be made available for securing permanent or continuing resumption. This is the whole scheme and design of this bill. It is unwise, and I trust no man who believes in the doctrine of having paper money and gold and silver coin abreast will vote for it. I also trust all those who believe resumption is, will, and should be maintained will vote against this bill. Not only do you take by this $50,000,000 in coin from the Treasury vaults of the United States and lock it up, not permitting it to be used for the purposes of securing resumption—not only do you do that, but you turn out $50,000,000 of the paper money of the country now held in reserve by national banks, and make it available to be used in an emergency by opponents of resumption for presentation for redemption.

The bill enacted into a law withdraws $50,000,000 of coin necessary to be used for the purposes of resumption and substitutes therefor $50,000,000 of paper money to be presented everywhere and at any time for redemption.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is not good financial policy in this country, or at least it is in the face of what is usually regarded as good financiering in any country. There should be a great center where coin is accumulated so as to strengthen the power which has the responsibility of carrying out the policy of resumption. It has been the policy of Great Britain and it has been the policy here when we acted wisely, and until very recently it has been the policy of the democratic party also.

I remember very well in the last national campaign in this country the gentleman who had the distinguished honor of being selected as the standard-bearer of democracy arraigned the party in power, the republican party, for not providing for a reserve of coin in order to procure resumption of specie payment upon the legal-tender notes issued by the Government. I have here his exact language:

> The amount of the legal-tender notes of the United States now outstanding is less than $370,000,000, besides $24,000,000 of fractional currency. How shall the Government make these notes at all times as good as specie? It has to provide, in reference to the mass which would be kept in use by the wants of business, a central reservoir of coin, adequate to the adjustment of the temporary fluctuations of international balances, and as a guarantee against transient drains artificially created by panic or by speculation.

This I have read from Mr. Tilden's letter of acceptance. It lays down the true doctrine on this question, and the one the republican party adopted when the time came to act in the matter of carrying out the resumption act of January 14, 1875.

Mr. Tilden complained that a "reservoir of coin" was not provided several years before the resumption law was to take effect. The republican party was satisfied to provide one only when it was needed. Let us not destroy it, now that we have resumption with its good results in the revival of business, restoration of business confidence, &c.

I might read more from this letter of acceptance, but my time is too short. The proposed legislation is a direct thrust at the Treasury and at the power of the Government to maintain resumption, and we learned yesterday for the first time, from the distinguished gentleman who has charge of this bill, that it was so designed; for he then said it was to take the coin out of the Treasury of the United States, and, for fear that the money should be used as we now use the reserve provided for the national banks, he then offered an amendment to the bill which requires the money to be locked up in the vaults of the several national banks in the country. As the law is now, three-fifths of the reserve of the country banks may be kept in the cities which are selected as depositories for the redemption of the circulating notes of the banks. That is no longer to be done, so far as the coin reserve, which will be required to be kept by this proposed legislation, is concerned. It changes and alters the entire national-banking system, so far as the reserves are concerned. We shall no longer keep any portion of this one-half coin in any of the cities selected for the purpose of deposits in order to secure the redemption of the circulating notes of the banks. There are eighteen of these cities in this country. Of these eighteen, seventeen may, under certain circumstances, select banks in the city of New York where they may keep a portion of their reserves, and thus make available for business purposes a large amount of money as required now to be kept under the present law.

Let me say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, as the law now stands every bank, if it is wise, or if necessary, will keep coin as a part of its reserves. These banks are required to keep their reserves in lawful money of the United States. The lawful money of this country is defined by the statutes to be gold and silver coin, United States Treasury notes, and demand Treasury notes for the purpose of the banking law of the country. I think that the passage of this bill would be the first great blow at the established policy of this country, that policy that has been so wisely undertaken and so successfully maintained, namely: the policy of resumption of specie payment after it had been so long suspended.

Mr. BUCKNER. I demand the previous question upon the bill.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on the amendment offered, which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> In line 4 of the first section, after the word "keep," insert the words "in their vaults;" so as to make it read:
> That the national-bank act be, and it is hereby, so amended as to require every banking association to keep in their vaults in gold or silver coins of the United States one-half of the reserve funds now required by law.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 35, noes 79.

Mr. BUCKNER. A quorum has not voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. COX in the chair.) A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] and the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. KEIFER.]

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 33, noes 73.

Mr. BUCKNER. I do not call for further count.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurred on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time; and being put, there were—ayes 30, noes 140.

Mr. BUCKNER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 47 members voting therefor.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 80, nays 158, not voting 53; as follows:

So the House refused to order the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCKENZIE] is paired with Mr. HUBBELL, of Michigan. Mr. MCKENZIE is confined to his room by sickness.

Mr. WAIT. Mr. JOYCE, of Vermont, is detained from the House by illness, and has been for two or three days past.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am paired with Mr. HERBERT, of Alabama.

Mr. STONE. I am paired with the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. MONEY.] If he were here, I should vote "no."

Mr. CALKINS. On this question I am paired with Mr. MANNING, of Mississippi. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. HARMER. Mr. FISHER, of Pennsylvania, is paired with Mr. BERRY, of California.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WARD, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 3108) amending the charter of the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of the District of Columbia.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to make a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. COX in the chair.) The gentleman from Kentucky was recognized by the Chair.

The motion of Mr. BLACKBURN was agreed to.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. CARLISLE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole resumes the consideration of the report from the Committee on Rules. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ROBESON. Mr. Chairman, in accordance with an arrangement which I feel called upon to fulfill, I yield eight minutes of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. OSCAR TURNER.]

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. Mr. Chairman, I did not desire to trespass on the time of the committee upon this question; but inasmuch as a part of the time that was allotted to the Committee on Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River was taken up by gentlemen on the other side I have concluded to offer a few remarks explanatory of the motives of our committee in offering the amendment proposed by Mr. ROBINSON. And I will take occasion right here to say that there was no intention on the part of any member of the Committee on Levee Improvements to cast any reflection upon the Committee on Commerce, much less upon my distinguished friend the chairman of that committee, General REAGAN, of Texas. We all entertain for him the highest regard as a legislator—I know that I do personally—and would not reflect upon him in any way. But, sir, the question that we wanted to present to the Committee of the Whole was this: that the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River and of its tributaries was a question so momentous and involving so much labor that the Committee on Commerce had not the necessary time to devote to that specific subject. We thought that the House ought to act in accordance and in analogy with the precedent that has been set heretofore in regard to the Committee on Pacific Railroads. It is well known that we have the Committee on Railways and Canals, which had a general jurisdiction coextensive with the Union; but notwithstanding that when these railroads to the Pacific were projected a new Committee on the Pacific Railroad was formed in this House on account of the magnitude of the work and the labor which would be required in investigations of a proper character.

Mr. Chairman, appropriations have been made for many years without any general plan by which the navigation of the Mississippi and its navigable tributaries were permanently improved; appropriations have been made for this point and that, as the popularity of a member might secure them, under a log-rolling system, in harbor and river improvement bills, passed under a suspension of the rules without debate, in many instances appropriating public money to unimportant streams which I have not the time to refer to in my limited time. I refer to the defects in this system of improvements on the tributaries of the Mississippi as it has been carried on for many years, because it comes within my own knowledge and sad experience to know something about the matter, and because the people whom I have the honor to represent on this floor have felt the want of a proper and judicious plan of improvement of the Ohio River.

The amount of money which has been appropriated to the improvement of this river, which is the natural outlet of the larger portion of the agricultural products of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, and Kentucky, might as well have been thrown into it, with but few exceptions. Small amounts have been appropriated to improve such particular points as could be secured by the influence of Representatives, with no view to any general or judicious system, but more to drop a few thousand dollars at a particular locality than to accomplish any general good.

Mr. Chairman, I will give you an illustration of what I mean. In the district which I represent is the city of Paducah, at the mouth of the Tennessee River, the emporium of Southern Kentucky and a part of West Tennessee, one of the best manufacturing points west of the Alleghany Mountains, with an inexhaustible amount of iron, coal, and timber just above on the Ohio, Cumberland, and Tennessee Rivers, all of which could be utilized and made to add to the general wealth and prosperity of the country; and besides this Paducah is surrounded by the finest tobacco-growing country in the United States, and is the second largest tobacco market west of the mountains, and yet we have been forced, poor as we are, to build railroads at our own expense, with no subsidies from the Federal Government, and at an immense and ruinous cost to our people, to remove the products of honest labor and to give us intercourse with other points on the rivers.

And why is this? Nature has given us the Ohio as a great highway, the Tennessee and Cumberland empty into the Ohio at our very doors, and we are only fifty miles from the mighty Mississippi; and yet, Mr. Chairman, we are debarred of these great natural commercial advantages because there is a ledge of rocks in the river called the Grand Chain, and one bar just above the mouth of the river, locking in not only our commerce, but the whole commerce of the States lying on the Ohio, Cumberland, and Tennessee by reducing the water at these points to 30 inches in the summer months, and forcing us to resort to railroads, with their high and extravagant rates of carriage, which swallow up the profits of the farmers and the artisans of our country. These barriers would not block a single harbor in the Northern States twelve months. The money would have been appropriated to remove them as soon as it was suggested, as the appropriation annually of millions to northern harbors shows.

Mr. Chairman, allow me to say something here in reply to an observation which was made by my distinguished friend from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] who said that there had been a spirit of liberality exhibited toward the Mississippi River and its tributaries by the Committee on Commerce. I desire to invite the attention of this House for a few moments to that matter. Since those improvements commenced we have had appropriated for that purpose only $7,000,000, while over $200,000,000 have been appropriated for the improvement of northern harbors and unimportant rivers. Now let us look at the equity and justice of this thing.

In 1878 the State of Kentucky paid over $6,000,000 into the Treasury, as shown by the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which I have here. The district, part of which I have the honor to represent, paid about $1,000,000 into the Treasury in that year.

I will refer to the amount paid into the Federal Treasury by States along the Ohio River since 1863. Illinois has paid $233,673,726.50, Kentucky has paid $101,012,299.47, Indiana $72,664,558.61, and the great State of Ohio $246,397,075.46 of internal revenue since 1863. As I have said, Kentucky in the last twelve months reported by the Commissioner has paid $6,880,614.15 into the Federal Treasury, which is more than double the amount paid by all the New England States in the same length of time.

Now, what have we had in return? It is true that we have not been urgent in our claims before Congress; but when gentlemen talk about the equity and justice that have been meted out to us I must say that I cannot see it. I do not contend that we ought to have improvements in proportion to the revenue which we pay; but it does seem to me that these facts ought to enter into the consideration of the question when we ask for an appropriation.

I shall vote to give entire jurisdiction over the subject of the improvement of the Mississippi River and its navigable tributaries to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of Mississippi River, but have no objection to the supervision of the report by the Committee on Appropriations, to regulate the amount annually; for I am opposed to any extravagant or useless appropriations for this or any other purpose, and only advocate giving the jurisdiction to this committee because I believe it will utilize such appropriations as are annually made, and will be in the interest of retrenchment and reform.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROBESON. I rise to speak upon this subject, Mr. Chairman, with a consciousness that I am ignorant utterly of details, and therefore shall confine the few remarks I make to the discussion of general principles. I shall endeavor to be as compact as possible in the presentation of my ideas, feeling that it is proper that the committee having charge of this subject should have control of all the time that is left for general debate.

By the experience of ages, and the common consent of all intelligent men, rules are found to be necessary to the proper transaction of business in all large assemblies of men. The tendency of large bodies of men is always to excitement. Individual feeling grows by contact and association, and without the restraints of settled rules and organized systems, legislative assemblies would not be deliberative bodies, but would be liable to be swayed by the interests and the passions of the hour.

We often feel that rules are inconvenient, and I have heard it said more than once on this floor that they served only as means of obstruction. Mr. Chairman, they should be obstructive, for more than one-half the business which is thrown upon this House should never be transacted at all, and more than one-half of the remainder should not be passed until it is systematized and reduced in the alembic of deliberation through the slow processes prescribed by the rules.

Business should be analyzed by committees, generalized by reports, molded in the heat of debate, and cooled by the slow processes of the rules until the crude ore of governmental policy comes out of the furnace of legislation not only with the structure but with the temper that will make it enduring and useful. All good is produced by slow processes. Everything that is valuable in the productions of the human mind comes from thought and continuous labor. The easy and spontaneous productions of nature fade away like the snow before the morning sun; but the enduring structure and imperial essence of adamant are produced by the gigantic forces of nature through the processes of unnumbered ages.

Mr. Chairman, we all owe our thanks to this Committee on Rules. From an incongruous and incomprehensible mass they have deduced a system compact, simple, clear, and congruous. It is easily seen that they brought to their investigation the wisdom of mature years, the knowledge gathered by long experience, comprehensive philosophy, energy, industry and capacity. I do not say that their results are in every respect perfect. I think them faulty in one or two particulars. Let us reform those particulars if we can; but if we cannot, gentlemen of the American Congress, let us not fail to take them as they are. They are a vast improvement on anything that we have ever had, and amended or not amended they are broad in their compass, wise in their system, compact in their structure, and understandable in their details, and they are an immense improvement on anything we can hope to have if we reject them.

Mr. Chairman, the business of the country to be transacted in a great assembly like this must of course be committed to committees for examination, digestion, organization, and accomplishment. The general business of Congress divides itself naturally into three classes: first, legislation; second, revenue; third, appropriations. First, legislation for the purpose of doing the business of the country, for carrying on the Government, for securing the rights which that Government guarantees to its citizens, and for the progress and development of the country. These three general propositions include within their compass all the subject-matters of general legislation. The second class comprises the subject-matter of the revenue—the means by which the money of the country is to be raised and collected from the people and the property of the country. The next and final division is, naturally, the appropriation of that money. Let me repeat—first, the requirements of legislation; second, the raising of the money; third, the application of that money.

It is not possible, Mr. Chairman, for any one committee to do all this business. No one committee can investigate and understand everything necessary and proper to originate legislation to raise the money for it, and to divide and appropriate that money. Therefore this House is divided into sub-committees to each of which is committed a portion of its business. These sub-committees are divided into three general classes, corresponding to the divisions I have indicated. To the great departmental committees and those of like nature are committed the legislation for the maintenance of the Departments, and for carrying on the business of the country. To them is committed the investigation, the digestion, the organization, and accomplishment of that business; and to them it should be left. They are specially delegated with those duties; they are specially clothed with those powers. They give to the different subjects special investigation and special study. By long continuance of service on particular committees, they acquire a knowledge of systems and of details; and it is only by leaving legislation to them that you can have a settled and harmonious policy in any department of the Government.

Wise economy is brought about by system and settled policy; and you can have no really economical service in any department unless you have a committee which year after year and session after session, as long as the party which they represent dominates in the country, establishes a settled and continuous policy which can be worked out from its base to its consummation.

I have said, Mr. Chairman, that in the body of rules which this committee have reported I find one or two departures from system. I find that while generally they give the subjects of legislation to the appropriate committees, and while they give to the Committee of Ways and Means its appropriate duty of raising the revenue, yet they give to the Committee on Appropriations not only the power of appropriation in all cases, but in some cases the power of legislation also. This is a departure from the science of their system, and so far a mistake. I do not believe that the various committees to whom is intrusted the legislation of this country should also be intrusted with the appropriation of the money, because this last I hold to be the province of the Appropriations Committee—a committee which not only adds, multiplies, and subtracts, as my friend from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] said yesterday, but a committee which must investigate, understand, and take into consideration the results of the action of all the other committees.

They must examine work of the Congress as a whole. They must take into consideration what are the requirements of each particular department as represented by its appropriate committees; what are the means supplied by the Ways and Means Committee, and looking over the whole field, and aggregating and considering the whole system, they must determine what it is wise to appropriate to each particular object. Not the objects, but how much can be appropriated to each. No individual committee, which has in hand only the interests of its own business, can possibly know what are the results of the work of all the other committees. This is not their province, and it is not expected of them. Therefore it is that this Appropriations Committee is necessary. It is a sort of universal solvent that deals with the results of the action of all other organized committees, and puts them in a systematic policy, for which the party which they represent is responsible. And when they have done that they have done all that they ought to do. They should be required to appropriate according to existing laws alone; and when the other committees, as the result of their labors, have established policies expressed through existing laws, it is the duty of the Appropriations Committee to abide by those laws, and to appropriate according to the deliberate sense of Congress as written upon the statute-book.

They have business enough on their hands if they assimilate, aggregate, make uniform, and compact all the work of the other committees.

Now, I find in the last clause of the twenty-first rule this provision:

> Nor shall any provision in any bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order—

So far exactly right—> except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

That is to say, the whole subject of legislation, so far as it can be brought by the farthest stretch of refinement within the idea of present and future reduction of expenses, shall be committed to the Appropriation Committee—the power to destroy systems, the power to break down policies, the power to make laws which interfere with individual rights and public duties—and all this power given them when it is confessed they are not the committee who are charged with the investigation, the organization, and the development of the subjects upon which they legislate.

This is the defect in that system, almost the only defect that I can find in these rules. Strike that out, and each committee has its proper duty. Each investigates, decides, and enforces what shall be the policy of each department, making a uniform and consistent whole of legislation, and leaving with the Ways and Means the function of providing, and to the Appropriations Committee that of distributing the money to carry it out, looking to the business of the Government as a whole, and not to any particular interest.

But there is another objection to allowing this committee to legislate, more potent to my mind than any other, and it is this: When the Appropriations Committee puts legislation on an appropriation bill, they exercise duress on the judgment of the House and the legislation of the country. No man votes exactly as he would; no one is as free to act as if it were an independent proposition. All legislation is driven through under the whip and spur of the pressure of appropriations. You must submit to break up the half of your policy, or you must lose it all. You do not approve the particular proposition, but you must go for it, otherwise there will be no money for the uses of the Government.

I am speaking on this subject, and I mean to speak on this whole matter broadly, not in the interest of any party, not representing the views of any faction, with no spirit other than that which looks to the good of the country as a whole; and I appeal to you, gentlemen, legislators of the United States, as you are answerable to your own consciences and to your constituents, do you mean that the general legislation of the country shall be forced through under any kind of duress at all? This idea strikes at the very end and center of a deliberative body. The freedom of all deliberation and the freedom of all action will be gone where any such system prevails.

Now, sir, I do not know, because I have not sufficiently examined details, and am not sufficiently familiar with them to know, whether by merely striking out that exception we will reach the evil complained of or not, but I trust that some one before these rules are disposed of will bring in an amendment to them which will strike out this incongruity and leave this proposition which this Committee on Rules has presented a complete, compact, understandable, symmetrical whole. Here is the point at which they depart from their own principles, and that they do depart from principle a child can see, and he that runs can read as he runs. But a remedy is proposed to this defect which, to my mind, is worse than the disease itself; it is a proposition to give the appropriation in each Department to the committee which is intrusted with the legislation on that Department. That only multiplies the evils. All the legislation of the country would then go through on appropriation bills. Every committee intrusted with the business of a Department, working out its interests and accomplishing its results, after working through the session on the subjects involved, would embody in one bill of appropriation all the legislation they desired to have forced through this House. All freedom of action would be paralyzed, all discussion would be arrested, and all legislation, instead of being accomplished by free action and free discussion, would be passed on appropriation bills and under the pressure of the necessities of the various Departments for carrying on the Government. You must double this establishment if you would have it at all; you must reduce this service by one-half or you must lose the whole. This would be the argument and the incentive presented in every case.

And how is it possible for these individual committees, engrossed in their own work, wrapped up in their own purposes, seeking their own ends, how can they understand and take into consideration the results of the actions of all the other committees? The Naval Committee cannot know what the Military Committee is doing, and the Military Committee cannot know what is contemplated by the Post-Office Committee, nor can the Post-Office Committee know what is required by the Indian Department. They are not appointed nor have they the time or means to investigate all those subjects; nor, if they could, could they agree upon them with each other. They represent different Departments, developing different views, with different feelings and different interests, and they cannot come together as a whole and present to this House a requirement from each committee consistent with all the others. Therefore the remedy proposed, in my opinion, is worse than the disease. The real and simple remedy is to give the legislation to the committees who have charge of the subject. Give them that duty, that responsibility; let them take it; let them work up to it; trust them with it wholly, and let them have the entire duty and responsibility. They will be found worthy when they are intrusted with the responsibility. It is of the nature of man to rise to the level of the action of which he is a part. Intrust these committees with great responsibility, and these committees will be found worthy of the great trust, and they will each and all develop the power and the influence which should belong to them in this House and in its legislation.

But, Mr. Chairman, let them not on their side demand what is contrary to the philosophy of government and contrary to the organization of all deliberate bodies since intelligent representative government began. I will cite a single instance. The confederate constitution, if I am not misinformed, made by men experienced in the business of this assembly, actually provided, in effect at least, that no legislation should be upon appropriation bills, or at least that it should not have the effect of duress either upon the House or upon the Executive. I cite this as a single illustration which occurs of wise provision resulting from long experience.

It will be objected, Mr. Chairman, to this idea which I have endeavored to illustrate and enforce that in time of peace and in a country like ours, where the Government and its operations are directed toward the development of the resources and the bringing out of the wealth and power of the country, that often appropriation is legislation, that it is impossible to divide by any distinct line over which it is not easy to step the functions of legislation from those of appropriation; that often mere appropriation is legislation. Be it so, Mr. Chairman, each subject-matter of legislation will grow in importance in Congress and before the country as the necessities and conditions of the Government require; each committee will grow in importance and in power as the subject-matter which is intrusted to it becomes important to the legislation of the country.

In time of war the Army and the Navy committees will be the leading committees of this House, no matter what other committees are organized or what ability is upon them, because the attention of the people is directed to the condition of the country and necessities which grow out of this condition of war. In times of great constitutional legislation and discussion, the Judiciary Committee and the Committee on the Revision of the Laws will step to the front, because they will then be in the eye of popular regard, since theirs will be the subject of interest to the people. An instance occurs to me, of which I will remind the House.

You all remember how some twenty or more years ago when Mr. Stephen A. Douglas was the acknowledged leader of the democratic party in the Senate of the United States, that he resigned his position as chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, I believe, to take the position of chairman of the Committee on Territories, a committee which before that time had little of importance to attract any notice in the country or the ambition of any statesman. But he took the chairmanship of that committee and as the leader of its deliberations he occupied the attention of the country and controlled the legislation of the Government because the organization and government of the Territories was then the important subject which occupied the attention of Congress and the people.

In times of peace, then, when the simple progress of the country is the object of Government; when the development of its resources, the increase of its wealth, the wise building up of its power occupies the attention of the people, then it is right that this Appropriations Committee, which has the distributing of this money, should be the leading committee of the House, and no provision can take it from them. Theirs is the important function in the Government, theirs the position which has a right to govern and to control the action of this House. And let me tell you, gentlemen, one other thing—and I speak in no party sense, for I speak neither in the interest of any faction nor as the representative of any party—you cannot carry on the business of Government, for which the dominant party is responsible, unless you have one center of leadership. A dozen leaders will break up any party and destroy any system of government. I speak not for the present time merely, nor from my stand-point as a member of the minority, but I speak in the interest of all parties and for the good of the whole Government. I am a party man. I hold that they are the voluntary organization through which the will of the people is organized, expressed, and executed. In a country like ours, inclosing such a vast area, and presenting so many interests and feelings, the political sentiments of large masses of the people can only be organized around party standards representing great principles upon which these masses are agreed. These principles can only be enforced by party organization and action. Without this right principles will be powerless, for they will never have expression, and faith, however truthful, will be dead, since it is without effective works.

Now, gentlemen, do I speak as a partisan or as a man who understands and realizes that the business of the Government must be done, if it is done at all, by the dominant party in Congress; that it must be accomplished, if it is to be accomplished at all, by that party that has the majority and the power which belongs to the majority? And we all want it accomplished, even though we may not agree in all the particulars.

Gentlemen, you can have no proper control over legislation as a party, no settled policy, no successful accomplishment unless you have single and defined leadership; and whatever committee it is whose subject-matter at any time stands in the eye of public regard, whatever committee it is whose general business, to them intrusted, becomes the center of the attention of the country, that committee must of necessity be your leading committee for the time; and you are tearing down your own temple of power if you struggle to break down that concentrated power and effective leadership.

Mr. Chairman, I have already occupied more time than I have a right to consume under the circumstances of the case. I trust that the little I have said will be accepted as having been said without party spirit, and with a disposition to deal with the practical interests of the country and the real business that we have on hand. If I had felt justified in consuming more of your time, I might perhaps have stated my propositions more clearly, urged them with more logical power, and illustrated them with more convincing argument; but, such as they are, the House must take them in their crudity and digest them with their better wisdom.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. Chairman, the discussion of the report of the Committee on Rules thus far has seemed to me to be a contest between committees as to jurisdiction, very largely; and it has developed much more of criticism than of commendation. Now, criticism is healthy, and I, for one, do not object to it; but commendation is, to say the least, agreeable, and I wish briefly to point out certain reasons why in my judgment the Committee on Rules is entitled to more of the latter and less of the former.

And first, I desire to pay a deserved tribute to the democratic majority of our committee. In these days, when party spirit runs high, when it permeates almost the whole body-politic, provokes bitter hostilities, jealousies, and dissensions, incites the majority to ride rough-shod over the minority, justifies or acquiesces in the overturning of the will of the people as expressed at the polls, seizes upon the governments of great States in the face of the Constitution and the laws, it is indeed refreshing to record one instance, at least, where this spirit has been completely exorcised, where the decree, "Get thee behind me, Satan," has been fully executed. From the beginning of our deliberations down to the signing of the report there never has been the slightest evidence of partisanship on the part of the democratic majority of the committee; and I think they will bear the same testimony as to the republicans. There have been no heated discussions, no dissensions, no attempts to trample upon the rights of the minority. On the contrary, at the very outset we passed a resolution that no amendments to the rules should be made except by unanimous consent, and wherever we disagreed the old rules should be reported. Hence you find some rules here which have not received the indorsement of this committee, and to which your attention will be called.

Now, sir, we have had, I think, but one single purpose in all of our deliberations, and that has been to reduce madness to method, chaos to order, discord to harmony, duplicity to simplicity; to so revise, amend, and codify these rules as to make them aids to intelligent legislation. This was not an easy work to do, gentlemen. Many of you know that it was not a purpose easy of attainment.

Why, sir, these rules have been growing up since the foundation of our Government down to now, and with no natural regular growth. Necessities of parties, the whims of Speakers, contradictory decisions, the practice of the House, requirements of the occasion, uncertain and doubtful language—all these have combined to make a body of rules calculated better than anything else to disturb the legislator and to obstruct legislation; a body so full of intricacies and secrets that only the most skillful and trained anatomist could by any possibility dissect it and reveal them.

Many of you know this; for many of you sat down conscientiously and courageously to master this problem of the rules; and how soon have you found that a little knowledge was a dangerous thing, and that much was the work of a life-time. Why, sir, I remember perfectly well the first Congress I ever was in that it was almost impossible for me to prevent myself resigning, from the fact that I was a mere cipher, an utter nobody, because I could not penetrate the very outside door of this incongruous mass of rules. And you, gentlemen, many of you, have had the same feeling. When I appeal to you to know whether or not the purpose we had was easy of attainment you will say to me emphatically and feelingly, "no;" but it was worthy only of commendation and praise if undertaken and partially effected. You have had the report of our committee before you. It is full; it is complete. I have no doubt the most of you have read it with care. You see there our purposes, our methods, and the results. And are we not, gentlemen, entitled to some degree of commendation for what we have done?

Let me point out a few things, and I only will a few, because others of the committee, I suppose, are to follow me, and I will not trespass upon them. Take the first and what seems the simplest. We have undertaken to group all rules touching one subject under one rule, like "the duties of Speaker," like "motions," like "amendments," like "committees of the whole." Heretofore, if you desired to discover anything in relation to any one of these subjects you never knew where to stop until you had reached the very last rule in that book, while here you have it all at a glance. Now, sir, this was not a stupendous work for gigantic intellects; but it was a painstaking work, requiring great labor and great care. Are we not entitled to commendation for that? Again, there were some thirty or forty of these rules obsolete in whole or in part. How could the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HARRIS,] the first four years he was here, tell what was obsolete and what was operative, with no guide, nothing to point it out?

Now what, in the name of common sense, are our rules for? They ought to be guides, charts. Every sunken rock, every hidden ledge, every lee-shore, and every dangerous shoal is supposed to be marked with a buoy, a beacon, a light to be pointed out by lines and numbers, so that we can take our chart, and, observing it with careful eye, can pilot our little vessel safely through to a harbor.

Yet these rules are in fact no chart. Half of the sunken rocks have been blasted away; new ledges have been discovered, new reefs have been found; and yet there have been no marks to show them, no numbers to indicate them. And if you undertake to be guided by that chart you would be in the condition of the pilot in the sound, who assured the captain that he knew all the rocks there. All of a sudden the vessel ran on a ledge, and the captain said to the pilot, "You infernal scoundrel! I thought you said you knew where all the rocks were." "So I do," said the pilot; "and there is one of them." [Laughter.] That was about the only way a new member, at any rate, could tell where any sunken rock in this chart was—by running his vessel on it.

Again, there were practices of the House which had come to be law from long custom, yet which were in direct contravention of the rules. Again, there were rulings of the presiding officers which were diametrically opposed to each other on the same rule.

Now, gentlemen, we have undertaken to make an open pathway, and with guideboards to point the youngest member of Congress, so that if he has anything committed to his charge he can pursue his way to the end. Under the old rules, by the old pathway, when I as a young member took something which my constituents had intrusted to my care and started along boldly with it, thinking I saw the guideboard, all of a sudden the sharp gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] dropped an impassable barrier right across my path, and I retired to my seat dismayed, confused, disgusted with legislation and legislators, and with myself more than either. [Laughter.]

Are we not entitled to some commendation in this, that we have repealed the rules obsolete in whole or in part; ay, more, that we have made rules carrying out the practices of the House, which cannot be misunderstood; ay, more yet, that we have selected between contradictory rulings of the presiding officers of the House, and embodied that in a rule which commended itself the most as an aid to legislation?

I now come to some amendments which we have proposed, and I will take first that one which occurs to me to be the most important, the rule in regard to the calling of committees for reports. We have provided that there shall be a morning hour every day, except Monday, for reports from committees, and that that morning hour shall not be dispensed with except by a two-thirds vote. We have provided that the committees shall be called in regular order; that they shall report their business to this House, and that it shall go, not may go but shall go, at once, each class of business to its own proper calendar. We provide that public bills or business not making appropriations shall go at once to a calendar of the House, a new calendar which we have created. We provide that public business appropriating money shall go to a calendar of the Whole House on the state of the Union. We also provide that private business, whether appropriating money or not, shall go to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

How has it been heretofore? Why, gentlemen, you all know perfectly well that the morning hour has been almost entirely useless; that it has been directly obstructive to legislation. Take the morning hour under the rules as they now stand. A committee with business comes before you to occupy that hour in its turn. It makes its report to this House of some simple measure. Discussion springs up, and develops from its springing up, and grows from its development, and the first thing you know the morning hour is entirely consumed, and away that bill goes over to the next morning hour, when the same thing again takes place. Only one member of that committee, in the two hours to which it is entitled, has the privilege of reporting anything. He reports what he regards as the simplest bill in his charge, in order to afford the other members of the committee an opportunity to report their bills, and to his amazement the whole time assigned is consumed while nothing has been effected.

I have been on the Judiciary Committee for eight years, I think. The real weight of its business is not ready for report until three or four months after the beginning of the long session of Congress. That committee is called perhaps twice during the first month; then, according to my experience, it is hardly ever called again during the remainder of the long session.

Under those circumstances the committee applies for a night session of the House in which to bring forward its business, upon which it has labored and spent time and brains. The members of the committee come up here at that night session with hardly ever a quorum present. A bill is reported, discussion arises, dissension develops itself, a call of the House is made, and the entire session of the evening is utterly and entirely wasted, has been of no earthly use to the Judiciary Committee or to the country. Again and again and again the whole of the business of that important committee has been passed by, and all the labors of its members have been wasted. This is the constantly repeated experience of every leading committee in this House.

Again, under the old rule a matter is reported in the morning hour. It does not commend itself to the minority of this House, who, knowing it to be in the morning hour, immediately sit silent and prevent a quorum, or move to adjourn, or to fix a day to which the House shall adjourn. Thus the morning hour is consumed. This is done again and again, just so long as the minority may desire to continue it. You all remember, because it is of recent occurrence, that this was done in the extra session of the present Congress from day to day for a month, against what we believed and what I believe now to have been an iniquitous bill. Through that political campaign I saw many a day when I was sorry that we filibustered, because I would have been delighted to have added that one other political crime to the faggot of crimes committed by the party in control of this House during the extra session. But we determined otherwise, and no business could be transacted during the morning hour for a month or more.

Again, a committee reports in the morning hour. There is but an hour to-day and an hour to-morrow. Each member of the committee has a dozen important bills in his hands on which he has spent from three to four months of work. Each member desires to report. The chairman takes the floor and reports one, two, three, or four bills; and he is compelled to demand the previous question and force those bills through the House, in order to give the others of his committee time for the consideration of their measures. In this way hasty, unwise legislation has again and again within my recollection been passed under the previous question, for the praiseworthy purpose on the part of the chairman of saving a little time for some other member of his committee.

Now, the Committee on Rules has done away with all that. No complaints of that kind can be made again, if you adopt these revised rules. Every committee in this House will be called as often as once in two or three days—certainly as often as once a week. Every committee will be incited to attend to its business, knowing that there will be an opportunity to report all the business that it has in its hands perfected. No haste, no previous question, no half-considered laws enacted, no unfair advantages taken.

I desire one further amendment, which will provide that no bill, either of a public or a private nature, shall be reported to this House unless accompanied with a written report for or against the measure. If this be done, then when a bill has been reported the whole case will be on one of your three dockets; it will be there with all the points in brief; any man can take it and examine it beforehand, and can determine for himself whether or not the bill has merit and ought to pass. It seems to me that this committee deserves commendation for thus breaking away from the old rut and opening up a new road, through which honest, fair, well-considered legislation may pass.

Again, sir, I do not belong to the number of those who hold that private claimants have no rights which the Congress of the United States is bound to respect. I say to you, gentlemen, that a great war could not have taken place without claimants by the thousand and tens of thousands coming to the doors of Congress, and fairly, rightfully, honestly demanding payment of their claims. In war your Government is a despot; it must be a despot. The rights of men cannot stand in the way of the progress of armies. Your Government must be at liberty to make contracts, and to break them; must be at liberty to make specifications, and then to change them at its pleasure; must be at liberty to take the property of the individual for the public good.

The Congress of the United States has never yet had the courage to say to its citizens, "There are the courts that we have created; there are the judges and the United States attorneys whom the President has appointed; if you have a claim against the Government of the United States, the doors of that court are wide open; go there and assert your claims; bring your evidence and appeal to the judgment of that court." Congress has never dared to give to its citizens that right. I believe we stand almost alone among the nations of the earth in refusing to allow a citizen to bring suit in the courts against the Government. Now, therefore, when we shut against the citizen this door which is open to the subject of every other civilized country in the world, can we, ought we to say that we will shut this last door, the only one that is open?

The claimant comes here to Congress. His claim is presented and referred to a committee. That committee, under the present feeling, is an attorney for the United States, looking upon him with suspicious or hostile eye. In presenting his claim he is obliged to overcome these prejudices. He does so. The committee reports his claim unanimously, the bill goes upon the Calendar. The claimant has spent months in making out that case; it may be that it involves everything he has in the world for himself and his family. He has followed the claim in committee, has watched it after it has taken its place on the Calendar, is in the gallery on a Friday when private bills are to be taken up; that bill is reached; it is his only hope, his heart is in his mouth, he says to himself, "My time for justice is coming now," when lo and behold, somebody from the Rocky Mountains, or somewhere else, who never heard of the bill before in his life, who does not know to what it relates or what it involves, rises and shouts: "I object." The claimant sees his bill thus thrust aside, and generally so the end cometh. With a Calendar containing five hundred or a thousand cases, it will probably never be reached again. The whole labor of the committee, the whole labor of the claimant, must thus be lost because forsooth some man wants to build up a reputation on the smallest capital possible for one to be built upon. [Laughter.] But perhaps upon another unfortunate Friday that bill is again reached. Again the claimant is there and believes that his claim is to be heard. But five men object, and away goes his poor bill; and there is an end of it and of his hopes. That is the mode of proceeding on "objection days." I do not think the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] who sits in front of me has ever seen one of these days; but he will shortly, and he will recognize them afterward whenever he sees them.

I remember perfectly well a claim which was presented and considered by a committee a few years ago. A United States revenue-cutter had deliberately run down a fishing-schooner. If I had run down the vessel, in less than two months I would have been before a court, and in three or four months there would have been a judgment against me which I should have been compelled to pay. If a great steamship belonging to one of the great lines had run into the fishing-schooner the steamship line would have been compelled to pay the damages; but it was a United States revenue-cutter, with the Secretary of the Treasury on board, which ran into this schooner, and there was no court open for the owner in which to seek redress. He was compelled to come to Congress and ask for relief. He did not ask his ship to be paid for, but simply that Congress would open the door to a United States court and let him go in. The committee reported it unanimously because, of course, it was right and just. For convenience the bill was put upon the Calendar, and the very first time it was reached to be heard, a gentleman whom I will not name, he is not here now, from the fastnesses of the Rocky Mountains, who had never seen a schooner in all his life, and did not know whether it was four-masted or one, jumped up and cried out "I object." [Laughter.] I went to him. I said "In Heaven's name, what do you object to this for?" He said "What is it?" [Great laughter and applause.] I left in disgust, for if that was legislation, I wanted no more of it forever.

I hold, Mr. Chairman, that these men have rights, and that it is the duty of this Congress to hear them or else to send them to the courts. That would be the courageous and the decent way. Our committee have wiped out, expunged, destroyed forever, if you say amen to this report, all "objection days." I am aware it will ruin some men's reputation, [laughter,] but not more than one or two in a whole House. It will help all the rest of you, and have a tendency to do justice. I expect the objector to vote against it, whoever he may be, but I trust Othello's occupation is gone.

You will have a Friday's docket and every man's case will be entered upon it, and it will come up to be heard in regular order unless a majority of the committee should prefer to change that order. You will take that docket as you do in court. You will go from case to case and pass, as fast as you can, upon it understandingly. Is not that fair? Is it not reasonable? Or is it better for some old member to have the chance of shouting out "I object," and then having his name entered in your Index under "incidental remarks," "page 248," and when you look to see the gentleman's speech you will find "I object." [Laughter.]

Now, let me call for a moment your attention to the special orders which are piled Pelion upon Ossa until they have become mountain-high. If you turn to any day three months hence you will find upon the general calendar of business more than twenty special orders fixed for the same day. Now we have stopped all that. Under this new order of things there will be no need of special orders. Every case will have its day in court.

Again, a great many of you have not seen resolutions submitted on the Monday second roll-call. I had a delightful experience the first Congress I was here. Maine was called first. Under the present rule, after the general roll-call is through, a second is commenced and it begins with the State of Maine, when resolutions may be offered for present consideration and gentlemen may be compelled to vote upon them. Since I have been in Congress, never but once has this privilege extended outside of Maine. It stuck there nobly. [Laughter.] I remember one session of Congress, at the request of Mr. Charles Sumner, I introduced what was called a civil-rights resolution under that opportunity which was given to me by this rule, and that civil-rights resolution staid here six solid months in that position. Every Monday was filibustered out in order to prevent its passage, under the lead of the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. Eldridge. I did not effect anything. We, between us, did effect a loss every Monday of from one-half to three-quarters of an hour of valuable time, or, at least, of time that ought to have been valuable.

If you notice now on Mondays once in a while, when the States and Territories are not likely to take up the hour, somebody's useless bill is read, or some gentleman picks from the waste-basket a long bill on the transportation of animals, sends it up to the Clerk and causes it to be read. What is that for? That is to prevent the State of Maine from getting in a resolution under the second call. [Laughter.] And, if the old rules prevail, I guarantee to you now that the rush of business is over. On every Monday from this hour down to the close of this session over half an hour will be consumed reading useless bills. If any gentleman can tell me what benefit has resulted from the rule I should like to hear it. I have been here nine years, and I have never seen any.

We have repealed that and gotten it out of the way, and if you accept this body of rules you will be troubled no more forever with the reading of those lonesome, tiresome bills. The reading clerks will sustain this action of our committee.

Again, we send to the Senate an appropriation bill which our rules require shall be first considered in Committee of the Whole, a bill appropriating $5,000,000, the items specified, and in the Senate they amend it, adding to it a million and a half of dollars, and then send it back to the House in that shape. Now, I ask any member here if he has ever known these amounts which have been added to an appropriation bill in the Senate to be considered in this House in Committee of the Whole? No man ever heard of such a thing; and yet, under your rules, if I have a claim for a thousand dollars and it requires an appropriation, it cannot be considered except in Committee of the Whole. But the Senate may take an appropriation bill and increase it millions, and yet when it comes back here the point of order does not lie against it, and it is never considered in Committee of the Whole at all. Now, this committee, in the interest of honest legislation, in the interest of wise legislation, have reported a rule that these Senate amendments shall be subject to the point of order, which being made and sustained, they must go to the Committee of the Whole, and receive their first consideration there, because it is their first consideration in this House.

Now take "questions of privilege." Some of you have seen what has been done under an abuse of this question of privilege in this body. I have seen the liveliest fights gotten up here upon pretended privilege that I ever saw anywhere in my life, beating even an Irish fair. More, I have seen a gentleman cause to be read here, on a question of privilege, almost the whole Bible from Genesis to Revelations. Again, I have seen a member have newspaper after newspaper sent up to the Clerk to be read, occupying hour after hour with slanders of the gentleman affecting only himself. Again, I have seen gentlemen contending for the right to the floor on a question of privilege when an attack has been made upon them personally, not at all affecting their character as Representatives, and wasting hours in a contest over the point of order.

Now sir, every man who has been here for any considerable length of time knows that one of the greatest outrages and abuses in this House has grown up under this very question of personal privilege. It is an easy way to get the floor, make a speech, and flood his district. I remember some time ago when I was visiting in an official capacity the Legislature in Louisiana, I found that there were a good many persons there, some of them of dark complexion, who desired to get the floor and make a little display for our benefit; and even they had found out what a blessed thing a question of privilege was. They would "rise to a point of order," or "to a question of privilege," and get the floor, and I found it was very much there like it is here; that it made very little difference what they said afterward; they had the floor for all that. [Laughter.]

The question of privilege is the very highest right that can be demanded in this House, of the first importance to the body and to the member, and it ought not to be open to abuse.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I would like to ask my friend a question if he will permit me.

Mr. FRYE. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I would like to ask the gentleman what provision is made in this new system of rules for preventing the abuses he speaks of in this connection. I have seen myself, and I fully agree with him as to the ridiculous scenes which have been presented before this House in the name of personal explanation. The whole House has been frequently disgusted with the reading of long newspaper extracts and articles of personal explanation, which were put in writing and sent to the Clerk's desk, but the Chair has held that he could not determine whether it was a question of privilege or not, until it had been read. Now, what remedy do you propose for that? How are you to determine whether what has been claimed as a question of privilege is absolutely so or not until the reading of the paper has been had?

Mr. FRYE. In answer to the gentleman from Virginia, I wish to say that "the wayfaring man though a fool can read and need not err therein." It is written plainly here what a question of privilege is:

> The questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings; secondly, the rights, character, and conduct of members individually, in their representative capacity only.

Now, it seems to me that this is plain enough for any gentleman in this House not to misunderstand it, and every gentleman is on his honor not to violate nor discredit it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I admit that it is very plain, but men's minds construe things very differently. How shall we execute that provision? I ask my friend the question. Suppose you were the Speaker, presiding, and I rose to a question of personal privilege, my personal explanation is in writing and I send it to the Clerk's desk to be read. That has been done, when somebody makes the point of order that it is not a question of privilege—I have made that point myself. Now, I contend that the Chair must hear the statement before he can decide that it is a question of privilege or not; and how would you reach that question?

Mr. FRYE. Well, if I were the Speaker, and a gentleman was wandering so far from a question of privilege, as I have heard them again and again, I would exercise my right as the Speaker of the House, and stop him.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. But, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FRYE. I decline to be interrupted any further.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I know it is my own obtuseness.

Mr. FRYE. I recognize the gentleman from Virginia as one of the brightest gentlemen on the floor; but I must decline to be interrupted further.

I will not call your attention any further to the good things we have done. Upon that head I have stopped to leave ground open for others who are to follow me. But I think those I have directed your attention to must commend themselves to this House.

Now, to come to some criticism as to committees—how have we interfered with the jurisdiction of committees? I have heard it complained here that we have deprived the District of Columbia of the day which under the existing rules it is entitled to, the third Monday in every month. That is true; we have, but we have given it, under our revised rules relating to committees, an opportunity to report and have its business placed on the Calendar once in every two or three days during the whole session. And they will have the same opportunity that any other committee has to go to the Calendar. In my judgment it affords a better opportunity for the discussion of its business than it has now, for I have noticed, and others must have, too, that when the Monday came which was assigned to the business of the District there would be barely a quorum in this House and the business of the District received but little attention.

Take the Committee on Railways and Canals. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CABELL] made a complaint in relation to that committee. Our committee have not interfered with the jurisdiction of the Committee on Railways and Canals further than this: We have crystallized into a rule the uniform practice of this House since I have been a member of it. And it seems to me under the experience of the doings of the Committee on Commerce that if you should give another committee like that on railways and canals jurisdiction of the improvements of rivers, and if you should give to the Committee on Mississippi Levees still further jurisdiction of the Mississippi River and all of its tributaries, you would have three committees pouring upon this House their bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors, and if it is true that there is any log-rolling to-day to get one bill through under a suspension of the rules, how much more powerful would be the log-rolling of three committees if they were willing to resort to it to drive through all their bills. But, I repeat, we only crystallize into a rule the uniform practice of this House since I have been a member of it.

Now, there were several committees, as the Committee on Banking and Currency and the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, which had the right under the old rule to report at any time, a right given to them at the last session of Congress, I think. We have repealed that rule because under the rule now proposed there is no necessity for their having the right to report at any time. They would be called as often as once a week, and I have not heard that they complain of this.

Take the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] entered bitter complaint that we had restricted their jurisdiction. Well, sir, I have been here nine years, and I admit that at an earlier period in those nine years the Committee on the Revision of the Laws had the statutes to revise and great labor to perform. That is the only work I ever knew in the hands of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws until the extra session of this Congress and the work which they performed then and submitted to this House did not commend them as a committee to me at least.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] says that the Committee on the Judiciary usurps everything. He said that the Committee on the Judiciary had the right alone to the jurisdiction of all things touching proceedings in courts. And yet the gentleman from Illinois in the extra session of Congress reported a bill to this House from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws overturning all the statutes relating to the transmission of cases from the State courts to the United States courts. If he was right as to the jurisdiction of the Judiciary Committee, where did the Committee on the Revision of the Laws get that bill? What right had they to it? Under what rule then existing did they get it? The Judiciary Committee had considered that bill for months with great care, and are considering it now, and will be ready to report it at this session of Congress.

Again, at this session of Congress the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] reported from that committee a bill regulating the reporting of the decisions of the Supreme Court. Now, if it belonged to the Judiciary Committee, as the gentleman from Illinois says, to take charge of all matters touching proceedings in court, I ask him if that bill did not legitimately belong to that committee? I am glad the gentleman from Virginia urged the passage of that bill. It is a good bill. It is through the House, and this is due to his diligence. But that committee had no more right to it than I have to my neighbor's hat or to my neighbor's coat. Both those bills belonged to the Judiciary Committee; and I, at least, as one member of this committee, came to the deliberate conclusion that it was not wise to allow the wild colt of the prairies to cavort around without a curb.

I do not know what would become of the Judiciary or of the other committees of this House if the Committee on the Revision of the Laws were permitted to go on in that reckless way, taking to itself all jurisdiction, however careful, however judicious they might be, and however prompt to report business to this House. I did myself vote in favor of giving to this committee the revision and codification of the laws, what I believe was originally intended for it; and I may say that there is no man in this House I love better than I do GODLOVE S. ORTH, of Indiana, a member of that committee, into whose kind face I am now looking. So in my vote there was nothing personal.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I would like to ask my friend from Maine [Mr. FRYE] a question concerning the jurisdiction of these two committees, as he has appealed to me——

Mr. FRYE. I have not appealed to the gentleman, and I do not dare to yield any time, because there is a gentleman who has been promised the floor immediately after I shall get through.

I come now to the Committee on Commerce. I speak here only for myself. I do not speak for the Committee on Rules. I was born in favor of river and harbor improvements. I was educated and trained an old whig, and I have been able to see but little good in the democratic party from that day to this. That, I take it, is owing to my early training, not to the wrongs committed by the party or to its general bad character.

I believe in river and harbor improvements. I have voted for every river and harbor appropriation bill but one reported by the Committee on Commerce during the past nine years. Therefore I cannot be charged with any animosity so far as their reports are concerned.

I know that committee is an able one; I know its chairman is an honest man; but I know, too, that there has grown up in this House within the last ten years a purpose to pass that bill under a suspension of the rules; and I know that the growth of that purpose here in this House has brought scandal upon the Congress of the United States. I do not say that scandal has been deserved; I do not say the Committee on Commerce ever reported any items of appropriation that they ought not to have reported; I state only the naked fact that the Congress of the United States has been scandalized all over this country because of the forcing of such bills through this House under a suspension of the rules. I know that the average man must inevitably ask the question, "Why this haste? If my claim must first be considered in Committee of the Whole, involving as it does only a hundred or a thousand dollars, why in the name of common sense shall $8,000,000 be driven through without any such consideration?"

I say it is not strange that such a practice has scandalized this Congress. It ought not to have been attempted; it should never be repeated. And why? When I signed that report of the Committee on Rules I had fears that the Committee on Commerce had power enough in this House to defeat the report so far as it might affect them. I believe, however, that it will not have power enough ever again in this House, after this discussion and after the discussion in the public prints, after the attention of the people has been called to the matter. I do not believe that committee will ever again have power enough to command two-thirds of the votes of this House for the passage of such a bill before it shall have first received consideration in the Committee of the Whole. I doubt if any member of that committee will have the courage to rise in his place and ask that the rules be suspended and the bills passed. If this result shall be accomplished I will have done all that I hoped to do.

Now as to the Committee on Appropriations. That committee has seemed to be the object of attack even more than the Committee on Rules. And while I have great confidence in the Committee on Appropriations, yet I do sympathize with the assaults which have been made upon it. It seems to me that it is the usurping committee of Congress. And while there is a rule here reported which does not change their powers, it was not the unanimous report of our committee and did not receive the indorsement of all its members. It is reported under the resolution to which I have alluded, that where we could not agree unanimously upon an amendment the old rule should be reported.

I do not believe that the Committee on Appropriations should have the powers of legislation as granted in this rule. I agree with the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROBESON] in that. When I see the Committee on Appropriations taking our whole consular and diplomatic system, and in ten days' time, without, certainly, any adequate or requisite knowledge of what they are doing, smash through it as a mad bull, would smash through a china shop, it has always occurred to me that that committee had better attend to their legitimate business and let the business of the Committee on Foreign Affairs alone. I do believe, and my experience both in a republican House and in a democratic House has forced me to that belief, that there should be a restriction upon that committee; that the right of legislation, whether in reduction of expenditures or not, should be taken away from them. Let the Committee on Military Affairs report to the House all laws affecting the Army; Naval Affairs, those relating to the Navy; Foreign Affairs, those touching our diplomatic service, and so on, each committee adhering to its jurisdiction. Then let Congress enact into laws such of the reported bills as are deemed just and necessary. Then let the Committee on Appropriations appropriate the money required by these laws.

What does the "reduction of expenditures" amount to? Some of us have seen members put in the chair here, and from their rulings learned that the words were without meaning. There is hardly anything offered by the Committee on Appropriations that has not been ruled as germane and as reducing expenditures. And in the old days, when we had charge, I say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] whom I see near me, we were not much better in this than the democrats are now.

Mr. COX. Not so good.

Mr. FRYE. Oh, a little better, [laughter,] because I remember that a majority of the democrats in this House united with the minority of the republicans to pass that famous and notorious salary bill, the back-pay grab.

Mr. COX. Do not look at me; I did not vote for it, and I did not take the money.

Mr. FRYE. I think the gentleman said on this floor that he wanted to, and the man who looks upon a woman to lust after her——[laughter.]

Mr. COX. I did not say so. I made the only speech against it. You had better be more just, for Maine is in trouble. [Laughter.]

Mr. FRYE. Mr. Chairman, Maine was in trouble a little while ago. A host of fusionists, democrats, and greenbackers, like those barbarous tribes of the North who used to sweep down upon the plains to devastate and destroy, came down upon the good old State of Maine and attempted to destroy her. But, thank God, they have gone back to their fastnesses again, and thanks to their conduct they never will return. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. COX. I never said anything against your brother-in-law, and I never will. [Great laughter.]

Mr. FRYE. I had supposed, Mr. Chairman, that when this democratic brother-in-law married a good respectable woman it would result in a change of heart, and make him respectable. I am sorry to say that I have something to say against him myself. He did not experience any change of heart; he is a loco-foco still. [Continued laughter.]

Mr. COX. I know that the republican party used to take care of their brothers-in-law in the early days. I did not know but they would keep up the custom now. I want the gentleman to keep to the rules.

Mr. FRYE. I will remind the gentleman of the old rule that no gentleman shall speak except from his seat. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. This committee has proposed to repeal that. I am showing the gentleman how the new rule will operate in practice. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. FRYE. Now, Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned, not speaking for the committee, I am in favor of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] and by the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON,] and I reserved the right to offer such an amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to trespass for this length of time upon the committee, but it did seem to me that some feeble voice should be raised in slight commendation of our six weeks of hard work. If the old members, familiar with the rules, cannot see anything to admire, I thought that some of the younger ones might look over our work with favor as an aid to them; and perhaps the older ones might see "lifts to the lazy."

I believe that as a whole these new rules are a great improvement. As a matter of course, they are not perfect; they are open to criticism; they are open to amendment; and the committee itself will delight in real amendments which may be offered in this House and adopted. I believe that the debate which shall spring up here in the Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule will be of great value to this House, and I wish to say now to gentlemen on this side that if there ever was a time when it was their duty to be here on the floor, taking part in the business of this House, it will be when these rules are under consideration in Committee of the Whole. I sincerely hope that every republican member of the House will be found here to vote upon these rules and any amendments that may be offered. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Chairman, in view of the order of the House and the hour usual for adjournment, there is but one hour left for general debate on this report. I beg the Committee of the Whole to remember that the Committee on Rules has not been heard, except through the gentleman last occupying the floor, nor will it take the hour remaining, for the reason that the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] believed, not without just cause, that he was entitled to one hour during the debate to-day. The Committee on Rules yields the only remaining hour to the gentleman from New York, and will trust to its opportunities under the five-minute rule to explain any points at issue as the discussion may go on. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I favor this report. If I hereafter see reasons to amend it, it shall not be loaded down. If it is loaded, I will vote to save its provisions.

Whatever may be said about changing the substance of our rules as to a better division of our labor and the responsibility of our members and committees, this much may be said: that it is high time their incongruities and disarrangement in our book of parliamentary practice were reconciled, and the obsolete rules expunged. The present Digest lacks brevity, harmony, and perspicuity.

Its methods and principles may be all right, but, like the tools of a mechanic, they should not only be up with the last invention, but handy to get at and keen for use. The report of the Committee on Rules means advancement in this latter direction. Whether the committee has substantially altered so as to better the rules for forwarding our business in the proper path I will not now discuss. Doubtless the leading thought about rules for governing a legislative body like ours should be to carry out the will of its legal majority, while not restraining any proper effort of the minority to hinder and enlighten that will.

But, sir, let us not forget that an unrestrained will in this House may be equivalent to no expression of responsible will. It nullifies itself by excess. It is hardly, therefore, to be conceded, as the committee state it, that the powers of a minority to "check temporarily, if not permanently, the action of a majority should not be invaded or restricted." To allow this would consume the very power it is intended to conserve.

OBJECT OF RULES.

While we should not unnecessarily impede the execution of the will of the House, let us surround our proceedings with every possible restraint which will insure deliberation. To deliberate means to weigh. It does not mean to jump or to overslaugh by mere votes; nor by clamor to drown, or by force to coerce.

To subserve this main end of legislative procedure, namely, deliberation, let us avoid giving too much fluency to everything which comes here. Why should we render facile our seven thousand propositions in the form of bills here, every Congress, from that which would insert God in the Constitution to that which would regulate our being shaved on Sunday? Whence this desire for facile legislation? Is it owing to the civil war, or to our more recent tendencies to give the glamour of regality to this Federal center, that we forget the original rules and simple modes of our patriotic faith, not merely as a party now in supremacy, but as unpartisan interpreters of the Constitution?

Our rules have been in existence for eighty-nine years—from 1790 with various modifications until now. That is true; but does it follow that we should change the rules made by men who made the organic law and who enacted laws under it? The earlier legislators understood the genius of our federal polity. Except for great and never for transient causes their edifice should not be defaced or destroyed. The men who made these rules from time to time were jealous of Federal power. They believed in home government. They did not intend that this city should be the gorgeous head of an empire while the States, in manacles, were to be dragged along in some victor's train behind an imperial chariot. The rules, if questioned, interpret this jealous and prudent philosophy, and I am glad the Committee on Rules has not substantially changed their essence and principle. When we undertake to make easy federal methods of legislation do we not open the sluices through which no end of perilous legislation may rush to inundate and upturn?

The committee have said in their report that in the Sixth Congress, which convened December 2, 1779, there were two hundred and ninety-eight bills introduced and reported, while in the Forty-fifth Congress, which convened October 15, 1877, there were sixty-five hundred and seventy-nine bills introduced. The number of petitions to which they refer are not consequential, for the press and telegram have made petitions almost dead, if not ridiculous.

These facts which the committee narrate not only command us to make a revision of our rules for the dispatch of business, but call a serious halt on the dangerous compounding and absorption of all powers in the Federal Government. Hence, for a larger thought than that of economy, there should not be given too much facility for legislation, either by the constitution of new and easy ways for money bills, or to prevent liberal discussion and amendment. Standing upon the ancient ways, and ready to make the best breviary for our legislative conduct, I hail this careful effort of the committee to perfect our rules, upon which much of the pleasure and utility of legislative work depends.

ECONOMY AND ITS OPPOSITE.

It is to be regretted, Mr. Speaker, that on the threshold of this debate efforts are made to make easy a class of appropriations that appeal to the elements of mercenary and local aggrandizement. The first question which meets us in the discussion of the seventh clause of Rule XI, (page 32:) "To commerce: to the Committee on Commerce, [but they shall report the bill known as the river and harbor bill for reference to the Committee on Appropriations."] The debate on this rule seems to turn upon questions of economy and prodigality; general legislation and local greediness. In fact, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] almost confesses this to be the issue when he says, "I doubt not it will be developed that this new rule will be sustained by every member who doubts the propriety and the policy of this class of appropriations." And the honorable gentleman then proceeds, after a handsome statement of his views, to call for "one bill"—only one—"to come before this House to put a quietus to that sort of demagogy and misrepresentation" with which he charged members and editors by wholesale. This is the courteous way in which the gentleman from Texas opens this debate.

Mr. REAGAN. It is such unwarranted statements as these, and not the bills themselves, that have caused the scandal referred to by the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. COX. The scandal referred to by the gentleman from Maine is based upon the opinion drawn by the newspapers and members from these statutes. Just look at them. The like was never known in the old democratic days, when the gentleman from Texas and I served here before the war. Why, sir, from an appropriation of $2,000,000 ten years ago you have jumped up to $8,000,000. How much was it in the old days when we served together and held to the old democratic tenets? Nothing at all scarcely. We of course made appropriations for general objects. The statement of my colleague [Mr. LAPHAM] that we opposed all appropriations for rivers and harbors is not correct. We are ready now and at all times to vote appropriations for general objects. But when appropriations are made for every little stream that can possibly be found in our encyclopædias or our geographies, my friend from Texas comes in and justifies it as democratic policy.

The gentleman talks about being made the clerk or amanuensis of another committee! Now, mark you what he would make of us! If he cannot play, as Hamlet's friend, on a little lute, yet he would play on you and me and all of us! He would make us here his mechanized automata, as he has under his suspension of rules, for $8,000,000!

I am not, for one, tolerant of this kind of attack. The gentleman has missed his channel and overflowed his banks. He needs public improvement. He simply passed his immense bills because he could, not because he ought, and we are again reminded that it can be done again. Like the sailors in Shakespeare's Isle of Prospero, he is so full of valor that he smites the very air for breathing in his face and beats the ground for kissing of his feet!

Is it not bad enough when our tariffs are made and unmade at the behest of classes and sections, irrespective of the masses and the equities? The history of our tariff shows that all the votes given on our tariffs since that of 1790, with rare exceptions, have been dependent upon local material and individual interests. When there was a low and liberal tariff to be made, the West and the South gave it their sanction. When an illiberal and high tariff was to be made, the capital invested in manufactures gave its suspicious tenor to the tariff. Still more notably the tariffs during the war and after it illustrate my thought.

But is it not time that, irrespective of sections, combinations for immense exactions for public works, not comparable to tariffs, for insidious robbery, which are made by bills—what are called log-rolling bills—should cease? Are they not framed regardless of all constitutional clauses or interpretations by court or veto? Are they not as regardless of all fairness in the division of the loot as of the traditional policy of internal improvements which limited the appropriation to general objects, such as coasts and inland seas?

Will it be believed that the appropriation for one of these years was such that even the omnivorous maw of the Grant administration refused to expend it? As the Speaker has shown us, the amounts of these appropriations have grown enormously in late Congresses, under the exclusive direction of the Committee on Commerce. But this is not my complaint so much; it is that they have grown because, under the system of allowing the Committee on Commerce to make such bills, they have not only diminished and dimmed their own sphere of legislation as the initial and conservative forces of our trading people, and thus have made our legislation a by-word and a shame, but they have, as I once before demonstrated, set at naught every principle of free challenge by debate and amendment, which is the very life and soul of every parliamentary body in Europe and America.

DIPLOMATIC REFORMS.

It was said by the gallant gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] that if the Committee on Appropriations should take cognizance of the river and harbor bill and report it, why should not other committees take charge of business connate with their special function? Or to illustrate his thought: Here is the Committee on Foreign Affairs, upon which I serve as chairman. Do I want the diplomatic and consular bill referred to my committee? If I desired to aggrandize its importance or my own, perhaps we would desire to make the appropriation bill.

But is not the language of the very rule reported by this Committee on Rules so framed that the reporting of the river and harbor appropriation bill might be given to the Committee on Commerce, while its final revision comes before that committee which must take the broadest, most comprehensive, and indispensable scope of the whole horizon of finance?

Many years since I urged that our diplomatic missions might well be curtailed, in so far as ministers and envoys are concerned. The money employed in that direction might well be applied to consuls and commercial agents, in the interest of trade and commerce. On the proper occasion I may repeat and enforce some of these earlier thoughts. Indeed, the House has already instructed our committee to report wherein they can cut off the dead limbs of the diplomatic tree. There is no reason why we should not lop off all of its deadness, even to the eradicating of its sapless and expensive root. It is said by Schiller "that for thirty years Germany stood with her hand on her sword, and every rustle of a leaf disturbed her." This has been the condition of Europe the last summer, yet there was scarcely any of our diplomats at their posts during this terrible period. St. James was vacant and St. Petersburg empty, and those who filled other missions were like the false god Baal at whom Elijah mocked: "Cry aloud: for he is a god; either he is talking, or he is pursuing, or he is in a journey, or peradventure he sleepeth, and must be awaked!" During this period many of our citizens were traveling abroad; but had they any special terror on account of this European imbroglio? Would they have felt or been more safe if our diplomatic functionaries had been at the capitals of Europe, dining with or dancing attendance upon titled personages? Who loses a wink of sleep in this country because one minister fails to attend the Queen's levee in a spiked-tailed coat and a favor in its lapel, or another minister fails to shiver in the antechamber of the ice palace of the Czar? People rarely miss vacancies, and who misses those ministers? What a precious saving it has been, this vacancy which they created. How cheerfully we would part with all of them, provided we retained in the Treasury their salaries.

But if the Committee on Foreign Affairs would rid the country of these superfluous appendages, have they not the chance without having exclusive control of the diplomatic appropriation bill? Have we not the right to report a general bill repealing existing laws creating these offices? Cannot we prepare amendments to the appropriation bill for such a purpose and take the sense of the House upon them? When the majority of the House favor ssuch motions cannot it be done? If we have left the right to amend appropriation bills, when they come up in Committee of the Whole, or if preliminarily we may report appropriation bills on special subjects for the final revision of the Appropriation Committee, what then? Nothing, except greater guards over the strong-box in the Treasury. Let us, therefore, leave to the Committee on Appropriations its general supervision which is indispensable to our fiscal system.

DIVISION OF FISCAL COMMITTEES.

I am the author of a resolution adopted in the last session of the Thirty-eighth Congress, on the 2d of March, 1865, which divided the old Committee of Ways and Means into three committees—one for appropriations which paid out the money, one for ways and means which brought it in, and one on the Banking and Currency, which had control of the kind of money. I was moved to do this, and sustained by the House, because of the inordinate income, through bonds and taxes, as well as our vast outgo, involving thousands of millions, all in charge of one committee. The immense amount and variety of the business of the Ways and Means then seemed to call for a division of labor and responsibility. But I see no reason further to divide this fiscal business, and much against it. The division my rule made was philosophic and salutary. It gave unity to the business of three committees without much disturbance.

Is it said now that the Ways and Means are shorn of their proper functions? Have they not plenty to do? Judging by a glance inside of their splendid chamber, with its clerks and clocks, mirrors and messengers, and by the intellectual make-up of the committee and the genteel style of its distinguished chairman—it is not fair to infer, as we do sometimes, that its only function is to move to adjourn. Are not all the revenues, involving all the network of interests of this country, hanging upon the door-knob of that superb committee? It has even had referred to it the matter of conventional treaties in connection with customs. Where is the limitation of its periphery? Go to the uttermost parts of the earth, and lo, it is there. In spite of all protests of my elegant colleague [Mr. WOOD] was he not hailed at the capital of the grand nation, not only as the head of the democratic party, but as the creator, avatar, guide, and genius of every measure looking to the glory and magnificence of American institutions? Is not that committee now in the throes of a great system of refunding? Shall it be three and a half or four? And are we not waiting daily for the birth of the child, forgetful of all the tariff burdens of our land?

But, sir, with this immensity of business and importance its function has its beautiful and rounded unity. It is expressed in the word "income," just as "appropriations" has it in the word "outgo;" as "banking and currency" have it in "what-go," and as the people's committee, the Committee of the Whole, has it in "how you all come and go!" [Applause.]

EXPERIENCE OF OTHER LEGISLATURES.

In other countries which have deliberative assemblies there are various modes of representing the various administrative departments of government. Sometimes the labor of these departments are final, but as liberty obtains we notice that the revision and sanction of a legislative body become indispensable to incomes and outgoes. The system of permanent committees on the "budget" (bag or purse) prevails only in a few countries; ours is one. In other countries the chambers of legislative bodies have but little to do besides registering and appropriating the estimates of the government. Belgium is a good example for several purposes. There the chambers are divided into six sections. They correspond with the six ministerial departments—justice, foreign affairs, interior affairs, finance, war, and public works. Each division takes what belongs to it just as we do now in the House.

But in nearly all these countries where legislatures exist commissions on the budget having this one business are created, who pass upon the expenditures, and in nearly all the final vote is reserved to the legislature on financial propositions. Let us beware of giving up to any committee the power of final adjudgment on revenues and taxes, on tariffs and bonds.

It is argued, with plausibility, that legislative action has not, in the countries where such establishments are gifted with power over tax and pay, shortened public expenditures or held down administrative abuses. Well, the world generally, sir, is increasing the cost of its governments. This is owing to wars and other deviltries. There is no luxury equal to that of a government if its excessive cost is the touchstone. Now, is it true that the best government, or I should say patriotically, our democratic-republican government, is the most expensive? We are by no means the worst. True, we have much to do in cutting off excrescent expenses. It takes all we can do to keep watch over the generals, and lieutenant-generals, and major-generals, and brigadier-generals, and their staffs, and foragers and what not; together with our admirals, rear and otherwise, and the army and navy of useless placemen, on sea and land. We have a wasteful and ridiculous excess of these decorative folk. Considering our remoteness from European nations and troubles, we should be happy that the processes of science have not brought us nearer. But is this a reason against free and legislative rule? Is it true that expenditures go up when legislation handles them? Yet, it seems so in Belgium. In 1835, with a population of 3,876,000, it spent only seventeen and one-half millions of our dollars. In 1875, with a population of 5,336,000, the cost of governing ran up more than $5,000,000; or, to be exact, two hundred and fifty-six millions of francs. Forty years more that doubled its cost, and that, too, per capita. What a lesson is here, if all the facts are considered? First, Belgium has a money measure of suffrage; in consequence the minority of the people furnish the parliamentary majority; second, one-third of the 100,000 privileged voters are interested in large outlays for public works, and in employment upon them; for the government not only constructs public works, but runs mails, telegraphs, and half of the railroads. No wonder they have a special committee on "public works!" But in Denmark, where the largest suffrage prevails, the government is frugal but sufficiently generous. The peasants and workingmen join in the lower house in all liberal supplies; but neither in Belgium or Denmark, or other nations, do they have committees which gag through bills by two-thirds, without chance to change the supply or to veto separate items.

In this country, Congress, if left free, will not increase but diminish expense. It is a crude idea that when you trust the House to debate and amend, that then the increase ensues. The tendency to cut down both the estimates of the Departments and of committees, if freedom is left to the legislature, comes from the universal desire for economy expressed in the platforms of parties, professed by all politicians in deference to public virtue. An argument against freedom in this House on fiscal matters, is an argument for the Russian system, where a life council named by the Crown has charge of the budget, subject to the imperial sanction. It is an argument for despotic rule.

RIVERS AND HARBORS.

When it is said that the excision of expenditures has been more when the liberty of debate has been suppressed, I doubt and deny it. A higher rule should regulate that, and that is, that whatever should be levied in the shape of taxation, or spent for even the most luxurious government, should have the will of the people under the widest conditions of investigation and correction. This is the essence and tradition of public liberty, and is in accordance with the rule reported as to the final supervision of the Appropriation Committee of the river and harbor bill. To fix the proper responsibility for spending the people's money, I would go further and discard utterly the rule by which appropriations of any kind should go through, without debate. I would favor no process of juggling bills through by giving special pap to certain places.

No legislation, under rules liable to be suspended without debate or amendment, where money is divided around, is either republican, democratic, fair or just, even if it were economic in some instances.

But, sir, I gave my reasons for this when the river and harbor bill was crowded through the House by stifling amendment and debate, under a suspension of the rules on a two-thirds vote. I disfavor any attempt to give this important matter of public improvement to the Committee on Commerce, first, because the very constitution of that committee, selected generally from commercial or quasi-commercial localities, as well as our best experience, has demonstrated the extravagance of such a committee beyond a parallel.

What is best to be done under our present conditions? Who cares whether "Appropriations," or "Roads and Canals," or "Commerce" have heretofore had this business? Suppose the file shows no precedent, let us make a precedent!

LEGISLATIVE LIBERTY AND LIBERTINISM.

The issue is well made by the honorable Speaker and those who sustain him against the prodigals. The contest is between legislative liberty and pecuniary libertinism!

When I had the honor to report Rule 120 in the Forty-fourth Congress, drawn by Judge Holman and sent to the Committee on Rules, the work of retrenchment began. It is this rule that calls for the eloquent objurgation of the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL,] and others who have just spoken. He honors us. There was no such aid ever here for economy as Rule 120. The honorable Speaker was then chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, while for much of the time I was chairman of the Committee of the Whole to interpret the rule. We assisted in a work for which the people should be thankful, but which we have already forgotten, because we have taken lazy steps, though in the same direction. When, therefore, it was proposed to bring in a river and harbor bill and pass it, with its millions, over our heads without debate, without a word of debate or an amendment, as a Representative of a taxed people I protested in writing, and my protest was backed by some forty members. We only obtained debate by what was deemed almost an insult to the House, and that, too, after the protest, and after the bill had passed. I called it a raid on the Treasury, a pillage, and what not—very questionable language. The words were taken down, and so was I.

I should have studied the language of the bandit of Thibet: He does not say in gruff, unpleasant voice, and with horrid menace, "Stand and deliver! Your money, your horse, or your cloak!" Oh, no; but he says in the blandest way, "My dear elder brother, it is a hot day; your cloak, if you please," or "I am tired of locomotion on foot. I see, my beloved, that thou hast a noble steed; wilt thou dismount?" By similar sweet paraphrases I might have designated the bills which have been produced from the Committee on Commerce. Were they not the pleasing combination of all mercenary suavity and local endearments; dainty bits of succulent reciprocity, for the mutual good of the beloved constituencies with large water-frontage; by no means for local greed and political corruption, but bills to aid poverty in its distress, to make happy the leaders of parties in congressional districts; in fine, as my friend from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA would phrase it in his optimistic advocacy of fifty millions a year for this purpose: "to give transportation to our commodities, employment to our people, and prosperity to the country." But, sir, who pays for it? That is not answered. Do not the people know?

OF SALT, ETC.—TARIFFS, ETC.

Every man in this land pays an insidious tax of 35 per cent. on his own person. From the crown of his head or hat to the sole of his boots he is taxed by an infamous system, which puts much into the pockets of the few, or a little out of the pockets of the rich for the Treasury.

Salt is an example. It is next to bread! Can that which is unsavory be eaten without salt? How our people North and South fought for the salt wells! And yet how easy we give them up to the pillage of protection, notwithstanding the needs and demands of the people for their enlargement!

An Arabian tale has it that some one looked down into the secrets of the earth and saw all its treasures. He had his choice; he selected the crystals of salt.

Salt ought to be as cheap as bread. It is a universal necessity. It should be cheap to all. It is said that Elisha healed the waters and stopped the dearth in the land by scattering salt upon them. We have no fear of dearth, and our pestilence has departed, but there is a burden but little worse in the infamous tariff upon some fifteen hundred articles, one of which is salt. Ah! but it is said that we can make it for nothing. Then why make so much clamor for its protection?

As a member from Pennsylvania declared to me, he voted against the bill because "it was an entering-wedge." Wedge into what? Into the system which despoils the many for the few, which puts an indirect tax of hundreds of millions upon the people and but a tithe of it into the Treasury. That system, as to salt especially, was sustained by the votes of the gentlemen from Michigan, Texas, and West Virginia, who appeal for these improvements from the common Treasury, and refuse to lighten the tax on the poor man.

The interest of salt fish, I see by a report, belongs to the Committee on Commerce. After many years of struggle we upset the bounty on New England fish, but kept salt free for fish. Why cannot it be made free for the poor man's pork and potatoes?

Salt! Why, do we not know that it only brought $786,042.20 to the Treasury in 1877; $754,382.74 in 1878; and $798,647.80 in 1879? By our system of tariff we put twelve cents per hundred pounds tax on all of it in sacks and barrels and 20 per cent. ad valorem on it in cakes. Yet the gentleman from Texas favors a continuance of this tax. Why? Does he not know that ten times these sums reach Onondaga, Kanawha, and Michigan? Does he favor free salt for fish and not for potatoes and pork? [Laughter.] He does. Read this volume on "Imported Commodities" from the Treasury and you will see the "salt withdrawn (free) for curing fish" the past year. It is all New England, from Barnstable to Wiscasset. Where is the free withdrawal of salt for pork from Cincinnati and Saint Louis?

All and each of these champions of river and harbor extravagance voted against cheap salt. Texas joins with West Virginia. That was a surprise. It was no surprise when Michigan completed this protective saline triumvirate.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to say one word. I have been trying to get these $200,000,000 on the free list reduced, and the taxes distributed over a larger field. But when we put something on salt we shall have to put much less on cotton and woolen goods, and iron and steel, and hats and shoes.

Mr. COX. It is the old story. You do not commence at the right end. Why, sir, salt is like bread; the people demand it. You come up here with this tax on it and say, "You shall have free salt for fish." New England gets it. Here is the list in the last report. But when it comes to free salt for potatoes and for pork, you refuse it. [Laughter.]

If this goes on—if these moneys are to be forever paid to assist to make artificial water courses, against providential arrangements—where will you get your natural scenery? [Laughter.]

Mr. REAGAN. Before the gentleman gets away from his criticism on appropriations, I want to say that if he will look to the State and the city he represents, he will find that New York obtained in the last appropriation bill nearly twice as much as the State of Michigan. Is it this he is objecting to before his constituents?

Mr. COX. Now mark how I will put down the statesman from Texas. [Laughter.] I have always voted against these bills. I voted against Hell Gate and the other gates of that nature. I never voted to push Hell Gate through on an appropriation bill without the right of amendment or debate. The people of New York City would never approve my course if I supported such a vicious legislation. Now is not the gentleman a little sorry he interrupted me? [Laughter.]

To return to salt:

Give some gentlemen a tariff and an appropriation and, as was said of a Spaniard and a bull-fight, "you may burn his father at the stake in a cassock painted in the flames of hell." Texas joins with West Virginia; but Michigan will have the lead, both in laying custom duties and demanding harbor improvements. Still, it is impossible to tell which of the three eloquent stipendiaries has made most of this situation for local renown—

> I shall as soon pronounce what Grace more neatly
> Trips it before Apollo than the rest.

But before I go further into my time, allow me to pay my attention to the gentleman who has been so anxious to make personal remarks about myself and my legislative conduct.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] has been pleased to make special reference to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and to myself. His manner was too kind and gentle to be offensive; but he must be reminded that his argument for the aggrandizement of his Committee on Manufactures ought not to be based on the derogatory statement that our committee and myself have only been engaged in manufacturing witticisms. The House must have seen that we were diligent in our business even at the extra session, and passed all our measures. There are no witticisms from a committee of that dignity. The corn speech to which he refers was made when I was but an humble member, not chairman of the committee. No one but myself represented that element. Its juiciness was the product of my western raising and my eastern distillation. Why should I be accused of mere play here? Have I not shown some fruits as the result of studious work? Did I not carry through here the Thurman bill as to railroads, the life-saving bill, the census, and many others, which might be named? Is it not time to stop this constant depreciation of one who really cares little for being here, except to do something worthy? Where is the fun in such misrepresentation? Will my friend from Michigan bear with me if I give him a lesson in the matter of congressional debate? Humor is a large part of it. It should be ratiocinative, however. It should have a practical object. When I happened one day to kill a moth contract by some good-natured remarks on that insect and the political analogies it suggested, it was because I was informed by a canny Scotchman (now Senator from Kentucky) that there were facts to be developed. In one minute after he gave me the pamphlet I gave it the needed good temper, and a half million was saved. The point is to make your fun dialectic and rational. Did my friend in his speech so brimming with humor, and which tended to make ridiculous the claim of inconsequential committees to greater consideration, observe this rule? I have been told his committee took his speech in earnest, met, and proceeded to declare he had vindicated them. [Laughter.] They asserted that they had been neglected, and would claim their rights to all questions as to manufactures. This, of course, would kill my elegant colleague of the Ways and Means. [Laughter.] He could not survive it. What, sir, to have manufactures take away his tariffs?

Was there any other object in the gentleman's speech? Did he tell us how he regarded the committee's report, or was he only entertaining the House? He was also pleased to refer in a pleasant way to some volumes of travel I had written. Thankful for such a notice, I fear he has omitted the one most apposite There is a volume in my desk I will send to him. It is entitled "Why We Laugh."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend, to receive a message from the Senate. Members will take their seats.

Mr. COX. To resume, as Mr. Sherman would say. [Laughter.] When members take their seats will the gentleman take my book?

[A page took the book to the member from Michigan, who received it graciously.]

Mr. COX. The volume I send is named "Why We Laugh." I send it to the gentleman with my regards, and with a view to ask him to regard its philosophy, "why"—not "how," nor "at what"—we laugh. It will show him that nearly all great natures manufactured witticisms now and then, from Sir Thomas More to Corwin, from Julius Cæsar to the gentleman. [Laughter.] But their wit had a rational purpose. They were logical in their laughs. They used what Aristotle knew to be the reductio ad absurdum, and what Whately commends as the best means of exposing fallacy and fraud. I wish I could read an extract or so before I send my friend the volume.

Now, in the view of these lessons for mirth, was it logical for my friend the other day to call the attention of the House to my body? Suppose I am little, was it logical, or parliamentary, or kind to say it? It was done without malice, but it permeated every one of my two million pores. [Laughter.] Suppose I had the gentleman's immensity of pores, where could not the laughter extend? Then there would have been need of some improvements, "because of a loss of moisture." [Laughter.] Why, sir, every sweat-gland in my small body gave out its mortifying moisture because they were so few compared with the pores and glands of larger bodies. [Laughter.]

Now, sir, I submit, was my size a subject for any gentleman's logical laughter? I never claimed, because of its smallness, exemption from the demands of courage or in the arena of debate. Laughter is health. It oils the joints [laughter] and the countenance, causing it to shine. An animal that tries to laugh, like a hyena, is specially despised; but a babe, when it first beholds the sunshine, laughs! The gentleman was once a babe, [laughter,] an innocent babe—a cherub. [Laughter.] He may have children—all little rotundities, all dimpled beauties, which with "flitcherin' noise and glee" rush to meet their dad—and all like their dam—dam, bad father! I cannot see to read it plainly, but it looks like—their dam—bad father. [Roars of laughter.] Does he not love them? Doubtless, as all genial natures like his love children. But where is the point of making my small person—though I carry the weight of the average man, one hundred and forty pounds—the butt of his ridicule? Why should smallness, in such an immensity of creation, and when everything may be reduced to atomies, be accounted contemptible? I once buried a burly body here for insinuating that I was small. I cast his soul, which was very small, through a nether keyhole, for he was little in everything except in size.

When one comes to consider all universal physical relations—the size, say, of this dome and the goddess on it, much bigger, even, than the gentleman, [laughter,] then of the mountains of our earth, then of the sun, of Jupiter, or the star Sirius, and then the constellations and systems far beyond, pinnacled dim in the intense inane, of creation, how contemptible a member of Congress seems! [Great laughter.] Therefore, where or what is the humor of making a member of Congress out to be little, and laughing at his size? What is there to boast of in this enormity of flesh and size? At the best, Goliah did not reach more than twice as high and was only one-sixth more than the size of some gentlemen here. Lambert, with all his opulence of oil, was only a poor, weak man, unable to grasp what Isaac Newton knew—whose mother put him in a quart cup when he was born. [Laughter.] Sir Isaac Newton! Does the gentleman think he could get into such a cup? [Laughter.] Why then, why should the spirit of mortal be proud? Proud flesh is not a sign of health. [Laughter.]

My friend evidently meant to be familiar with me in two respects: First, to humble me for my size; and second, to be witty over what I cannot help, my stature.

I never knew till the other day when I failed to recognize him, how imperfect was my body. I took him by mistake for a gentleman from North Carolina. It was my poor eyesight? Yes, on'my failure to recognize him, he called me, first, genial, and, second, little—all of which implies a rather undue familiarity on a short unrecognizing acquaintance! [Laughter.]

I endeavor to debate here impersonally; never refuse to yield; never invade another's right; always consider my person almost as an abstraction. I am not proud of my appearance as some men are who swell. [Laughter.] Why, sir, I argued against making Congress too big ten years ago. Two hundred and fifty was enough. Had I known the advent of this leviathan into our troubled waters, I should have favored two hundred as our number. [Laughter.] But that is to be settled next year. Corpulency is not strength. Let us remember that!

When the gentleman was thus belittling me, what was he about? Two yards [laughter] or so. Does that, under our Constitution, prevent me being his equal? There is no disability under the law on account of one's size, only his age or his rebellious antecedents. If I were a mountain of mummy, or a Liliputian, I should be eligible here. [Laughter.] I represent large folks, fighting folks, [laughter,] good folks; they did not measure my girth or take my altitude when they sent me here. They did not think me unconstitutional. [Laughter.] They did not think blubber indicated brains; nor meat manhood; or that tumors necessarily tend to intellectuality. They did not regard me as unworthy of their trust, because I had not layers of lard over immense abdominal muscles. [Prolonged laughter.] They are intelligent; they know that tissues of fat do not control issues of fact or of politics. A man may be five hundred and seventy pounds, or several gentlemen rolled into one, yet he might still be as a tallow candle to the sun. [Laughter.]

What, sir, are none but Falstaffs to be of the elect? If so, the House would be overrun with the qualities he is celebrated for, including stealing, carcass, and fun. Are we to have only inordinate, lumpish incarnations of swelling vanity—behemoths in our congressional waters? Nothing but butter and no bread? Sir, Shakespeare was a master of wit; and he told us of Falstaff. He knew that flesh and frailty go together. [Laughter.] He said the devil would never have the fat knight damned, lest the oil that's in him should set hell on fire. [Laughter.] How well he advised him! "Make less your body and more your grace, for the grave doth gape for you thrice wider than for other men." [Laughter.]

I am sure I gave my friend no provocation for reducing my dimensions in the RECORD. I hardly knew him, except to trace his path over the costly mosaic of our corridors, whose leanness he larded with the warm flux of his tallow. [Laughter.]

Suppose he be six feet high, and have an abdomen ten feet in girth, with good fat capon lined. [Laughter.] Does the gentleman tell me that therefore he can assume airs of superiority, "genial" airs? Suppose he has a longer oscoxygis [laughter] and his ancestors had a firmer prehensile grip to a Darwinian limb. [Great laughter.]

Perhaps next he will raise the point of order on me that I cannot vote, because my æsophagus is not as magnificent as his own, [laughter,] or his phalanges or metacarpus, or, rather, corn-stealers, are bigger than those of any other member. [Laughter.]

Why should such a one be proud? Falstaff weighed about as much as my friend, but he took care not to make his hilarity too loud—when the prince was about. Will the gentleman still insist on raising the point on my size? Is it raised as to my sternum? [Laughter.] If so, I ask him boldly the size of his duodenum? How is the nature of his body different that his pericardium should take on airs over my medulla oblongata? [Great laughter.]

I fear my friend's latter end will come sooner than he knows. Corpulence is disease. May he return late into heaven; but he must look to his latter end! I am tired of making obituaries here. But if I am called on to speak his eulogy I would draw on two eminent poets who will combine for such an occasion. One is the sweet singer of Michigan and the other Byron. Over his grave let there be inscribed:

Here lies the body of Congressman Horr;
'Tis Greece,
but Living Grease
no more!
Requiescat!

[Great laughter.]

But, sir, all this badinage aside, I desire to quell once and forever this aggrandizement of assurance and oil at the expense of modesty and tenuity! My pleasure in serving here is of another kind than the body gives. As the scholar said in Beaumont and Fletcher's "Elder Brother"—

For know, sir, that the wings on which my soul
Is mounted have long since borne her too high
To stoop to any prey that soars not upwards!
Sordid and dung-hill minds, composed of earth,
In that gross element fix all their happiness;
But purer spirits, purged and refined, shake off
That clog of human frailty. Give me leave
T' enjoy myself; that place that does contain
My books, the best companions, is to me
A glorious court, where hourly I converse
With the old sages and philosophers;
And sometimes, for variety, I confer
With kings and emperors, and weigh their counsels,
Calling their victories, if unjustly got,
Unto a strict account, and in my fancy
Deface their ill-placed statues.

[Applause.]

If it be true, as that same Elder Brother said, that we are a nobler substance than the stars, since we have faculties and they have none, may it not hereafter be forgotten in our debates that there are discrepancies in the size of our frames not inhibited by the Constitution, and then argue justly and impersonally on matters of higher moment than ourselves.

FRENCH ILLUSTRATION.

The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] has selected a most unfortunate illustration to sustain his cry for more improvements and more outlay. France is his type. He would have public improvements like hers at every door-step. That republic received from Napoleon III the mischievous system yet in vogue and so commended by gentlemen. The empire for a score of years literally reveled in extravagance. There was the constant disaster of prodigal expenditure till the chief and his honeycombed government fell before its own corruption and the German arms. The abuses of France were mainly connected with the lush growth of this bad system of government improvements. They were made to tickle the peasantry and gorge the contractors. When the gentleman boasts of French ability to pay Germany its millions of indemnity he should at least deduct the millions from his estimate of the Napoleonic rule he commends.

When the gentleman refers us to this French custom of giving work to the idle, or rather largesses, for improving public works is it not but another kind of phrase: Circenses et panem—sports and food. Circuses are cheap; and we have had four hundred millions of bushels of bread to send to others and abroad this year. It is, sir, the old plan of killing popular life by the enchantments of debasing indulgence. Rome fell, and France has reeled into many a wild, despairing revolution with such policies.

If a conspiracy were formed by devils to destroy this country it would be by corrupting the people with largesses and appropriations.

My friend from West Virginia, [Mr. KENNA,] by his remark that he had done more in patriotic endeavor to build up this country by such modes than he accomplished in the whole time he was among the confederate brigadiers attempting to tear it down, provoked applause and laughter! What did he mean? Does he place these services on a par? Do they both belong to the category of patriotic endeavor? Is the quadrumanous activity of "tearing down" the way to advance general prosperity?

I think I understand this analogy from France. But let me again say that when he calculates the advantages of such policies he must deduct from his own credit whatever was the cost of the part of the tearing down which he did. Thus he may estimate the true political balance the country owes him!

I shall do no injustice in debate. Therefore I print what my friend from West Virginia has said:

It is in the interest of the improvement of our commercial highways, and to that extent in behalf of the great commerce of this country. It is patriotic and just. In conclusion I would add that I have done more in the patriotic endeavor to build up this country by voting these appropriations in the last year or two for the improvement of its commercial highways and the advancement of its general prosperity than I accomplished in the whole time I was among the "confederate brigadiers" attempting to tear it down. [Laughter and applause.]

I have often voted general amnesty (and once carried it here in the House) to expunge the one side of this civil-war account. I shall be glad to do it again. Let there be ample amnesty for all the hot distempers and oblivion for all the brave, misguided chivalry of those days of tearing down, but neither amnesty nor oblivion for the mercenary desecration now of the old temple of democracy, wherein is enshrined the best ark of our covenant and the emblems of our faith!

Let me here insert a list of appropriations for certain objects and localities.

Appropriations for the States of West Virginia, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota for rivers and harbors, in annual appropriation bills, from Forty-first to Forty-fifth Congress, inclusive. (First session, Forty-first Congress, no appropriations in detail.)

Total amount of annual river and harbor appropriation bills from Forty-first to Forty-fifth Congress, inclusive	54,968,217

With such a long catalogue of rivers and what not, for improvement, one would think nature had been niggard toward this land, and that the Government in its blessings had mocked us, as the thirsty Tantalus, who had sight of water but no power to use it. Yet our rivers are long and our lakes are broad, our sea-coast many thousand miles, and our harbors beyond comparison. The general features of this country are juicy. Yet why waste so much in spoiling them? Where shall we venture hereafter, if this goes on, for natural scenery and unartificial transportation? All our little and big places are to be improved. Is there no work to be done in the mountains, where at least "five wild torrents fiercely glad" bound out of some glacier into the sunlight and sing the song of the Alps without desecrating the sanctity of nature by the rude hands of sordid legislation? Why not, if we must aid the waste places, go to the alkali plains and utilize them? There are spots where not even an Arab might find a date and a camel would not totter to his fall; where even the Bedouin would not dream of an houri or listen, in fancy, to the call of the distant muezzin.

THE KISKIMINETAS.

These bills, by whomsoever surveyed, engineered, propounded, and adopted, had—

All the infections which the sun sucks up
From fens, bogs, flats.

As I read the river and harbor bills of the past two years in the statutes, what a commentary comes to my mind! Here are ten pages in the second session of the Forty-fifth Congress and thirteen pages in the next session. Nearly all these pages are full of streams unknown to any ordinary geography.

Mr. REAGAN. Does the gentleman refer to the Kiskiminetas as a river ever appropriated for in this Congress?

Mr. COX. Oh, I know all about it; the appropriation was only for a survey—merely opening a way for an appropriation to improve the river. I understand that when the survey took place they bored a hole in that stream for abutments, and all the water ran into the hole. [Laughter.]

Mr. REAGAN. I am sorry——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is not subject to interruptions, except by his own consent. Any gentleman desiring to interrupt him will please address the Chair in the first instance.

Mr. COX. I consent to no more interruptions.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman ought to consent when he misrepresents facts on a grave subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, when he understands whether the gentleman from New York consents to interruptions, will govern himself accordingly.

Mr. COX. I think it likely that in a few minutes the gentleman will get up again, and I will then indicate whether I consent to the interruption.

Mr. KELLEY rose.

Mr. COX. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me.

Mr. KELLEY. I merely wish to ask whether when the Kiskiminetas was drained, as the gentleman has suggested, they did not get a good turnpike road. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. I presume that was the very object of the appropriation. A gentleman told me the other day that going through that part of Pennsylvania and looking out of the car window he saw some water there. An iron furnace was built right on the banks of the Kiskiminetas, and a little water was used for the purpose of running the furnace. All at once the furnace stopped; there were some sows and pigs in the stream. They needed public improvement, and the great iron interests of Pennsylvania were suffering in consequence. [Laughter.]

These streams named in these statutes I cannot name.

It would be invidious to name them. Some of course are for surveys; but on page 162, where the "Kiskiminetas and Conemaugh Rivers from the mouth of the Kiskiminetas, to the mouth of Stony Creek on the Conemaugh," assumes importance, as a sample. When I read of Rogue River, Duck Creek, Kankakee, Tangipahoa, Chickasaboy, Mispillion Creek, Wateree, Sebewaing, Gasconade, Minnepesaukie, Manitowoc, Suppernong, and Chickahominy, they are all included in the generic term, Kiskiminetas; they comprehend the principle. [Laughter.]

This gentle stream is recalled by the remarks of the gentleman from Texas. He referred to our former debate as to "dry creeks and macadamizing."

From it learn most, if not all, the exuberance of our commerce appropriations. A gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] called the Kiskiminetas unpronounceable. To me, it rolls trippingly on the tongue, like bubbling honey! Kiskiminetas! There may be seen the Conestoga team, with its road wagon, its eight Norman horses, its bells, its tar-bucket and dog under the wagon—illustrative of the earlier days of Pennsylvania enterprise. [Laughter.] But what should be said of the gentleman from Michigan, or rather Port Huron? Is there any appropriation bill for rivers and harbors which he has not championed, especially when it had fabulous amounts for his own beloved waters, which the foregoing table develops? Nearly five millions in a few years and for every little discrepancy in her natural scenery of land and water. After all his devotion, I expected to see him follow the former member from West Virginia [Mr. HEREFORD] to the Senate; but his day will come. Steal gently, ye years of unrequited toil—steal away, and give my vigilant friend his reward on earth before he attains to that other sphere.

Being on the Commerce Committee for years, and making his combinations with skill and audacity, he has been enabled to draw from the Treasury millions of money for his own and other petted localities. Here are over thirty different places—watering places—all wanting money. Water, water everywhere; so that one might expect to see members from Michigan, like old Aberon, rise here clad in humid vestments?

WHAT ARE THE WILD WAVES SAYING?

So that it would appear a good deal depends not merely on the kind of men who are on the committees, but on their locality. I would as soon expect generosity for abstract principles of general legislation when a member is prodded from behind by an avidious constituency, as milk from a male tiger. Gentlemen, as appears by the list, divide with no one except when they get the largest share; and only give away as much as is necessary to secure their own part of the spoil. This legislation reminds me of the old maps of China. They drew a square, then a circle inside the square, as large as possible. All inside the circle except the little four corners was the Celestial flowery kingdom; all outside were barbarians, and banished from its beatitudes. When, therefore, a member speaks with all the soft and sweet vibrations of a Sabbath bell and pleads with such a loving voice for his old Committee on Commerce to have control of the river and harbor moneys, we know it simply means the aggrandizement of his own beloved Texas, West Virginia, or Michigan, and who inside of his charmed circle will reproach him?

But he is outstripped far in his water-frontage and his commercial interests by my young and ingenuous friend from West Virginia, who spoke so eloquently against this rule. Sir, I feel the need of caring for the great commercial enterprises of West Virginia! Our appropriation bills are full of attention to the immensity of her commercial wants. I would speak simply and modestly, as a member from the sylvan glades and forest repose of the placid coasts of the Atlantic; for how can "a satyr who comes staring from the woods speak like an orator?" Recognizing the fact, for I was born in the West, on one of its wildest coasts—I mean the Muskingum—having heard in my youth the deafening roar of its tumultuous surf and the everlasting shriek of its gigantic stern-wheelers, it is not impossible for me to feel and know what the wild waves are saying on the Big and Little Sandy. [Laughter.]

From creation's dawn till now the tempestuous fury of wind and tide and rushing waters has been going on out West. It became so incessant and so stupendous I retired to the placid, flower-margined banks of the placid Atlantic. There my restless spirit found repose; but, sir, memory, like the sea-shell which you place to your ear, recalls its august abodes, and murmurs as the ocean murmurs there; and in studying the duties of my position as a member of the little hamlet of New York, I could not fail to recall the wild sublimity of that early day when I snaked saw-logs and caught sunfish in the pelagic waters and thundering surf of the magnificent Muskingum!

OIL!

Ah, sir, there is a happy provision of nature. Nature has her compensations. These tempestuous seas of Western Virginia, these pelagic waters, where the duodolium disports herself, are happily surrounded by other elements of moderation and temperance! Following the withdrawal of the bore from the soil of West Virginia rises the flexile column of petroleum! Oil, sir, oil! By all the gods of Greece, oil! Upon these wild and oceanic waters, where tempests roar and the despairing sea-gull itself fails to shriek out her agony as a restless damned soul—the waters of that State, in their maddening conflicts, would long since have dashed and washed the soil into solution, into the Ohio and Mississippi. Crazy deltas which no skill of Eads could remove or remedy, and immense continents which no Columbus could discover, would have been the consequence. But, sir, oil came to pour its healing into the wounds of Nature and to give peace to the troubled waters! It must be remembered that one reason for the Muskingum and Kanawha being made such general subjects of Federal anxiety is that its waters are here and there found to be saline. This gives added fury to their tempestuosities; and but for oil, and appropriations for slack-water and a coffer-dam or so, their wild and ungovernable fury in rolling down to the gentle Gulf of Mexico and the inviolate sea would destroy utterly all the efforts and bankrupt all the corporations engaged in protecting and leveeing the Father of Waters. Thus the child of Kanawha rules the father; and by consequence, when we appropriate for the one we aid the other. The principle is comprehensive. These terrific and irrepressible conflicts of Kanawha often have their placid moments, when its surface is specially oleaginous. Then the human heart longs to ask "What were the wild waves saying, brother?" when they were so wild and wrathful.

Hush! I think I hear them whispering, "Glory, honor, praise to the member from West Virginia who made it possible to override all the old traditions of democratic faith to care for the commerce of the Kanawha!" "Pæans and praises to the honored member from Texas who joins the eloquence of the Gulf to the mighty minstrelsy of the ocean in its thunderous diapason to protect the commerce of Kanawha and Port Huron! Immortalization on earth and immortality hereafter be to him of Michigan" thunders back "the profound, eternal bass" of the league-long rollers which thunder upon those tempestuous coasts! [Applause and laughter.]

Oh, sir, there is another, another and most inimitable kind of thunder preparing to reach this Capitol! I mean that of public reprobation. It demands that we have no more appropriation bills from such remarkable committees, and something like old-fashioned ways in caring for general interests!

CONCLUSION.

Mr. Speaker, I would not have entered upon this debate but for the personal challenge of the gentleman from Texas to those of us who contested with him for amendment and debate on his bills, and whom he charges again with misrepresentation and demagogism. Still I omit no opportunity, either before the people or here, to insist on the old rules of frugality and honesty. I dedicate now my later growth as I did my first fruits upon this altar.

I am not an indiscriminate praiser of the time past, even in our own history; but I admire the Government, in its beautiful proportions and divisions, which our honored ancestry built. They built wiser than they knew. What other polity could have withstood the shock of civil conflict and the demoralization of administration since its termination? If one of the revered architects of our system could appear from his tomb, would he not point with more severity than did "buried Denmark" at the present rottenness in the state? Where is the old simplicity and purity? Where the old champions? Who wields the sword of Arthur or the claymore of Bruce? Are not the teachings of frugality of the great men of even a quarter of a century ago habitually disregarded? The war is responsible for much reckless and unconscionable conduct. It is the canker which follows war. The insane greed for wealth, the enormous growth of capital, the ill-gotten and even well-gotten wealth, public debts and private speculations, shoddy display and superficial fashion, monopolizing corporations and family greed—the desire to shine in the calcium glare of the present feverish round of social and political junketing—these are the evidences of a rooted malady, for which the White House and the Congress are in part responsible, and to contribute to which this insane rage for making public works at every doorstep is a fruitful illustration. Our cradled Hercules will not grow great upon such watery food.

I will not say that this would have been otherwise had the democratic party, under similar circumstances, given the rule to manners and men. Yet it is not without pride that we point to the days when an austere simplicity crowned the characters of democrats of the Jefferson and Jackson type. These latter-day utterances, compared with the great and austere thoughts of the southern democracy of other days, are as the twang of a child's holiday trumpet to the lyre of David. We are not a peculiar people. Rome had her Cato; but she had her Domitian also. The austerity of the one is in great contrast with the frivolity of the other; but the lesson Rome leaves us in matters of public extravagance as a cure for debasing squalor is pregnant with meaning for those who will read her decline and fall under the soft allurements of unbridled luxury.

When, therefore, my friend from West Virginia, whom I greatly respect, and whose sins are not like those of the veteran statesman from Texas, presents himself as helping the crusades against the Treasury for objects which those of the South in the better and elder days considered not merely unconstitutional but corrupting, and when he associates with these objects the unmercenary object for which these men or their sons imperiled all save honor, I must recall to him in sadness the sentiment which the North will soon learn, that there are no permanent trophies of civil conflict. There is a bridge of gold for the heroes of these dire and bloody contests, upon which they pass to that other world where no fallible judgment will meet them. The flag he flaunts so flippantly as one upborne by himself never shielded a system like that he now and here upholds. Oh, no, sir; oh, no! Let us all, as brethren with a common love and bond, furl that flag forever. Let us join in the song of the good Catholic priest, Father Ryan, who was as much devoted to the Stars and Bars as to anything on earth except the cross of his Lord and Saviour:

Furl that banner! True, 'tis gory;
Yet 'tis wreathed around with glory,
And 'twill live in song and story
Though its folds are in the dust;
For its fame on brightest pages,
Penned by poets and by sages,
Shall go sounding down the ages,
Furl its folds though now we must.

Furl that banner softly, slowly;
Treat it gently; it is holy;
For it droops above the dead.
Touch it not; unfold it never;
Let it droop there, furled forever,
For the people's hopes are dead.

[Applause.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now move that the committee rise.

Mr. HORR. I should like to have ten minutes, but it will do me just as well in the morning. [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will consult the pleasure of the gentleman from Michigan. [Cries of "Go on!"] I will yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HORR. If it be the pleasure of the House to give me ten minutes to-morrow I would prefer it. If not, I will go on now. [Cries of "Go on!"]

Mr. BLACKBURN. I simply desire to consult the pleasure of the gentleman from Michigan. If he wishes the time now I will yield; but if not, I will move the committee rise.

Mr. HORR. Then I will take ten minutes in the morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind the committee of the fact that by the order of the House all general debate has been closed on this bill at the close of this day's session. However, the Chair understands the gentleman from Michigan to ask unanimous consent for ten minutes, and that he may have that time now or in the morning.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I wish to deal in exact fairness by the gentleman from Michigan. The House having ordered all general debate to be closed with this day's session, I wish to ask whether the gentleman will be entitled to more than five minutes should he not take his time now.

The CHAIRMAN. Only by unanimous consent, which the Chair understands the gentleman to ask.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask, then, is it competent for this Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to change the order of the House fixing the limit for general debate on this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It can only be done by the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest that an adjustment of this matter can be made in a moment by the committee rising and, in the House, asking unanimous consent to allow the gentleman from Michigan fifteen minutes to say what he desires to say.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will be glad to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. That can be done to-day, or when the motion is made to go into committee in the morning.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CARLISLE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the report of the Committee on Rules on the subject of the proposed revision of the rules, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced the passage, without amendment, of a joint resolution (H. R. No. 145) authorizing certain printing for the land commission.

It further announced the passage of the following joint resolutions, in which concurrence was requested:

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 56) authorizing the printing and binding of additional copies of the report of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 64) extending the provisions of the first section of an act entitled "An act fixing the rate of interest upon arrearages of general taxes and assessments for special improvements now due to the District of Columbia, and for a revision of assessments for special improvements, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1879.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR DEBATE.

Mr. ROBINSON rose, but yielded to

Mr. TUCKER, who said: Mr. Speaker, in view of the order of the House closing general debate with this day's session, I now ask by unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. HORR,] when we go into the Committee of the Whole to-morrow, shall be allowed fifteen minutes.

Mr. BRAGG. I object. If the gentleman desires to reply now, I will withdraw my objection. The House has listened to him, and it has listened to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.] I will waive objection if the gentleman desires to reply at present; but to postpone this to another day, I must insist on my objection.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Is it in order to make the motion?

The SPEAKER. It is not; because a motion to reconsider was made, after the vote fixing the limit of debate, and that motion to reconsider was laid upon the table. The Chair, however, will entertain the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. TUCKER. I will make that motion.

Mr. CONGER. Pending that, I move the time for general debate be extended fifteen minutes, for the purpose of hearing my colleague, [Mr. HORR.]

The SPEAKER. It cannot be done.

Mr. CONGER. It is an extension of time.

The SPEAKER. But that has been disposed of, and the motion to reconsider laid upon the table.

Mr. CLYMER. Has the motion to reconsider the vote closing debate been laid upon the table?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. CONGER. I move that there be an extension of fifteen minutes in the time allowed for general debate.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman from Wisconsin did not make his objection——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has not been recognized.

Mr. CONGER. The House has the right to fix a further time for debate.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman from Michigan can have five minutes in his own right, and then others can surrender him their five minutes, which will cover the case. No one will object to that.

Mr. MILLS. I hope by unanimous consent they will give him as much time as he wants.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will facilitate the gentleman getting time so far as he can, provided it involves no infraction of the rules.

Mr. HORR. I consent to say what I have to say under the five-minute rule. I do not think it will take over five minutes to do the job.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN GEORGIA.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker, I move by unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. No. 3034) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Macon, Georgia, and to transfer certain counties from the northern to the southern district in said State, for the purpose of concurring in the Senate amendments.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

In the fifth section strike out the following words:

"All offenses committed in either of said divisions shall be cognizable and indictable within said division."

And in lieu thereof insert as follows:

"Prosecutions for crimes or offenses hereafter committed in either of the subdivisions shall be cognizable within such division; and all prosecutions for crimes or offenses heretofore committed within either of said counties, taken as aforesaid from the northern district, or committed in the southern district as hitherto constituted, shall be commenced and proceeded with as if this act had not been passed."

In line 1, section 6, before the word "actions," insert the word "civil;" so it will read:

"Civil actions or proceedings now pending at Savannah, in said southern district, which would under this act be brought in the western division of said district, may be transferred, by the consent of all the parties, to said western division," &c.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question.

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. CONGER. And that is, whether this provides for the disposition of suits under the timber-violation act?

Mr. ROBINSON. Not at all.

Mr. CONGER. It has no relation to that whatever?

Mr. ROBINSON. Not the slightest.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER CASE.

Mr. SPARKS. I rise to a privileged question. I find in the RECORD of yesterday that there was an order, as the RECORD states, for printing.

The SPEAKER. That is not a privileged question, but the Chair will hear it.

Mr. SPARKS. It was for the printing of the majority and minority reports in the Fitz-John Porter case. They have not been printed, and I am told they are not in the Journal.

The SPEAKER. And the House did not order these reports to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SPARKS. I am told by the Speaker to that effect. I will state that I so understood it, but of course the Chair has the conclusion of it. I so meant it.

The SPEAKER. The only question is whether the gentleman so said it.

Mr. SPARKS. I so understood it. I now ask they be printed in the RECORD to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear it, the Journal does not show it, and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD does not show it. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois to move the reports be printed in to-morrow's RECORD.

Mr. CONGER. Have they been ordered to be printed in the usual form?

The SPEAKER. They have.

Mr. CONGER. Then I object.

Mr. SPARKS. Why do you object to that? The gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCOOK] wants it done.

Mr. CONGER. Has the House ordered them to be printed in the usual pamphlet form?

Mr. SPARKS. We want them in the RECORD.

Mr. MCCOOK. I do not care about the printing of the minority report, and the only reason why I suggest it should be put in the RECORD at all is that gentlemen who have a natural curiosity to see it have asked me in regard to it. I assume if it is printed in the RECORD to-morrow that will obviate the necessity of having it printed in the RECORD when the case comes up for discussion. I do not care anything about it myself.

Mr. SPARKS. As we both agree, I do not see why objection is made.

The SPEAKER. If the reports are ordered to be printed in to-morrow's RECORD then it may be understood that they shall not be printed again when they are read.

Mr. CONGER. On that understanding I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill and reports are as follows:

A bill for the relief of General Fitz-John Porter, &c.

Be it enacted, &c., That the findings and sentence of the general court-martial, convened in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, November 27, 1862, pursuant to Special Orders No. 362, dated Headquarters of the Army, November 25, 1862, and promulgated in General Orders No. 18, dated War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, Washington, January 22, 1863, in the case of Major-General Fitz-John Porter, late major-general of volunteers and colonel United States Army, are hereby set aside, revoked, and annulled, and the disqualifications of Fitz-John Porter thereunder be, and they are hereby, removed, the said findings and sentence having been based in error and without due knowledge of the facts of the case.

SEC. 2. That Major-General Fitz-John Porter is hereby declared restored to the service of the United States, with all the rank, rights, title, and privileges to which he would have been entitled if there had been no court-martial, and in conformity to the recommendation of the board of officers convened by Special Order No. 78, dated Headquarters of the Army, Adjutant-General's Office, Washington, April 12, 1878.

SEC. 3. The colonelcy of the Fifteenth Infantry, held by General Porter in January, 1863, having been filled by regular promotion and confirmation by the Senate, the position of colonel now to be held by General Porter will be supernumerary until a vacancy shall occur in the Army, when he will be assigned to that position, and the supernumerary colonelcy shall cease to exist.

SEC. 4. The position of colonel of the United States Army, to which General Porter is restored by this act, will be held by him as supernumerary until a vacancy in the rank of colonel shall occur, when he shall be assigned to the regiment to which it pertains; but if the said Porter shall so elect, the President of the United States may retire him on the rank of major-general, that being the rank held by him while in service.

SEC. 5. That the amount due and payable to the said Porter, as arrears, under the provisions of this act shall be determined by estimating the pay and allowances of a major-general on the retired list of the Army from the 28th day of January, 1863, (the date of last payment,) to the 31st day of August, 1866, both dates inclusive, and the pay and allowances of a colonel, on the retired list of the Army entitled to credit for twenty years' service, from the 1st day of September, 1866, to the date of the passage of this act; and the entire sum, or sums, so estimated and determined shall be paid to the said Porter by the Secretary of the Treasury immediately upon the passage of this act; the sum required for the purpose being hereby appropriated from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. SPARKS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report:

[To accompany bill H. R. No. 3764.]

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the message of the President of the United States in the case of Fitz-John Porter, late major-general of volunteers, which said message is in the words following, namely:

"To the Senate and House of Representatives:

"I transmit herewith the 'proceedings and report' of the board of officers, convened by Special Orders No. 78, headquarters of the Army, Washington, April 12, 1878, in the case of Fitz-John Porter. The report of the board was made in March last, but the official record of the proceedings did not reach me until the 3d instant.

"I have given to this report such examination as satisfies me that I ought to lay the proceedings and conclusions of the board before Congress.

"As I am without power in the absence of legislation to act upon the recommendation of the report further than by submitting the same to Congress, the proceedings and conclusions of the board are transmitted for the information of Congress, and such action as in your wisdom shall seem expedient and just.

"R. B. HAYES.

"EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, June 5, 1879."

having carefully considered said message, together with the evidence, documents, and subject-matters involved therein, beg leave to submit the following report:

That on the 27th day of November, 1862, a court-martial was convened at the city of Washington, District of Columbia, by order of Major-General Halleck, General-in-Chief of the Armies of the United States, for the trial of certain charges and specifications exhibited against Major-General Fitz-John Porter, United States volunteers, by (as it appears of record) "B. S. S. Roberts, inspector-general of Major-General John Pope's Army of Virginia," for violations of the ninth and fifty-second articles of war; which, for convenient reference, are herewith presented, and are in the following words:

ARTICLES OF WAR.

"ART. 9. Any officer or soldier who shall strike his superior officer, or draw or lift up any weapon, or offer any violence against him, being in the execution of his office, on any pretense whatsoever, or shall disobey any lawful command of his superior officer, shall suffer death, or such other punishment as shall, according to the nature of his offense, be inflicted upon him by the sentence of a court-martial."

* * * * * * *

"ART. 52. Any officer or soldier who shall misbehave himself before the enemy, run away, or shamefully abandon any fort, post, or guard which he or they may be commanded to defend, or speak words inducing others to do the like, or shall cast away his arms and ammunition, or who shall quit his post or colors to plunder and pillage, every such offender, being duly convicted thereof, shall suffer death, or such other punishment as shall be ordered by the sentence of a general court-martial."

That said Porter was by said court-martial found guilty of both charges and a part of the specifications, and was by said court sentenced "to be cashiered and forever disqualified from holding any office of trust or profit under the Government of the United States," which finding and sentence were approved by the President of the United States January 21, 1863, and said Porter dismissed from the service as major-general of volunteers and as colonel and brevet brigadier-general in the regular service of the United States.

That said Porter from thenceforth, earnestly protesting innocence of the charges preferred and of the injustice done him by the sentence, approval, and dismissal aforesaid, has made vigorous and persistent efforts and urgent appeals to every incoming administration for a re-examination of said charges, specifications, sentence, and findings, all of which, however, had proved fruitless until, in answer to an appeal made by him on the 9th day of March, 1878, to the present Executive, the following special order was issued, namely:

[Special Orders No. 78.]

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, April 12, 1878.

The following order has been received from the War Department.

An appeal has been made to the President, as follows:

"NEW YORK, March 9, 1878.

"SIR: I most respectfully, but most urgently, renew my oft-repeated appeal to have you review my case. I ask it as a matter of long-delayed justice to myself. I renew it upon the ground heretofore stated, that public justice cannot be satisfied so long as my appeal remains unheard. My sentence is a continuing sentence, and made to follow my daily life. For this reason, if for no other, my case is ever within the reach of executive as well as legislative interference.

"I beg to present copies of papers heretofore presented, bearing upon my case, and trust that you will deem it a proper one for your prompt and favorable consideration.

"If I do not make it plain that I have been wronged, I alone am the sufferer. If I do make it plain that great injustice has been done me, then I am sure that you, and all others who love truth and justice, will be glad that the opportunity for my vindication has not been denied.

"Very respectfully, yours,

"FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

"To His Excellency RUTHERFORD B. HAYES,
"President of the United States."

In order that the President may be fully informed of the facts of the case of Fitz-John Porter, late major-general of volunteers, and be enabled to act advisedly upon his application for relief in said case, a board is hereby convened, by order of the President, to examine, in connection with the record of the trial by court-martial of Major-General Porter, such new evidence relating to the merits of said case as is now on file in the War Department, together with such other evidence as may be presented to said board, and to report, with the reasons for their conclusion, what action, if any, in their opinion justice requires should be taken on said application by the President.

DETAIL FOR THE BOARD

Major-General J. M. Schofield.
Brigadier-General A. H. Terry.
Colonel G. W. Getty, Third Artillery.
Major Asa B. Gardner, judge-advocate, recorder.

The board will convene at West Point, New York, on the 20th day of June, 1878, and is authorized to adjourn from time to time, and to sit in such place as may be deemed expedient.

By command of General Sherman.

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Adjutant-General.

Official:
L. H. PELOUZE,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

under which special order the board of distinguished officers thereby appointed, after a protracted and exhaustive review of the testimony adduced before the court-martial, as well as an examination of all present, accessible, and additional evidence, on the 19th day of March, 1879, submitted the following report:

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF ARMY OFFICERS IN THE CASE OF FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

NEW YORK CITY, March 19, 1879.

To the honorable the SECRETARY OF WAR,
Washington, D. C.:

SIR: We, the board of officers appointed by order of the President to examine the evidence in the case of Fitz-John Porter, late major-general of volunteers, and to report, with the reasons for our conclusions, what action (if any) in our opinion justice requires should be taken by the President on the application for relief in that case, have the honor to make the following report. The recorder has been directed to forward to the Adjutant-General of the Army the printed record of our proceeding, including all the evidence examined and the arguments of counsel on either side.

We have made a very thorough examination of all the evidence presented and bearing in any manner upon the merits of the case. The recorder has, under instructions from the board, sought with great diligence for evidence in addition to that presented by the petitioner, especially such as might appear to have a bearing adverse to the claims urged by him.

Due care has been exercised not to inquire into the military operations of the Army of Virginia, or the conduct of officers thereof, any further than has seemed necessary to a full and fair elucidation of the subject submitted to us for investigation. On the other hand, we have not hesitated to examine fully into all the facts, accurate knowledge of which seemed to us to be necessary to the formation of a correct judgment upon the merits of the case, and to the determination of the action which justice requires should be taken by the President on the petitioner's application for relief.

We have had the benefit of the testimony of a large number of officers of the late confederate army, a kind of testimony which was not available at the time of General Porter's trial by court-martial. We have also availed ourselves of the testimony of many officers and soldiers of the Union forces who were present on the battle-field and of much documentary evidence, to throw additional light upon points not made perfectly clear in the record of evidence taken before the court-martial; and we have had the use of accurate maps of the battle-field of Manassas, constructed from recent actual surveys made, under the direction of the Chief of Engineers, by a distinguished officer of that corps, who was himself a participant in that battle.

Without such a map neither the testimony upon which General Porter was convicted nor the additional testimony submitted to this board could have been correctly understood.

The evidence which we have thus been able to examine, in addition to that which was before the court-martial, has placed beyond question many important facts which were before the subjects of dispute, and in respect to some of which radically erroneous opinions were entertained by General Porter's accusers, and doubtless by the court-martial that pronounced him guilty.

The result has been, as we believe, to establish beyond reasonable doubt all the facts essential to the formation of a correct judgment upon the merits of the case of Fitz-John Porter. We are thus enabled to report, with entire unanimity, and without doubt in our own minds, with the reasons for our conclusions, what action, in our opinion, justice required should be taken by the President on the petitioner's application for relief.

The evidence presents itself under several distinct heads, namely:

First. The imperfect, and in some respects erroneous, statements of facts, due to the partial and incorrect knowledge in possession of witnesses at the time of the court-martial, and the extremely inaccurate maps and erroneous locations of troops thereon, by which erroneous statements were made to convey still more erroneous impressions.

Second. The opinions and inferences of prominent officers based upon this imperfect knowledge.

Third. The far more complete and accurate statements of facts now made by a large number of eye-witnesses from both the contending forces.

Fourth. The accurate maps of the field of operations and the exact positions of troops thereon at different periods of time, by which statements otherwise contradictory or irreconcilable are shown to be harmonious, and opposing opinions are shown to have been based upon different views of the same military situation; and,

Finally. The conflicting testimony relative to plans of operations, interpretation of orders, motives of action, and relative degrees of responsibility for unfortunate results.

A careful consideration of all the material facts now fully established, in combination with the conflicting or inconclusive testimony last above referred to, gives rise to several diverse theories respecting the whole subject with which General Porter's case is inseparably connected. These diverse views of the subject necessarily involve, in a greater or less degree, the acts, motives, and responsibilities of others as well as those of the petitioner. We have considered with great care and labor, and with our best ability, each and all of these phases in which the subject can be and has been presented, and we find that all these possible views of the subject, when examined in the light of the facts which are fully established by undisputed testimony, lead inevitably to one and the same conclusion in respect to the guilt or innocence of Fitz-John Porter of the specific charges upon which he was tried and pronounced guilty by the court-martial.

Therefore, while exposing General Porter's conduct to the test of the highest degree of responsibility which recognized military principles attached to the command he held under the circumstances in which he was placed, and the orders which he had received, we are able to take that view of the whole subject which seems to involve, in the least possible degree, any question as to the acts, motives, or responsibility of others.

We will now proceed to give, as concisely as we are able to do, a narrative of the events which gave rise to the charges against Major-General Fitz-John Porter, omitting the multitude of interesting but unessential details and all facts having no necessary bearing upon his case, and limiting ourselves to a plain statement of the essential facts of the case which have been established, as we believe, by positive proof.

While the Army of the Potomac was withdrawing from its position on the James River in August, 1862, the Army of Virginia, under Major-General Pope, was ordered to hold the line of the Rappahannock, and to stand on the defensive until all the forces could be united behind that river. General Pope was given to understand that, when this concentration was effected, Major-General Halleck, the General-in-Chief, was to take the field in command of the combined armies. On the other hand, it appears that Major-General McClellan, then commanding the Army of the Potomac, was given to understand that he was to direct the operations of all the forces in Virginia, as soon as they should be united.

It appears that General Pope was notified on the 25th of August that an active campaign was soon to be commenced, without waiting for a union of all the forces, and under some commander other than either of those before named. But this information appears to have been of a secret character, afterward suppressed, and not made known to General McClellan and his subordinates until five days later, when the order appeared from the War Department, depriving McClellan of the command of all his troops then between the Potomac and the Rappahannock, although leaving him in nominal command of the Army of the Potomac.

Thus General Porter, who joined General Pope's army about that time, was left under the impression, which all had previously shared, that the operations of the army were to continue of a defensive character until all the forces should be united and proper preparations made for the commencement of an offensive campaign under a general designated by the President to command the combined armies. But just then the confederate general, Jackson, with three divisions of infantry, one of cavalry, and some artillery, commenced his movement to turn the Union right through Thoroughfare Gap, which gap he passed on the 26th, and that night struck the rear of the Union Army at Bristoe and Manassas Junction. The next morning, August 27, the Union Army changed front to the rear, and was ordered to move on Gainesville, Greenwich, and Warrenton Junction.

General Porter, with his two divisions of the Fifth Corps, arrived at Warrenton Junction on the 27th, and there reported in person to General Pope. That afternoon Hooker's division was engaged with the enemy at Bristoe Station; McDowell and Sigel were moving on Gainesville, and Heintzelman and Reno on Greenwich. Banks was covering the rear below Warrenton Junction, and guarding the trains in their movement toward Manassas Junction. Porter was at first ordered to move toward Greenwich upon the arrival of Banks at Warrenton Junction, but after Hooker's engagement at Bristoe the following order was sent him, and he received it at 9.50 p. m.:

"HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF VIRGINIA,
"Bristoe Station, August 27, 1862—6.30 p. m.

"GENERAL: The major-general commanding directs that you start at one o'clock to-night and come forward with your whole corps, or such part of it as is with you, so as to be here by daylight to-morrow morning. Hooker has had a very severe action with the enemy, with a loss of about three hundred killed and wounded. The enemy has been driven back, but is retiring along the railroad. We must drive him from Manassas and clear the country between that place and Gainesville, where McDowell is. If Morell has not joined you, send him word to push forward immediately; also send word to Banks to hurry forward with all speed to take your place at Warrenton Junction. It is necessary on all accounts that you should be here by daylight. I send an officer with this dispatch who will conduct you to this place. Be sure to send word to Banks, who is on the road from Fayetteville, probably in the direction of Bealeton. Say to Banks, also, that he had best run back the railroad trains to this side of Cedar Run. If he is not with you, write him to that effect.

"By command of General Pope.

"GEORGE D. RUGGLES,
"Colonel and Chief of Staff.

"Major-General F. J. PORTER, Warrenton Junction.

"P. S.—If Banks is not at Warrenton Junction, leave a regiment of infantry and two pieces of artillery as a guard till he comes up, with instructions to follow you immediately upon his doing so. If Banks is not at the junction, instruct Colonel Clary to run the trains back to this side of Cedar Run, and post a regiment and a section of artillery with it.

"By command of General Pope.

"GEORGE D. RUGGLES,
"Colonel and Chief of Staff."

This order plainly contemplated an aggressive movement against the enemy early on the 28th, and required the presence of General Porter's corps at Bristoe Station as early as possible in the morning, to take part in the pursuit of and attack upon the enemy.

The order did not indicate any anticipation of defensive action at Bristoe, but, on the contrary, it indicated continuous, active, and aggressive operations during the entire day of the 28th, to drive the enemy from Manassas, and clear the country. Hence the troops must arrive at Bristoe in condition for such service.

The evidence clearly shows that General Porter evinced an earnest desire to comply literally with the terms of the order, and that he held a consultation with his division commanders, some of his brigade commanders, and his staff officers on the subject. One of his divisions had arrived in camp late in the evening, after a long march, and was much fatigued.

If the troops marched at one o'clock, none of them could have much sleep before starting, and, even if they could arrive at Bristoe by or soon after daylight, they must be in poor condition for a vigorous pursuit of the enemy, who was already some distance beyond Bristoe. But this was not regarded by General Porter as sufficient reason for hesitating to make the attempt to comply literally with the order. He still urged, against the advice of his division commanders, the necessity of implicit obedience. Then, further consideration of the subject disclosed the fact that the road was filled with army trains, which had been pressing in that direction all day and as late at night as they could move, until the way had become completely blocked with wagons. The trains of the Army moving back from the line of the Rappahannock had been ordered to take that road to the number of "two or three thousand." In the language of one of the most intelligent witnesses, the mass of wagons blocked together at places in the road was "like a lot of ice that jams in on the shore." The night had become very dark, or, as testified by most of the witnesses, excessively dark. It would have been difficult to march troops upon a plain and unobstructed road. It was a manifest physical impossibility to march over that road that night, or to remove the obstructions in the darkness of the night. When this situation was made evident, General Porter reluctantly consented to delay the movement two hours, or until three o'clock. At that hour the march was commenced, but it was found that no appreciable progress could be made before daylight. Nothing was gained, or could have been gained, by the attempt to move before the dawn of day. It would have been wiser to have delayed the attempt to move until four o'clock.

A vigorous and persistent effort to make that march, commencing at one o'clock, could only have resulted in greatly fatiguing the troops and throwing them into disorder, from which they could not have been extricated until long after daylight, without making any material progress, and would thus have caused the corps to arrive at Bristoe at a later hour and in a miserable condition.

Abundant experience in situations similar to that above described leaves no room for doubt what General Porter's duty was. He exercised only the very ordinary discretion of a corps commander, which it was his plain duty to exercise, in delaying the march until three o'clock; and in his attempt to move at that time instead of at four o'clock he showed only too anxious a desire to comply with the letter of his orders.

If the order had contemplated, as has been represented, an attack by the enemy at dawn of day, then it would have been General Porter's duty to start promptly, not at one o'clock, but at the moment he received the order, so as to have brought at least some fragments of his infantry to Bristoe in time to aid in repelling that attack. That was the most that he could have done in any event, even by starting the moment the order was received, and then his troops would have been in no condition for any aggressive movement that day.

General Porter reached Bristoe Station as soon as practicable with his corps on the morning of the 28th, and there remained under orders from his superior commanders until the morning of the 29th, taking no part in the operations of the 28th.

In the morning of the 28th McDowell sent Ricketts's division of his corps to Thoroughfare Gap to resist the advance of re-enforcements from the main body of Lee's army, then known to be marching to join Jackson. Banks was at Warrenton Junction and Porter at Bristoe. The rest of the army moved from Gainesville, Greenwich, and Bristoe on Manassas Junction to attack Jackson at that place; but that general withdrew his forces during the night of the 27th and the morning of the 28th toward Sudley and Groveton. He was followed by Heintzelman and Reno, via Centreville; and McDowell and Sigel, after having marched some distance toward Manassas, were ordered to direct their march toward Centreville. In this movement toward Centreville King's division of McDowell's corps struck the right of Jackson's force late in the afternoon, just north of the Warrenton turnpike, a mile west of Groveton. A sharp contest ensued, lasting until some time after dark, when King still held his ground on the turnpike. Reynolds was then near the right of King, Sigel on his right near the Stone House, Heintzelman and Reno near Centreville; Ricketts, who had been sent in the morning to Thoroughfare Gap, was disputing with Longstreet the passage of the gap.

Thus it was still hoped to strike Jackson a decisive blow on the morning of the 29th before re-enforcements could reach him. In the mean time the confederate general had taken up a favorable position a little to the north and west of Groveton and Sudley to await attack.

Under these conditions General Porter, who was still at Bristoe Station, received at six a. m. the following order from General Pope:

"HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF VIRGINIA,
"Near Bull Run, August 29, 1862—3 a. m.

"GENERAL: McDowell has intercepted the retreat of Jackson. Sigel is immediately on the right of McDowell. Kearney and Hooker march to attack the enemy's rear at early dawn. Major-General Pope directs you to move upon Centreville, at the first dawn of day, with your whole command, leaving your trains to follow. It is very important that you should be here at an early hour in the morning. A severe engagement is likely to take place, and your presence is necessary.

"I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
"GEORGE D. RUGGLES,
"Colonel and Chief of Staff."

"Major-General PORTER."

Under this order, General Porter marched promptly with his corps toward Centreville. He had passed Manassas Junction with the head of his column, when he was halted by counter orders, issued in consequence of a grave change which had occurred in the situation since the night before.

King had withdrawn from his position near Jackson's right, on the Warrenton turnpike, and had fallen back to Manassas Junction. Ricketts had fallen back in the night from Thoroughfare Gap to Gainesville, and thence, in consequence of the movement of King, had retired to Bristoe Station.

Thus the way had been left open for the retreat of Jackson to Thoroughfare Gap, or for the advance of Longstreet from that point, and ample time had elapsed for them to effect a junction, either at the gap or near Groveton, before a force could again be interposed to prevent it. The opportunity to attack Jackson's detached force with superior numbers had passed beyond the possibility of recall.

As soon as the withdrawal of King became known to General Pope, he hastily sent a verbal message to General Porter to retrace his steps and move toward Gainesville, and soon followed this message with the following order, which was received by General Porter about 9.30 a. m.:

"HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF VIRGINIA,
"Centreville, August 29, 1862.

"Push forward with your corps and King's division, which you will take with you, upon Gainesville. I am following the enemy down the Warrenton turnpike. Be expeditious or we will lose much.

"JOHN POPE,
"Major-General Commanding."

Under these orders General Porter advanced promptly with his corps, followed by King's division, on the direct road from Manassas Junction toward Gainesville, having knowledge of the military situation as above described.

General Porter had met General McDowell near Manassas Junction, and they had conversed with each other relative to this order, placing King's division under Porter's command. McDowell claims that it was conceded that he might go forward and command the whole force, under the sixty-second article of war, but he desired to reunite all the divisions of his corps on that part of the field where Reynolds then was. Hence he wrote to Pope on this subject, awaited his orders, and did not exercise any command over Porter's corps until after the receipt of further orders from Pope.

When, about 11.30 o'clock, the head of Porter's column arrived at Dawkins's Branch, about three and a half miles from Gainesville and nine and a half miles from Thoroughfare Gap, he met the enemy's cavalry advance, and captured some of Longstreet's scouts. The clouds of dust in his front and to his right, and extending back toward Thoroughfare Gap, showed the enemy coming in force, and already arriving on the field in his front.

Morell's division was at once deployed; Sykes closed up in support, King's division following. A regiment was sent forward across the creek as skirmishers, and Butterfield's brigade was started across the creek to the front, and somewhat to the right, with orders to seize, in advance of the enemy, if possible, the commanding ground on the opposite ridge, about a mile distant. Morell's division, with Sykes in support, was ready to advance at once to the support of Butterfield.

At this stage of Porter's operations, some time between 11.30 and twelve o'clock, McDowell, in person, arrived on the field and arrested the movement Porter was making, saying to him in the hearing of several officers, "Porter, you are too far out. This is no place to fight a battle," or words to that effect.

McDowell had received, a few minutes before, a dispatch from Buford, informing him that seventeen regiments of infantry, a battery, and some cavalry had passed through Gainesville at 8.45 o'clock, and moved down the Centreville road toward Groveton, and hence must have been on the field in front of Sigel and Reynolds at least two hours.

The dust in Porter's immediate front and extending across toward Groveton, as well as back toward Gainesville, showed that large forces of the enemy, in addition to those reported by Buford, were already on the field. The latest information from the confederate army showed the whole force of the enemy within reach of Gainesville by noon of the 29th. McDowell's troops (Ricketts's division and some cavalry) had delayed Longstreet's advance at Thoroughfare Gap from about noon until dark on the previous day, 28th. Hence Lee's column had had eighteen hours by the morning of the 29th to close up in mass near the Gap, and seven hours that morning in which to march eight miles and form line on the field of battle.

Jackson, who had been supposed anxious to retreat, and for whom the way had been left open, had not retreated, but was still holding his position of the previous evening, as if confident of adequate reinforcements. Sigel's pursuit had been checked, where it started that morning, at Groveton.

It was certain that the head of column of Lee's main army had arrived on the field in front of Groveton at least two hours in advance of the arrival of the head of column of Porter's and McDowell's corps at Dawkins's Branch, and it was so nearly certain that the main body of Lee's army was already on the field and in line of battle as to absolutely require corresponding action. This was Porter's impression at the time, and he conveyed it to McDowell by words and gesture that left no doubt in the mind of the latter that he (Porter) believed the enemy was in force in his immediate front.

In contrast to this evident preparation of the enemy for battle, only Porter's nine or ten thousand men were ready for action, of the thirty-five thousand men then composing the left wing of the Union army.

Banks's corps, ten thousand, was still at Bristoe without orders to move beyond that point. Ricketts's division, eight thousand, was near Bristoe, under orders to move to the front, but his men were so worn out by constant marching, night and day, that they could not possibly be got to the field even for defensive action that day. King's division, seven thousand, was just in rear of Porter; but was so fatigued as to be unfit for offensive action, and hardly able to march.

Thus this long column, stretching back from Dawkins's Branch by way of Manassas Junction to and even beyond Bristoe, had struck the right wing of the confederate army in line of battle, while a gap of nearly two miles remained in the Union line between Porter and Reynolds, who was on the left of Sigel, near Groveton.

The accompanying map, marked Board Map No. 1, illustrates the positions of the Union troops at noon of August 29, and the probable positions of the confederate troops at the same time, as indicated by the information then in possession of the Union generals. This map is not intended to show the actual positions of the troops at that time, but to correctly interpret the information upon which the Union generals then acted.

This was the military situation on the Union left and confederate right of the field when McDowell arrested Porter's advance, and Porter's operations under the direct orders from Pope heretofore mentioned ceased, and, under new orders just received, Porter became subordinate to McDowell.

Not only had the effort to destroy Jackson before he could be reinforced totally failed, but the confederate army was on the field and in line, while the Union Army was not. The time to resume defensive action, awaiting the concentration of the army, had not only arrived, but had been too long postponed.

On his way to the front McDowell had received the following order from General Pope, addressed jointly to him and Porter, and Porter had received a copy of the same order a moment before McDowell's arrival:

["General Order No. 5.]

"HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF VIRGINIA,
"Centreville, August 29, 1862.

"Generals McDOWELL and PORTER: You will please move forward with your joint commands toward Gainesville. I sent General Porter written orders to that effect an hour and a half ago. Heintzelman, Sigel, and Reno are moving on the Warrenton turnpike, and must now be not far from Gainesville. I desire that as soon as communication is established between this force and your own the whole command shall halt. It may be necessary to fall back behind Bull Run, at Centreville, to-night. I presume it will be so on account of our supplies. I have sent no orders of any description to Ricketts, and none to interfere in any way with the movements of McDowell's troops, except what I sent by his aide-de-camp last night, which were to hold his position on the Warrenton pike until the troops from here should fall upon the enemy's flank and rear. I do not even know Ricketts's position, as I have not been able to find out where General McDowell was until a late hour this morning. General McDowell will take immediate steps to communicate with General Ricketts, and instruct him to rejoin the other divisions of his corps as soon as practicable. If any considerable advantages are to be gained by departing from this order it will not be strictly carried out. One thing must be had in view, that the troops must occupy a position from which they can reach Bull Run to-night or by morning. The indications are that the whole force of the enemy is moving in this direction at a pace that will bring them here by to-morrow night or next day. My own headquarters will be for the present with Heintzelman's corps or at this place.

"JOHN POPE,
"Major-General Commanding."

This order and the sixty-second article of war made it the duty of McDowell to command the combined corps, so long as they should continue to act together and General Pope should be absent from the field. In this interpretation of the law Generals McDowell and Porter agreed, and upon it they acted at the time. Upon McDowell devolved the responsibility of modifying the joint order as its terms authorized and as the military situation seemed imperatively to require.

The terms of the order contemplating that communication should be established with the troops on the other road, or, as General McDowell interpreted it, that line should be formed in connection with those troops, that the whole command should then halt, and that the troops must not go beyond a point from which they could reach Bull Run by that night or the next morning, and the military situation, as it then appeared to them, was briefly discussed by the two generals.

The situation was exceedingly critical. If the enemy should attack, as he seemed about ready to do, Porter's two divisions, about nine thousand men, were all the force then ready to stand between Lee's main army, just arrived on the field, and McDowell's long and weary column, or the left flank of Pope's army near Groveton. McDowell was "exceedingly anxious" to get King's division over on the left of Reynolds, who then occupied with his small division that exposed flank; and he quickly decided that "considerable advantages" were "to be gained" by departing from the terms of the joint order, so far as to make no attempt to go further toward Gainesville, and to at once form line with the troops then engaged near Groveton; and this departure from the strict letter of the joint order was evidently required by the military situation as it then appeared and as it did actually exist.

After this brief consultation the two generals rode together through the woods to the right, about three-quarters of a mile toward Groveton, and made a personal examination of the ground. As soon as this was done, McDowell decided not to take the troops through these woods, but to separate his own corps from Porter's, take King's division (Ricketts following) around the woods by the Sudley Springs road, and thus put them in beyond the woods and on the left of Reynolds.

McDowell then left Porter very hurriedly, announcing his decision, as he testified, by the words, "You put your force in here, and I will take mine up the Sudley Springs road on the left of the troops engaged at that point against the enemy," or words to that effect. Even these few words, we are satisfied, Porter did not hear, or did not understand, for he called, as McDowell rode away, "What shall I do?" and McDowell gave no audible answer, but only a wave of the hand. In this state of uncertainty, according to the testimony of one of General Porter's staff officers, Porter sent a message to King's division to ascertain positively if that division was ordered away by McDowell, and, if not, to give proper orders for its action with his corps, and a reply was returned by McDowell himself that he was going to the right and should take that division with him; that Porter had better stay where he was, and if necessary to fall back, he could do so on McDowell's left.

This testimony has given rise to much controversy; but, in our opinion, the question whether that message was or was not sent is unimportant. If it was sent, it did not differ in substance from the instructions which General McDowell testifies he had previously given to General Porter, "You put your force in here," &c. Neither could be construed as directing what Porter's action should be, but only as deciding that he should continue on that line while McDowell would take his own troops to another part of the field.

There appears to have been an understanding, derived either from previous conversation or from the terms of the joint order, that when McDowell did get King's division on the other side of the woods, Morell's division on the right of Porter's corps should make such connection or establish such communication with that of King as might be practicable through the woods. None of them then knew how wide was that belt of woods, nor what was its character beyond where they had reconnoitered, nor whether the ground beyond was in possession of the enemy.

When the two generals had started to take that ride to the right Morell's troops had been ordered to follow them, and Griffin's brigade had led off after its pickets had been called in. After McDowell took his departure this movement was continued for some time and until Griffin had crossed the railroad and reached a point near half-way across the belt of woods and where the forest became dense. There the movement was arrested. This movement might have meant an attempt to stretch out Morell's line through the woods, so as to connect with King's on the right or a completion of the deployment for an attack upon the enemy in front. General Porter explained it as intended for an immediate attack upon the enemy if he found he could keep King in support, and that he only desisted upon being informed that King was going away. But the attack would have been a rash one under the circumstances, even with King's support. Soon after this scouts were sent on through the woods to look for King, Reynolds, Sigel, or some body of Union troops in the direction where artillery firing was heard.

Presently Griffin was withdrawn to the south side of the railroad. The enemy's artillery opened on his troops during this latter movement, and was replied to by one of Morell's batteries, but few shots being fired on either side. Then Morell's division was put in defensive order to hold the ground then occupied and under cover from the enemy's artillery. The scouts sent through the woods ran upon the enemy's pickets, and were driven back. This effort to get scouts through the woods was repeated from time to time until late in the afternoon, but every effort failed. The scouts were all driven back or captured. As it turned out, this resulted from the fact that King's division did not get up on the right of the woods at all. That division reached a point some distance in the rear of its position in the line about 4.30 p. m., and then, after some marching and countermarching, was sent northward to the Warrenton pike. Thus the gap in the line which McDowell's troops were to occupy remained open all the afternoon, and the margin of the timber remained in possession of the enemy's pickets.

These failures to connect or to communicate directly along the front were reported by Porter to McDowell by way of the Sudley Springs road, on which McDowell had gone. The reports were made in at least four different written dispatches, which have been preserved. The hour was named in only one, apparently the latest, sent at six o'clock in the evening. Two reports—one about four o'clock and the other about 6.30 p. m.—were sent to General Pope direct. Both of these were received by him, but have not been preserved.

About the time General McDowell arrived on the field at Porter's position and for an hour or two thereafter a heavy artillery combat was going on between the Union batteries near Groveton and the confederate artillery. During this artillery combat, and until five o'clock p. m., there was no infantry engagement except skirmishing and some short and sharp contests between small portions of the opposing forces, and until 6.30 p. m. no musketry was audible to any one in Porter's corps.

On the confederate side, as it now appears, Porter's display of troops—three brigades in line—in the early part of the afternoon had given rise to the expectation of an attack on their right. This having been reported to General Longstreet, that commander sent his reserve division (Wilcox's) from his extreme left, just north of the Warrenton turnpike, to his extreme right, on the Manassas and Gainesville road. Wilcox reached this latter position about four o'clock p. m., and Porter having before that time withdrawn his troops under cover, some troops from the confederate right (D. R. Jones's) were pushed to the front in the woods occupied by Porter's skirmishers, apparently to reconnoiter. This movement gave rise to the impression among Porter's officers (Morell's division) that the enemy was about to attack about five p. m.

General Pope having arrived some time after noon on the field in the rear of Groveton, and General McDowell's column approaching that part of the field by the Manassas and Sudley road, an attack was ordered upon the enemy's extreme left near Sudley, and a written order was sent, dated 4.30 p. m., to Porter to attack the enemy's right, and, if possible, his rear. After some time had elapsed, General Pope ordered McDowell, with King's division and other troops, to pursue up the Warrenton turnpike the enemy, who, thus to be assailed upon both flanks, would be compelled to retreat.

The attack on Jackson's left was begun by Kearney about five p. m.; but the order to Porter was not delivered in time. The messenger did not find General Porter until sunset. Thus, at five o'clock, nothing having occurred to suggest to General Porter any change in the plan indicated in the joint order to retire behind Bull Run instead of giving battle that day, the sound of artillery near Sudley, so much apparently to the rear of Groveton, suggested to Porter, who was then at Bethlehem Church, that Sigel was retiring or perhaps being driven back, and that his artillery was then in a new position near the Sudley Springs road.

If it was true that Sigel was being driven back, the military situation was extremely perilous, and Porter must instantly do what he could to avert disaster. His order to Morell, which must have been issued at that instant, shows what he proposed to do. It is as follows, namely:

"General MORELL: Push over to the aid of Sigel and strike in his rear. If you reach a road up which King is moving,* and he has got ahead of you, let him pass; but see if you cannot give help to Sigel. If you find him retiring, move back toward Manassas, and, should necessity require it, and you do not hear from me, push to Centreville. If you find the direct road filled, take the one via Union Mills, which is to the right as you return.

"F. J. PORTER,
"Major-General.

"Look to the points of the compass for Manassas.

"F. J. PORTER."

This movement would have left Porter with Sykes alone to hold the Manassas road and cover the retreat of Ricketts's worn-out troops, who were then stretched along the road for four or five miles both toward Sudley and back toward Manassas Junction, while Morell should cover the retreat of the center of the Army. But now, before Morell had time to commence this movement, came a report from him that the enemy was coming down in force to attack both his front and flank. Porter might in a few minutes have to meet the attack of twenty thousand men. The purpose to cover the retreat of Sigel must needs be abandoned. Hence Porter dispatched to Morell:

"General MORELL: Hold on, if you can, to your present place. What is passing?

"F. J. PORTER."

Again:

"General MORRELL: Tell me what is passing quickly. If the enemy is coming, hold to him, and I will come up. Post your men to repulse him.

"F. J. PORTER,
"Major-General."

And again, in reply to advice from Morell that they had better retire, &c.:

"We cannot retire while McDowell holds on."

Notwithstanding contradictory testimony, we believe it was at this time that Porter ordered Piatt's brigade, of Sturgis's command, about eight hundred men, to move back to Manassas Junction and take up a defensive position to cover the expected retreat.

General Porter reported to General McDowell his views and intentions in the following dispatches:

"Generals MCDOWELL and KING: I found it impossible to communicate by crossing the woods to Groveton. The enemy are in great force on this road, and as they appear to have driven our forces back, the fire of the enemy having advanced and ours retired, I have determined to withdraw to Manassas. I have attempted to communicate with McDowell and Sigel, but my messengers have run into the enemy. They have gathered artillery and cavalry and infantry, and the advancing masses of dust show the enemy coming in force. I am now going to the head of the column to see what is passing and how affairs are going, and I will communicate with you. Had you not better send your train back?

"F. J. PORTER,
"Major-General."

"General MCDOWELL or KING: I have been wandering over the woods and failed to get a communication to you. Tell how matters go with you. The enemy is in strong force in front of me, and I wish to know your designs for to-night. If left to me I shall have to retire for food and water, which I cannot get here. How goes the battle? It seems to go to our rear. The enemy are getting to our left.

"F. J. PORTER,
"Major-General Volunteers."

"General MCDOWELL: The firing on my right has so far retired that, as I cannot advance and have failed to get over to you except by the route taken by King, I shall withdraw to Manassas. If you have anything to communicate please do so. I have sent my messengers to you and General Sigel and get nothing.

"F. J. PORTER,
"Major-General.

"An artillery duel is going on now; been skirmishing for a long time.

"F. J. P."

"General MCDOWELL: Failed in getting Morell over to you. After wandering about the woods for a time I withdrew him, and while doing so artillery opened upon us. My scouts could not get through. Each one found the enemy between us, and I believe some have been captured. Infantry are also in front. I am trying to get a battery, but have not succeeded as yet. From the masses of dust on our left, and from reports of scouts, think the enemy are moving largely in that way. Please communicate the way this message came. I have no cavalry or messengers now. Please let me know your designs, whether you retire or not. I cannot get water and am out of provisions. Have lost a few men from infantry firing.

"F. J. PORTER,
"Major-General Volunteers.

"AUGUST 29—6 p. m."

But Porter soon found the sounds of artillery had deceived him. The renewal of the firing toward Groveton showed that Pope's troops were still there. Piatt's brigade was then recalled, and no further preparations for retreat were made.

Next came to Porter about 5.30 o'clock a report from the right that the enemy was in full retreat, and heavy sounds of musketry soon after showed that serious work had commenced near Groveton. Porter ordered Morell to make a strong reconnoissance to learn the truth. Morell, knowing the report must be false, at least as to the enemy in his front, prepared to support this reconnoissance with his whole division. While this preparation was being made came the long delayed order, dated 4.30 p. m., to attack the enemy in flank or rear:

"HEADQUARTERS IN THE FIELD,
"August 29—4.30 p. m.

"Major-General PORTER:

"Your line of march brings you in on the enemy's right flank. I desire you to push forward into action at once on the enemy's flank, and, if possible, on his rear, keeping your right in communication with General Reynolds. The enemy is massed in the woods in front of us, but can be shelled out as soon as you engage their flank. Keep heavy reserves and use your batteries, keeping well closed to your right all the time. In case you are obliged to fall back, do so to your right and rear, so as to keep you in close communication with the right wing.

"JOHN POPE,
"Major-General, Commanding."

This order, though dated at 4.30 p. m., was not receive by Porter, at Bethlehem church, before 6.30 p. m.

The evidence before the court-martial tending to show that Porter received the "4.30" order in time to execute it is found in the testimony of the officer who carried the order, and one of the orderlies who accompanied him. Neither of these two witnesses appears to have carried a watch, and their several statements of the time when the order was delivered were based on estimates of the time occupied by them in riding from General Pope's headquarters to the place where they found General Porter. One of them at least knew from an inspection of the order that it was dated at 4.30; he, and probably both of them, therefore assumed that it was then that they started to deliver it, and adding to that hour the estimated time occupied by them, they severally fixed the hour of delivery. It is now proved by the testimony of the officer who wrote the dispatch that "4.30" was not the hour when the message started, but was the hour when he began to write the dispatch, and consequently that it was after that hour that the officer started to deliver it.

It is also shown that these messengers did not and could not, if other parts of their own testimony are true, have traveled over the route which they supposed they had taken. Moreover, it was proved by unquestionable testimony, that since the court-martial trial one of these witnesses had made statements and admissions inconsistent with and contradictory of his former testimony, and the other witness confessed before us that recently he had deliberately made false statements in regard to the route taken while carrying the dispatch. We have therefore felt compelled to lay the testimony of these witnesses out of the case. An attempt was made to support these witnesses by the testimony of another person, who, as it was alleged, also accompanied as an orderly the officer charged with the dispatch, but his testimony was so completely broken down by cross-examination that we regard it as entitled to no weight whatever.

On the other hand, the testimony of General Sykes, Lieutenant-Colonel Locke, Captain Montieth, Lieutenant Ingham, and Lieutenant Weld before the court-martial, that the order in question was not delivered until about sundown, either a little before or a little after that hour, has now been supported by a new and entirely independent witness, Captain Randol, and has been singularly confirmed by the production, for the first time, of the dispatch from Porter to McDowell, dated 6 p. m., the terms of which utterly forbid the supposition that at that time Porter had received the order.

The moment this order was received Porter sent his chief of staff, Colonel Locke, to General Morell with orders to make the attack at once. He then wrote and sent a reply to Pope, and immediately rode to the front. On his arrival there Morell had about completed his preparations for the attack under the previous order to make a reconnaissance, but darkness had already come on. It was evidently impossible to accomplish any good that night, for, even if Morell might have begun the attack before dark, Sykes could not have been got into line after the order was received. The contest at Groveton had already so far spent its force as to derive no possible aid from Morell's attack. The order was based upon conditions manifestly erroneous and directed what was impossible to be done. To push Morell's division against the enemy in the dark would have been in no sense obedience to that order. Porter wisely ordered the preparations to cease, and the troops were put into position to pass the night, picketing in all directions, for Porter had but a few mounted men and the enemy had twenty-five hundred cavalry near his flank.

About this time, when darkness had come on, the rear of McDowell's column of weary troops was passing by the rear of Porter's column, still several miles from their destined place on the field. The Union Army was not even yet ready for battle.

The accompanying maps, marked Board Maps Nos. 2 and 3, exhibit substantially the military situation at the time the 4.30 p. m. order was issued, and that which was then understood by General Pope to exist, as explained to the court-martial upon the trial of General Porter.

We believe this plain and simple narrative of the events of the 28th of August clearly shows the true character of General Porter's conduct during that time. We are unable to find in that conduct anything subject to criticism, much less deserving of censure or condemnation.

Porter's duty that afternoon was too plain and simple to admit of discussion. It was to hold his position and cover the deployment of McDowell's troops until the latter, or some of them, should get into line; then to connect with them as far as might be necessary and practicable, and then, in the absence of further orders, to act in concert with those troops and others to the right.

If King's division had come up on the right, as was expected, and had advanced to attack, Porter would have known it instantly, and thus could have joined in the movement.

* The Sudley road.

If the main army retired, as indicated in the joint order, it was Porter's duty to retire also, after having held his ground long enough to protect its left flank and to cover the retreat of Ricketts's troops.

Porter did for a moment entertain the purpose of trying to give aid to Sigel, who was supposed to be retiring before McDowell had got King's division up to his support. That was the nearest to making a mistake that Porter came that afternoon. But it soon enough became evident that such a purpose must be abandoned; Porter had quite his full share of responsibility where he was.

The preparations made for retreat were the ordinary soldierly dispositions to enable him to do promptly what he had good reason to expect he might be required to do at any moment and must do at nightfall.

He made frequent reports to his superiors, stating what he had done and what he had been unable to do; what his situation was in respect to the enemy in his front and the strength of the enemy there; what his impressions were from the sounds of action toward his right; how he had failed thus far to get any communications from any commander in the main army, or any orders from General Pope; asking McDowell, who was nearest to him, for such information and his (McDowell's) designs for the night; sending an aid-de-camp to General Pope for orders and received no reply, not even information that the 4.30 order had been sent to him; and, finally, informing his superiors that if left to himself, without orders, he would have to retire at night for food and water, which he could not get where he was. These reports were sent not only frequently, but early enough to insure the receipt of orders from Pope or correct information from McDowell, if they had any to send him, before it would be time for him to withdraw. All these dispatches were sent in the latter part of the afternoon. They all indicated a purpose to retire only after being assured that the main army was retiring, and then to cover the retreat of the army as far as possible, or to withdraw after nightfall, as the joint order had indicated, if no further orders or information of General Pope's plans could be obtained.

There is no indication in any of those dispatches, when fairly construed, nor in anything which Porter did or said, of any intention to withdraw until after dark, unless compelled to do so by the retreat of the main army; and even then he was compelled to hold on until McDowell's troops could get out of the way, and that was not until after dark, for Ricketts's division was on the road in Porter's rear all the afternoon.

It is perfectly clear that Porter had no thought whatever of retreating from the enemy, or of withdrawing because of the enemy in his front; for when the enemy was reported advancing as if to attack, his orders were: "If the enemy is coming, hold to him." "Post your troops to repulse him." "We cannot retire while McDowell holds on."

It appears to have been assumed in the condemnation of General Porter's conduct that he had some order to attack or some information of aggressive plans on the part of General Pope, or some intimation, suggestion, or direction to that effect from General McDowell, or that there was such a battle going on within his hearing, or something else in the military situation, that required him to attack the enemy without orders before receiving the 4.30 p. m. order at sunset. All this was the exact reverse of the truth. General Pope's last order, General McDowell's directions while he was with General Porter, the military situation as then known to both Porter and McDowell, and the movement McDowell had decided to make to get his own troops into line of battle, and the state of the action on the right of the field, all combined to absolutely forbid any attack by Porter during that entire afternoon until he received Pope's order at sunset, and even that order could not possibly have been given if the situation had been correctly understood. An attack by him would have been a violation of the spirit of his orders and a criminal blunder leading to inevitable disaster. In short, he had no choice as a faithful soldier but to do substantially what he did do.

The range of our investigation has not enabled us to ascertain the source of the great error which was committed in the testimony before General Porter's court-martial respecting the time of arrival of the main body of Lee's army on the field of Manassas. But the information which was in possession of the Union officers at noon of the 29th of August, and afterward published in their official reports, together with the testimony before the court-martial, affords clear, explicit, and convincing proof that the main body of that army must have been there on the field at that time.

The recent testimony of confederate officers hardly adds anything to the conclusiveness of that proof, but rather diminishes its force by showing that one division (Anderson's) did not arrive until the next morning; while the information in their possession at that time required the Union officers to assume that that division as well as the others had arrived on the 29th. Yet General Porter's conduct was adjudged upon the assumption that not more than one division under Longstreet had arrived on the field, and that Porter had no considerable force in his front.

The fact is that Longstreet, with four divisions of full twenty-five thousand men, was there on the field before Porter arrived with his two divisions of nine thousand men; that the confederate general-in-chief was there in person at least two or three hours before the commander of the Army of Virginia himself arrived on the field, and that Porter with his two divisions saved the Army of Virginia that day from the disaster naturally due to the enemy's earlier preparation for battle.

If the 4.30 order had been promptly delivered, a very grave responsibility would have devolved upon General Porter. The order was based upon conditions which were essentially erroneous, and upon expectations which could not possibly be realized.

It required an attack upon the enemy's flank or rear, which could not be made, and that the attacking force keep closed on Reynolds, who was far to the right and beyond reach. Yet it would have been too late to correct the error and have the order modified. That order appeared to be part of a general plan. It must be executed promptly or not at all. If Porter had made, not the impossible attack which was ordered, but a direct attack upon the enemy's right wing, would he have been blameless for the fruitless sacrifice of his troops? We believe not. It is a well-established military maxim that a corps commander is not justifiable in making an apparently hopeless attack in obedience to an order from a superior who is not on the spot, and who is evidently in error in respect to the essential conditions upon which the order is based. The duty of the corps commander in such a case is to make not a real attack, but a strong demonstration, so as to prevent the enemy in his front from sending re-enforcements to other parts of his line.

This is all that Porter would have been justifiable in doing, even if he had received the 4.30 order at five o'clock; and such a demonstration, or even a real attack made after five o'clock by Porter alone, could have had no beneficial effect whatever upon the general result. It would not have diminished in the least the resistance offered to the attacks made at other points that afternoon. The display of troops made by Porter earlier in the afternoon had all the desired and all possible beneficial effect. It caused Longstreet's reserve division to be sent to his extreme right in front of Porter's position. There that division remained until about six o'clock—too late for it to take any effective part in the operations at other points of the line.

A powerful and well-sustained attack by the combined forces of Porter's corps and King's division upon the enemy's right wing, if it had been commenced early in the afternoon, might have drawn to that part of the field so large a part of Longstreet's force as to have given Pope some chance of success against Jackson; but an attack by Porter alone could have been but an ineffective blow, destructive only to the force that made it, and, followed by a counter-attack, disastrous to the Union Army. Such an attack, under such circumstances, would have been not only a great blunder, but, on the part of an intelligent officer, it would have been a great crime.

What General Porter actually did do, although his situation was by no means free from embarrassment and anxiety at the time, now seems to have been only the simple, necessary action which an intelligent soldier had no choice but to take. It is not possible that any court-martial could have condemned such conduct if it had been correctly understood. On the contrary, that conduct was obedient, subordinate, faithful, and judicious. It saved the Union army from disaster on the 29th of August.

This ends the transactions upon which were based the charges of which General Porter was pronounced guilty; but some account of the part taken by him and his corps in the events of the following day, August 30, which gave rise to a charge which was withdrawn, is necessary to a full understanding of the merits of the case.

At three a. m. of the 30th, General Porter received the following order, and in compliance with it promptly withdrew from his position in presence of the enemy and marched rapidly by the Sudley road to the center of the battle-field, where he reported to General Pope for orders:

"HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF VIRGINIA,
"IN THE FIELD NEAR BULL RUN,
"August 29, 1862—8.50 p. m.

"GENERAL: Immediately upon receipt of this order, the precise hour of receiving which you will acknowledge, you will march your command to the field of battle of to-day and report to me in person for orders. You are to understand that you are expected to comply strictly with this order, and to be present on the field within three hours after its reception, or after daybreak to-morrow morning.

"JOHN POPE,
"Major-General, Commanding.

"Major-General F. J. PORTER."

[Received August 30—3.30 a. m.]

At first sight it would appear that in this prompt and unhesitating movement, under this order General Porter committed a grave fault. He was already on the field of battle, confronting the enemy in force, and holding a position of vital importance to the security of Pope's army; while the latter appeared, from the order, to be wholly in the dark respecting these all-important facts. It is true the order was most positive, imperative, and also distrustful in its terms. But those very terms served to show only the more forcibly that the order was based upon a total misapprehension of the essential facts, without which misapprehension it would not seem possible that such an order could have been issued. The well-established military rule is that such an order must never be obeyed until the commander who gave it has been informed of his error and given an opportunity to correct it; but, upon close examination, the opposite view of Porter's conduct under this order appears to be the just one.

Porter had repeatedly reported to McDowell the presence of the enemy in large force in his front. Presumably these reports had gone to Pope, as one of them had in fact. Porter had also sent an aid-de-camp with a written message to Pope about four p. m., and had sent a written reply to the 4.30 p. m. order after 6 30 p. m. These last two dispatches have not been preserved by General Pope, and hence their contents are not known to us; but we are bound to presume that they reported the situation as Porter then knew it, and as he had frequently reported it to McDowell, and the last of these dispatches, in reply to the 4.30 p m. order, was later than the latest of those in which Porter had spoken of any intention to fall back. Hence Porter had already given to his superior all the information which it was possible for him to give, and nothing remained for him but to obey the order. This movement of Porter's corps on the morning of the 30th was the beginning of the unfortunate operations of that day. This corps, which had been protecting the left flank of Pope's army, was withdrawn from its important position, leaving the left wing and flank exposed to attack by greatly superior force of the enemy, brought to the center of the field and then ordered "in pursuit of the enemy."

["Special Orders No. —.]

"HEADQUARTERS NEAR GROVETON,
"August 30, 1862—12 m.

"The following forces will be immediately thrown forward in pursuit of the enemy and press him vigorously during the whole day. Major-General McDowell is assigned to the command of the pursuit; Major-General Porter's corps will push forward on the Warrenton turnpike, followed by the divisions of Brigadier-Generals King and Reynolds. The division of Brigadier-General Ricketts will pursue the Hay Market road, followed by the corps of Major-General Heintzelman. The necessary cavalry will be assigned to these columns by Major-General McDowell, to whom regular and frequent reports will be made. The general headquarters will be somewhere on the Warrenton turnpike.

"HEADQUARTERS THIRD CORPS, ARMY OF VIRGINIA.
"August 30, 1862.

"Major-General PORTER,
"Commanding, &c.:

"Major-General McDowell, being charged with the advanced forces ordered to pursue the enemy, directs me to inform you that your corps will be followed immediately by King's division, supported by Reynolds. Heintzelman, with his corps, preceded by Rickett's division, will move on your right, on the road from Sudley Springs to Hay Market. He is instructed to throw out skirmishers to the left, which it is desirable you should join with your right. General McDowell's headquarters will be at the head of Reynold's division, on the Warrenton road. Organize a strong advance to precede your command, and push on rapidly in pursuit of the enemy until you come in contact with him. Report frequently. Bayard's brigade will be ordered to report to you; push it well to the left as you advance.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"ED. SCHRIVER,
"Colonel and Chief of Staff."

These orders led to an attack upon the confederate left wing, Jackson's command, made mainly by Butterfield's and Barnes brigades, of Morell's division, and by Sykes's division, which is described as follows by the confederate generals:

[Extract from General Lee's report of operations of the army of Northern Virginia, battle of Manassas.]

"HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF NORTHERN VIRGINIA, March 6, 1863.

"SIR: * * * About three p. m. the enemy, having massed his troops in front of General Jackson, advanced against his position in strong force. His front line pushed forward until engaged at close quarters by Jackson's troops, when its progress was checked, and a fierce and bloody struggle ensued. A second and third line, of great strength, moved up to support the first, but in doing so came within easy range of a position a little in advance of Longstreet's left. He immediately ordered up two batteries, and two others being thrown forward about the same time by Colonel S. D. Lee, under their well-directed and destructive fire the supporting lines were broken and fell back in confusion. Their repeated efforts to rally were unavailing, and Jackson's troops being thus relieved from the pressure of overwhelming numbers, began to press steadily forward, driving the enemy before them. He retreated in confusion, suffering severely from our artillery, which advanced as he retired. General Longstreet, anticipating the order for a general advance, now threw his whole command against the Federal center and left. * * *

"I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"R. E. LEE,
"General.

"General S. COOPER,
"Adjutant and Inspector-General, Richmond, Va."

[Extract from the report of General James Longstreet, October 10, 1862.]

* * * "During the day Colonel S. D. Lee, with his reserve artillery placed in the position occupied the day previous by General Walton, engaged the enemy in a very severe artillery combat. The result was, as the day previous, a success. At 3.30 o'clock in the afternoon I rode to the front for the purpose of completing arrangements for making a diversion in favor of a flank movement then under contemplation. Just after reaching my front line I received a message for re-enforcements for General Jackson, who was said to be severely pressed. From an eminence near by, one portion of the enemy's masses attacking General Jackson were immediately within my view and in easy range of batteries in that position. It gave me an advantage that I had not expected to have, and I made haste to use it. Two batteries were ordered for the purpose, and one placed in position immediately and opened. Just as the fire began I received a message from the commanding general informing me of General Jackson's condition and his wants. As it was evident that the attack against General Jackson could not be continued ten minutes under the fire of these batteries, I made no movement with my troops."

[Extract from report of General Jackson of operations from August 15 to September 5, 1862.]

"HEADQUARTERS SECOND CORPS, A. N. V., April 27, 1863.

"GENERAL: After some desultory skirmishing and heavy cannonading during the day, the Federal infantry, about four o'clock in the evening, moved from under cover of the wood and advanced in several lines, first engaging the right, but soon extending its attack to the center and left. In a few moments our entire line was engaged in a fierce and sanguinary struggle with the enemy. As one line was repulsed another took its place and pressed forward as if determined, by force of numbers and fury of assault, to drive us from our positions. So impetuous and well sustained were these onsets as to induce me to send to the commanding general for re-enforcements; but the timely and gallant advance of General Longstreet on the right relieved my troops from the pressure of overwhelming numbers, and gave to these brave men the chances of a more equal conflict. As Longstreet pressed upon the right the Federal advance was checked, and soon a general advance of my whole line was ordered.

"T. J. JACKSON,
"Lieutenant-General.

"Brigadier-General R. H. CHILTON,
"A. A. A. General Headquarters Department A. N. V."

As Longstreet's army pressed forward to strike Pope's exposed left wing and flank, Warren, with his little brigade, sprung into the gap and breasted the storm until but a handful of his brave men were left alive. Then Sykes, with his disciplined brigades, and Reynolds, with his gallant Pennsylvania Reserves, seized the commanding ground in rear, and, like a rock, withstood the advance of the victorious enemy and saved the Union Army from rout.

Thus did this gallant corps nobly and amply vindicate the character of their trusted chief, and demonstrate to all the world that "disobedience of orders" and "misbehavior in the presence of the enemy" are crimes which could not possibly find place in the head or heart of him who thus commanded that corps.

These events of the 30th of August were excluded from the evidence before the court-martial that tried General Porter; but justice requires that they should be mentioned here as having an important bearing upon the question of animus which was so strongly dwelt upon in the review of Porter's case by the Judge-Advocate-General.

The foregoing is the simple history of the part taken by Porter and his corps in the events which gave rise to the following charges and specifications, findings and sentence, and executive action:

["General Orders No. 18.]

"WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
"Washington, January 22, 1863.

"I. Before a general court-martial which convened in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, November 27, 1862, pursuant to Special Orders No. 362, dated Headquarters of the Army, November 25, 1862, and of which Major-General D. Hunter, United States volunteers, is president, was arraigned and tried Major-General Fitz-John Porter, United States volunteers.

"CHARGE I.—Violation of the ninth article of war.

"SPECIFICATION FIRST.—In this: that the said Major-General Fitz-John Porter, of the volunteers of the United States, having received a lawful order, on or about the 27th August, 1862, while at or near Warrenton Junction, in Virginia, from Major-General John Pope, his superior and commanding officer, in the following figures and letters, to wit:

"'HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF VIRGINIA,
"'August 27, 1862—6.30 p. m., Bristoe Station.

"'GENERAL: The major-general commanding directs that you start at one o'clock to-night and come forward with your whole corps, or such part of it as is with you, so as to be here by daylight to-morrow morning. Hooker has had a very severe action with the enemy, with a loss of about three hundred killed and wounded. The enemy has been driven back, but is retiring along the railroad. We must drive him from Manassas and clear the country between that place and Gainesville, where McDowell is. If Morell has not joined you, send word to him to push forward immediately; also send word to Banks to hurry forward with all speed to take your place at Warrenton Junction. It is necessary, on all accounts, that you should be here by daylight. I send an officer with this dispatch, who will conduct you to this place. Be sure to send word to Banks, who is on the road from Fayetteville, probably in the direction of Bealeton. Say to Banks, also, that he had best run back the railroad train to this side of Cedar Run. If he is not with you, write him to that effect.

"'By command of Major-General Pope.

"'GEO. D. RUGGLES,
"'Colonel and Chief of Staff.

"'Major-General F. J. PORTER,
"'Warrenton Junction.

"'P. S.—If Banks is not at Warrenton Junction, leave a regiment of infantry and two pieces of artillery as a guard till he comes up, with instructions to follow you immediately. If Banks is not at the junction instruct Colonel Clary to run the trains back to this side of Cedar Run, and post a regiment and section of artillery with it.

"'By command of Major-General Pope.

"'GEO. D. RUGGLES,
"'Colonel and Chief of Staff.'

did then and there disobey the said order, being at the time in the face of the enemy. This at or near Warrenton, in the State of Virginia, on or about the 28th of August, 1862.

"SPECIFICATION SECOND.—In this: that the said Major-General Fitz-John Porter, being in front of the enemy, at Manassas, Virginia, on or about the morning of August 29, 1862, did receive from Major-General John Pope, his superior and commanding officer, a lawful order, in the following letters and figures, to wit:

"'HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF VIRGINIA,
"'Centreville, August 29, 1862.

"'Generals MCDOWELL and PORTER:

"'You will please move forward with your joint commands toward Gainesville. I sent General Porter written orders to that effect an hour and a half ago. Heintzelman, Sigel, and Reno are moving on the Warrenton turnpike, and must now be not far from Gainesville. I desire that as soon as communication is established between this force and your own the whole command shall halt. It may be necessary to fall back behind Bull Run at Centreville to-night. I presume it will be so on account of our supplies. I have sent no orders of any description to Ricketts, and none to interfere in any way with the movements of McDowell's troops, except what I sent by his aid-de-camp last night, which were to hold his position on the Warrenton pike until the troops from here should fall on the enemy's flank and rear. I do not even know Ricketts's position, as I have not been able to find out where General McDowell was until a late hour this morning. General McDowell will take immediate steps to communicate with General Ricketts and instruct him to join the other divisions of his corps as soon as practicable. If any considerable advantages are to be gained by departing from this order, it will not be strictly carried out. One thing must be held in view: that the troops must occupy a position from which they can reach Bull Run to-night or by morning. The indications are that the whole force of the enemy is moving in this direction at a pace that will bring them here by to-morrow night or the next day. My own headquarters will for the present be with Heintzelman's corps or at this place.

"'JOHN POPE,
"'Major-General Commanding.'

which order the said Major-General Porter did then and there disobey. This at or near Manassas, in the State of Virginia, on or about the 29th of August, 1862.

"SPECIFICATION THIRD.—In this: that the said Major-General Fitz-John Porter having been in front of the enemy during the battle of Manassas, on Friday, the 29th of August, 1862, did on that day receive from Major-General John Pope, his superior and commanding officer, a lawful order, in the following letters and figures, to wit:

"'HEADQUARTERS IN THE FIELD,
"'August 29, 1862—4.30 p. m.

"'Major-General PORTER:

"'Your line of march brings you in on the enemy's right flank. I desire you to push forward into action at once on the enemy's flank, and, if possible, on his rear, keeping your right in communication with General Reynolds. The enemy is massed in the woods in front of us, but can be shelled out as soon as you engage their flank. Keep heavy reserves, and use your batteries, keeping well closed to your right all the time. In case you are obliged to fall back, do so to your right and rear, so as to keep you in close communication with the right wing.

"'JOHN POPE,
"'Major-General, Commanding.'

which said order the said Major-General Porter did then and there disobey, and did fail to push forward his forces into action either on the enemy's flank or rear, and in all other respects did fail to obey said order. This at or near Manassas, in the State of Virginia, on or about the 29th of August, 1862.

"SPECIFICATION FOURTH.—In that the said Major-General Fitz-John Porter, being at or near Manassas Junction on the night of 29th August, 1862, did receive from Major-General John Pope, his superior and commanding officer, a lawful order, in figures and words as follows, to wit:

"'HEADQUARTERS ARMY VIRGINIA, IN THE FIELD NEAR BULL RUN,
"'August 29, 1862—8.50 p. m.

"'GENERAL: Immediately upon receipt of this order, the precise hour of receiving which you will acknowledge, you will march your command to the field of battle of to-day, and report to me in person for orders. You are to understand that you are expected to comply strictly with this order, and to be present on the field within three hours after its reception, or after daybreak to-morrow morning.

"'JOHN POPE,
"'Major-General, Commanding.

"'Major-General F. J. PORTER.'

"And the said Major-General Fitz-John Porter did then and there disobey the said order, and did permit one of the brigades of his command to march to Centreville—out of the way of the field of battle—and there to remain during the entire day of Saturday, the 30th of August. This at or near Manassas Station, in the State of Virginia, on the 29th and 30th days of August, 1862.

"SPECIFICATION FIFTH.—In this: that the said Major-General Fitz-John Porter, being at or near Manassas Station, in the State of Virginia, on the night of the 29th August, 1862, and having received from his superior commanding officer, Major-General John Pope, the lawful order set forth in specification 4 to this charge, did then and there disobey the same, and did permit one other brigade attached to his command—being the brigade commanded by Brigadier-General A. S. Piatt—to march to Centreville, and did thereby greatly delay the arrival of the said General Piatt's brigade on the field of the battle of Manassas, on Saturday, the 30th August, 1862. This at or near Manassas, in the State of Virginia, on or about the 29th day of August, 1862.

"CHARGE II.—Violation of the fifty-second article of war.

"SPECIFICATION FIRST.—In this: that the said Major-General Fitz-John Porter, during the battle of Manassas, on Friday, the 29th August, 1862, and while within sight of the field and in full hearing of its artillery, did receive from Major-General John Pope, his superior and commanding officer, a lawful order to attack the enemy, in the following figures and letters, to wit:

"'HEADQUARTERS IN THE FIELD,
"'August 29, 1862—4.30 p. m.

"'Major-General PORTER:

"'Your line of march brings you in on the enemy's right flank. I desire you to push forward into action at once on the enemy's flank, and, if possible, on his rear, keeping your right in communication with General Reynolds. The enemy is massed in the woods in front of us, but can be shelled out as soon as you engage their flank. Keep heavy reserves, and use your batteries, keeping well closed to your right all the time. In case you are obliged to fall back, do so to your right and rear, so as to keep you in close communication with the right wing.

"'JOHN POPE,
"'Major-General, Commanding.'

which said order the said Major-General Porter did then and there shamefully disobey, and did retreat from advancing forces of the enemy without any attempt to engage them, or to aid the troops who were already fighting greatly superior numbers, and were relying on the flank attack he was thus ordered to make to secure a decisive victory and to capture the enemy's army, a result which must have followed from said flank attack had it been made by the said General Porter in compliance with the said order which he so shamefully disobeyed. This at or near Manassas, in the State of Virginia, on or about the 29th of August, 1862.

"SPECIFICATION SECOND.—In this: that the said Major-General Fitz-John Porter, being with his army corps on Friday, the 29th of August, 1862, between Manassas Station and the field of battle then pending between the forces of the United States and those of the rebels, and within sound of the guns and in the presence of the enemy, and knowing that a severe action of great consequence was being fought, and that the aid of his corps was greatly needed, did fail all day to bring it on to the field, and did shamefully fall back and retreat from the advance of the enemy without any attempt to give them battle, and without knowing the forces from which he shamefully retreated. This near Manassas Station, in the State of Virginia, on the 29th of August, 1862.

"SPECIFICATION THIRD.—In this: that the said Major-General Fitz-John Porter, being with his army corps near the field of battle of Manassas on the 29th of August, 1862, while a severe action was being fought by the troops of Major-General Pope's command, and being in the belief that the troops of the said General Pope were sustaining defeat and retiring from the field, did shamefully fail to go to the aid of the said troops and general, and did shamefully retreat away, and did fall back with his army to the Manassas Junction, and leave to the disasters of a presumed defeat the said army; and did fail, by any attempt to attack the enemy, to aid in averting the misfortune of a disaster that would have endangered the safety of the capital of the country. This at or near Manassas Station, in the State of Virginia, on the 29th day of August, 1862.

"SPECIFICATION FOURTH.—In this: that the said Major-General Fitz-John Porter, on the field of battle of Manassas, on Saturday, the 30th August, 1862, having received a lawful order from his superior officer and commanding general, Major-General John Pope, to engage the enemy's lines, and to carry a position near the center, and to take an annoying battery there posted, did proceed in the execution of that order with unnecessary slowness, and by delays give the enemy opportunities to watch and know his movements, and to prepare to meet his attack; and did finally so feebly fall upon the enemy's lines as to make little or no impression on the same, and did fall back and draw away his forces unnecessarily, and without making any of the great personal efforts to rally his troops or to keep their lines, or to inspire his troops to meet the sacrifices and to make the resistance demanded by the importance of his position, and the momentous consequences and disasters of a retreat at so critical a junction of the day.

"To which charges and specifications the accused, Major-General Fitz-John Porter, United States Volunteers, pleaded as follows:

"'CHARGE I.

"'To specification first, 'Not guilty.'
"'To specification second, 'Not guilty.'
"'To specification third, 'Not guilty.'
"'To specification fourth, 'Not guilty.'
"'To specification fifth, 'Not guilty.'
"'And to the charge, 'Not guilty.'

"'CHARGE II.

"'To specification first, 'Not guilty.'
"'To specification second, 'Not guilty.'
"'To specification third, 'Not guilty.'
"'And to the charge, 'Not guilty.'

"'FINDING.

"'The court, having maturely considered the evidence adduced, finds the accused, Major-General Fitz-John Porter, of United States volunteers, as follows:

"'CHARGE I.—Of the first specification, 'Guilty.' Of the second specification, 'Guilty.' Of the third specification, 'Guilty.' Of the fourth specification, 'Not guilty.' Of the fifth specification, 'Not guilty.' Of the charge, 'Guilty.'

"'CHARGE II.—Of the first specification, 'Guilty, except so much of the specification as implies that he, the accused, 'did retreat from advancing forces of the enemy,' after the receipt of the order set forth in said specification.' Of the second specification, 'Guilty.' Of the third specification, 'Guilty, except the words, 'to the Manassas Junction.'' Of the charge, 'Guilty.'

"SENTENCE.

"'And the court therefore does sentence him, Major-General Fitz-John Porter, of the United States volunteers, 'to be cashiered, and to be forever disqualified from holding any office of trust or profit under the Government of the United States.'

These charges and specifications certainly bear no discernible resemblance to the facts of the case as now established. Yet it has been our duty to carefully compare with these facts the views entertained by the court-martial, as shown in the findings and in the review of the case which was prepared for the information of the President by the Judge-Advocate-General who had conducted the prosecution, and thus to clearly perceive every error into which the court-martial was led. We trust it is not necessary for us to submit in detail the results of this comparison, and that it will be sufficient for us to point out the fundamental errors, and to say that all the essential facts in every instance stand out in clear and absolute contrast to those supposed facts upon which General Porter was adjudged guilty.

The fundamental errors upon which the conviction of General Porter depended may be summed up in a few words. It was maintained, and apparently established to the satisfaction of the court-martial, that only about one-half of the confederate army was on the field of Manassas on the 29th of August, while General Lee, with the other half, was still beyond the Bull Run Mountains; that General Pope's army, exclusive of Porter's corps, was engaged in a severe and nearly equal contest with the enemy, and only needed the aid of a flank attack which Porter was expected to make to insure the defeat and destruction or capture of the confederate force in their front under General Jackson; that McDowell and Porter, with their joint forces, Porter's leading, had advanced toward Gainesville until the head of their column had reached a point near the Warrenton turnpike, where they found a division of confederate troops, "seventeen regiments," which Buford had counted as they marched through Gainesville, marching along the road across Porter's front, and going toward the field of battle at Groveton; that McDowell ordered Porter to at once attack that column thus moving to join Jackson, or the flank and rear of the line if they had formed in line, while he would take his own troops by the Sudley Springs road and throw them upon the enemy's center near Groveton; that Porter, McDowell having then separated from him, disobeyed that order to attack, allowed that division of the enemy's troops to pass him unmolested, and then fell back and retreated toward Manassas Junction; that Porter then remained in the rear all the afternoon, listening to the sounds of battle and coolly contemplating a presumed defeat of his comrades on the center and right of the field; that this division of the enemy having passed Porter's column and formed on the right of Jackson's line, near Groveton, an order was sent to Porter to attack the right flank on the rear of the enemy's line, upon which his own line of march must bring him, but that he had willfully disobeyed, and made no attempt to execute that order; that in this way was lost the opportunity to destroy Jackson's detached force before the other wing of General Lee's army could join it, and that this junction having been effected during the night of the 29th, the defeat of General Pope's army on the 30th thus resulted from General Porter's neglect and disobedience.

Now, in contrast to these fundamental errors, the following all-important facts are fully established:

As Porter was advancing toward Gainesville, and while yet nearly four miles from that place and more than two miles from the nearest point of the Warrenton turnpike, he met the right wing of the confederate army, twenty-five thousand strong, which had arrived on the field that morning and was already in line of battle. Not being at that moment quite fully informed of the enemy's movements, and being then under orders from Pope to push rapidly toward Gainesville, Porter was pressing forward to attack the enemy in his front, when McDowell arrived on the field with later information of the enemy, and later and very different orders from Pope, assumed the command, and arrested Porter's advance. This latter information left no room for doubt that the main body of Lee's army was already on the field and far in advance of Pope's army in preparation for battle. General McDowell promptly decided not to attempt to go farther to the front, but to deploy his column so as to form line in connection with General Pope's right wing, which was then engaged with Jackson. To do this General McDowell separated his corps entirely from General Porter's, and thus relinquished the command and all right to the command of Porter's corps. McDowell did not give Porter any order to attack, nor did he give him any orders whatever to govern his action after their separation.

It does not appear from the testimony that he conveyed to General Porter in any way the erroneous view of the military situation which was afterward maintained before the court-martial, nor that he suggested to General Porter any expectation that he would make an attack. On the contrary, the testimony of all the witnesses as to what was actually said and done; the information which McDowell and Porter then had respecting the enemy, and the movement which McDowell decided to make, and did make, with his own troops, prove conclusively that there was left no room for doubt in Porter's mind that his duty was to stand on the defensive and hold his position until McDowell's movement could be completed. It would have indicated a great error of military judgment to have done or ordered the contrary in the situation as then fully known to both McDowell and Porter.

General Pope appears from his orders and from his testimony to have been at that time wholly ignorant of the true situation. He had disapproved of the sending of Ricketts to Thoroughfare Gap to meet Longstreet on the 28th, believing that the main body of Lee's army could not reach the field of Manassas before the night of the 30th. Hence he sent the order to Porter dated 4.30 p. m., to attack Johnson's right flank or rear. Fortunately that order did not reach Porter until about sunset, too late for any attack to be made. Any attack which Porter could have made at any time that afternoon must necessarily have been fruitless of any good result. Porter's faithful, subordinate, and intelligent conduct that afternoon saved the Union Army from the defeat which would otherwise have resulted that day from the enemy's more speedy concentration. The only seriously critical period of that campaign, namely, between eleven a. m. and sunset of August 29, was thus safely passed. Porter had understood and appreciated the military situation, and so far as he had acted upon his own judgment his action had been wise and judicious. For the disaster of the succeeding day he was in no degree responsible. Whoever else may have been responsible, it did not flow from any action or inaction of his.

The judgment of the court-martial upon General Porter's conduct was evidently based upon greatly erroneous impressions, not only respecting what that conduct really was and the orders under which he was acting, but also respecting all the circumstances under which he acted. Especially was this true in respect to the character of the battle of the 29th of August. That battle consisted of a number of sharp and gallant combats between small portions of the opposing forces. Those combats were of short duration and were separated by long intervals of simple skirmishing and artillery duels. Until after six o'clock only a small part of the troops on either side were engaged at any time during the afternoon. Then about sunset, one additional division on each side was engaged near Groveton. The musketry of that last contest and the yells of the confederate troops about dark were distinctly heard by the officers of Porter's corps; but at no other time during all that afternoon was the volume of musketry such that it could be heard at the position of Porter's troops. No sound but that of artillery was heard by them during all those hours when Porter was understood by the court-martial to have been listening to the sounds of a furious battle raging immediately to his right. And those sounds of artillery were by no means such as to indicate a general battle.

The reports of the 29th and those of the 30th of August have somehow been strangely confounded with each other. Even the confederate reports have, since the determination of the war, been similarly misconstrued. Those of the 30th have been misquoted as referring to the 29th, thus to prove that a furious battle was going on while Porter was comparatively inactive on the 29th. The fierce and gallant struggle of his own troops on the 30th has thus been used to sustain the original error under which he was condemned. General Porter was, in effect, condemned for not having taken any part in his own battle. Such was the error upon which General Porter was pronounced guilty of the most shameful crime known among soldiers. We believe no one among all the gallant soldiers on that bloody field was less deserving of such condemnation than he.

The evidence of bad animus in Porter's case ceases to be material in view of the evidence of his soldierly and faithful conduct. But it is our duty to say that the indiscreet and unkind terms in which General Porter expressed his distrust of the capacity of his superior commander cannot be defended. And to that indiscretion was due, in a very great measure, the misrepresentation of both his motives and his conduct and his consequent condemnation.

Having thus given the reasons for our conclusions, we have the honor to report, in accordance with the President's order, that, in our opinion, justice requires at his hands such action as may be necessary to annul and set aside the findings and sentence of the court-martial in the case of Major-General Fitz-John Porter, and to restore him to the positions of which that sentence deprived him—such restoration to take effect from the date of his dismissal from service.

Very respectfully, your obedient servants,

J. M. SCHOFIELD,
Major-General United States Army.

which said report your committee beg leave to incorporate in this, the report of your committee, as a part thereof, and fully concurring therein, they have deemed it a further duty as a proper measure of relief in the premises, to present herewith the accompanying bill and recommend the passage thereof.

Members of the Committee.

Mr. McCOOK submitted the following as the views of the minority:

The minority of the Committee on Military Affairs submit the following report, giving some of the reasons why they cannot approve and support House bill No. 2976. That bill, which meets with the approval of the majority, sets aside and revokes the findings of the court-martial by which Fitz-John Porter was cashiered, on the grounds that the findings and sentence "were based in error, and without due knowledge of the facts in the case." It also restores him to the service of the United States, with all the rank and privileges to which he would have been entitled had there been no court. It creates the new and, so far as we know, heretofore unknown position of supernumerary colonel for him, to be held by him until a vacancy occurs, when he is to be regularly assigned; and it gives him the retired pay of a major-general and colonel, amounting, in the aggregate, to the enormous sum of between fifty and sixty thousand dollars.

All this, as the majority say, because he has had a wrong done him, because he has been deprived of the rights of citizenship upon unfounded charges, and because he has been at great expense in vindicating his character and conduct as an officer and soldier from the disgrace and obloquy cast upon him. To each and every one of these assertions the minority of your committee object, and from the conclusions drawn and the bill itself they dissent.

It is with great regret and a very considerable degree of embarrassment that they find it necessary to do so. Regret, because no one can read unmoved the appeals of General Porter; and embarrassment, because the majority have adopted as the basis of their report the finding and recommendation of the board of officers convened by the President of the United States in June, 1878. That board was composed of three distinguished officers of the Army—two graduates of the Military Academy—and naturally, perhaps, its report is entitled to weight. Notwithstanding this the minority of your committee, in the discharge of the duty imposed upon them, do not hesitate to antagonize the findings of the board, and to express the opinion that they were based largely upon evidence not fairly or properly applicable to a correct determination of the case.

At all events, the record shows that although the board was convened by the President in order that "he might be fully informed of the facts of the case," the information given by it only satisfied him—to quote his language—"that he ought to lay the proceedings and conclusions before Congress." In this shape and in this manner it has reached the Committee on Military Affairs, and with a clear understanding of the apparent presumption of the non-professional and ex-volunteer mind criticising the conclusions of a board of regular officers, we have the honor to submit the following:

In August, 1862, Fitz-John Porter was a major-general of volunteers, colonel and brevet brigadier-general in the Regular Army, and in command of the Fifth Army Corps. For certain alleged offenses he was tried and convicted by a court-martial and sentenced to be cashiered, and on the 21st of January, 1863, the sentence was approved by Abraham Lincoln, then President of the United States. In this connection it is proper to state that the appeal made by Porter to President Lincoln in August, 1863, for a reopening of the case was disregarded, as were the subsequent ones to President Johnson in 1867 and to President Grant in 1869. The charges upon which General Porter was tried were violation of the ninth and fifty-second articles of war, the punishment for which was death, or such other penalty as a court-martial might inflict. Generally speaking, they provide for the punishment of any officer or soldier who disobeys the command of his superior officer, or for the punishment of any officer or soldier who misbehaves himself in the presence of the enemy.

On these charges General Porter was found guilty, was cashiered, and forever disqualified from holding any office of profit or trust under the Government of the United States. His trial was held within a few months of the battle of Manassas, and when witnesses who were present on the side of the national forces were easily obtained. The movements of the armies were fresh in the minds of those interested; the court was composed of men eminent in their profession, six of them graduates of West Point, some intimate personal friends of the accused, and some have become equally eminent in civil life; and nothing has been shown to convince us that they were not honestly anxious to do justice in accordance with their oaths, without partiality, favor, or affection. Porter himself made no objection to the detail of the court, and, in addressing it, said, "Yourselves most, if not all, have known me well."

The proceedings lasted for forty-five days, and many witnesses appeared before it, including Generals Pope, McDowell, Heintzelman, Morell, Griffin, Reynolds, Sykes, Butterfield, and Buford, who commanded corps, divisions, and brigades on the days of the 27th, 28th, 29th, and 30th of August, 1862. In addition, the court had the benefit of the testimony of Generals McClellan, BURNSIDE, Parke, and others, who were not present in the action, but were conversant with some of the facts connected with it, and the accused was represented by distinguished counsel. After a patient investigation the court reached its conclusions, and the minority of your committee, after as careful an examination of the proceedings as possible under the circumstances, do not hesitate to say that they fail to see how from the evidence the court could have determined otherwise. At the time, and perhaps since, efforts were made to make it appear that some scapegoat was necessary for the disasters of that most disastrous campaign. Then, and possibly since, suggestions were made that Porter's trial was a persecution, that it was partisan or political, and that perhaps some one else was aimed at through him. Assertions like these, to which more or less publicity was given by the press, attracted much attention to the case, and in consequence it has been loaded down by all sorts of criticisms reflecting upon many distinguished men, and, in our judgment, foreign to its merits.

The minority of your committee at the outset express no opinion in regard to the wisdom of many or any of General Pope's movements from the time when he assumed command of the Army of Virginia until he relinquished it. Neither do they deem it at all necessary that they should express any opinion in regard to his competency for the place to which the President had called him. Competent or incompetent, he was there by proper authority, and he was General Porter's lawful superior from the time he reported to him for duty. The orders he issued to Porter he had the right to issue, and he also had the right to expect that they would receive unquestioning and cheerful obedience. Almost from the time when Porter disembarked at Aquia Creek and marched from there to the Rappahannock, and until after the battle of Manassas, he kept up a correspondence with General BURNSIDE then and until he reported to Pope, his superior officer. Many, perhaps all, of these dispatches are published in part 1 of Senate Ex. Doc. 37, Forty-sixth Congress; and we invite attention to them to show the spirit in which General Porter marched to report for duty to General Pope and the spirit in which he received orders, statements, and explanations from him. Complaining, doubting, faultfinding, and critical, they indicate very clearly an utter want of confidence in General Pope and a determination to sit in judgment upon him, his orders, and his acts. Loyalty to his chief, in the sense that he was to give a cheerful if not an eager obedience and support to him, there was none; but, on the contrary, he manifested so querulous a disposition that even the board which apologizes for him find him censurable in this respect. (See paragraph III, page 25, report of board of officers.) That he disobeyed positive orders is undeniable, and that he rendered himself amenable to the same strict rule and letter of the law that he was constantly applying to his chief is, in our opinion, equally undeniable.

The excuse or justification for his disobedience is set forth fully in the report of the board, now adopted as the report of the majority of your committee; and its refutation in detail will require more time and space than can be given in this report. Largely, if not exclusively, the board relies for their conclusions, in regard to the second charge especially, upon testimony gathered from confederate sources since the suppression of the rebellion, to show that on the 29th of August, 1862, Fitz-John Porter deserved well of the Republic by not attacking on or near the Gainesville road. Such an attack, they say, would have been not only a "great blunder," but a "great crime;" failure to attack "saved the Union Army from disaster on that day," and "his conduct was obedient, subordinate, faithful, and judicious."

With deference to this distinguished board, the minority report that those are questions for discussion; that they will be prepared to discuss them before the House and the country at the proper time; and that they believe they can establish by evidence that on that day (the 29th of August, 1862) Fitz-John Porter's conduct was not "obedient," was not "faithful," was not "judicious." They further say that they do not believe that the proper rule by which to judge Fitz-John Porter's conduct is the one that permits the subsequent testimony and statements of confederate officers to be used to establish his innocence. What he must be held responsible for, in our opinion, is, what he knew at the time, not what he has discovered since from confederate sources. We do not question the right of General Porter to introduce this newly-discovered evidence before the board of officers, because the terms of the order convening it authorizes him to do so; but we do emphatically dissent from the opinion that confederate testimony is not only to acquit Fitz-John Porter and restore him to his former rank in the Army, but to convict the court which tried him.

On the 29th of August he had no information, so far as we can discover, beyond what other Federal officers had of the character of the force confronting him. What he did know, however, was that he was ordered to "push toward Gainesville;" that subsequently he was ordered in express terms to attack; that he failed to do so, and he had the serious problem presented to him throughout the greater part of the day of remaining inactive within striking distance of the enemy, while the thunder of the guns near Groveton indicated serious work between the enemy and his comrades, but three miles distant on his right. Even if it be admitted that the confederate testimony and confederate reports are to determine the right or the wrong of the action of a Union corps commander on the day of battle, or in the presence of the enemy, and they are to be made the foundation for his restoration to the Army and the receipt of a large money award, we deny that those reports are so unanimous or so pertinent as to warrant the conclusions of the board, and of the majority of your committee. (See confederate General Lee, Hill, Longstreet, and Stewart's report, and others.)

The reference by the board of officers to the action of Porter and his command on the 30th of August, in order, as they state, "to fully understand the case," is, in the opinion of the minority, not only foreign to it, but wholly out of place. His presence on the battle-field on that day was in consequence of a peremptory order, issued in terms so direct and distrustful that it clearly expressed the opinion of his superior officer that he had signally failed in his duty on the 29th. No discretion was possible under it, but the board do not hesitate to say that at first sight it would appear that in his prompt and unhesitating movement under this order General Porter committed a "grave fault." They assume that upon its receipt he was on what they are pleased to call the "field of battle," confronting the enemy "in force," and "holding a position of vital importance to the security of Pope's army." That he was not on the field of battle in the sense sought to be conveyed by the board is shown not only by testimony of witnesses, but by the absence of the usual results of a battle—the record of the killed and wounded in his command. That he was confronting the enemy is true, but the battle had been going on for the greater part of the day, some three miles from him on the right, while he remained inactive, or substantially so, confronted by a force that, outside of confederate sources, we have no reason to believe was large or dangerous. Until the arrival of McDowell, at about twelve o'clock, communicating the dispatch of Buford that seventeen regiments and a battery had passed "through Gainesville up the pike toward Centreville," there was nothing to show the presence of anything but cavalry in Porter's vicinity, and it was not until three o'clock that the officer in command of the skirmishers announced the presence of a large force in the front. At no time during the day was a reconnaissance in force made or a vigorous effort to develop his strength, and it is mere guess-work to say that the forces reported by Buford passed down the road toward Manassas and in the direction of Porter.

Notwithstanding the conviction that forced itself upon the board, that Porter very nearly committed a "grave fault" in obeying the order dated at 8.50 on the night of the 29th, they do, however, conclude that nothing remained but for him to obey. They also assert that the action of the Fifth Corps, on the 30th of August, amply vindicated the character of its chief, and showed to the world that "disobedience of orders" and "misbehavior in the presence of the enemy" could not possibly have found any place in the head or heart of its commander. To this view of the case the minority of your committee also dissent.

The gallant behavior of the Fifth Corps on the 30th did not "vindicate" either the head or the heart of its commander for his conduct on the previous day; but it did vindicate and illustrate the high qualities of the Union soldier, the patient rank and file of the Army, who never failed their superiors, and whose patriotism, devotion, and courage are about the only redeeming features of those disastrous days. They fought as they always had fought when the opportunity was given them—well. They died as their comrades had died in the Peninsula, without complaint or repining, and they neither criticised the order, nor were "surprised" at the order, nor hesitated about the order that pushed them against the deadly rifles of the confederate soldier. They obeyed orders loyally.

For all the purposes of determining the guilt or innocence of Fitz-John Porter on the 29th, his conduct on the 30th has, in our opinion, no more pertinence than had his conduct at Mechanicsville or Malvern Hill. Indeed, it is more than probable that at last, realizing the awkwardness of the position in which he had placed himself by his singular conduct since reporting to Pope, he found it necessary to display more than ordinary zeal and energy when fighting under his immediate and personal command. Whatever his motives, he deserves credit for what he did on the 30th of August; for what he did, or rather did not, on the 29th of August, he deserved censure and punishment; but certainly his action on the second day cannot be made to justify and explain away his conduct on the first, though a distinguished board says it should.

The board of officers also seem to be of the opinion that the actions of the 29th and 30th have been confounded by nearly every one but themselves. To use their own expression, "General Porter was in effect condemned for not having taken any part in his own battle." On this also the minority beg leave to report that they join issue with the board. No one who follows the movements of Porter's corps from the 27th to the night of the 30th can possibly mistake its positions on the important days of the 29th and 30th, or confound it in any way with other troops. The statement made by the board, "that the reports referring to the 30th have been misquoted as referring to the 29th, thus to prove that a furious battle was going on while Porter was comparatively inactive on the 29th," is, in our opinion, not sustained by the facts. In our opinion it is established by official reports made immediately after the battle, as well as by the testimony of witnesses, that a battle of serious proportions was in progress during the greater part of the 29th; the firing swelling and increasing in volume toward the middle of the afternoon.

Every Union official report which we have examined speaks of the early hour at which fighting began on the 29th, of its duration and its fierceness. Not one of the officers from whom we shall quote fails to distinguish between the two days, keeping them clearly separate and apart; and not one, in speaking of the action of the 29th, refers even indirectly to the presence of Porter either in their front, their rear, or on their flank. They all, however, or nearly all, mention the action of his corps on the 30th, and in every case the narrative of the two days is continuous, intelligent, and easily followed. We quote from volume VI, Official Military Reports of the Rebellion, Adjutant-General's Office, and we desire to call attention to the fact that some were written almost on the battle-field, and all, perhaps, within a month of the action.

General Siegel, commanding the first corps, says: "In the course of about four hours, from 6.30 to 10.30 in the morning, our whole infantry force, and nearly all our batteries, were engaged with the enemy." At the last hour the "enemy threw forward masses of troops which were driven back by troops of Milroy and Schurz." Schenck's division was then engaged and the enemy was trying to turn the left. "At this critical moment General Kearney arrived on the field and deployed on our right, while General Reno's troops came to our support." "Scarcely were these troops in position when the contest began with renewed vigor and vehemence, the enemy attacking along our whole line from extreme right to extreme left." At twelve o'clock, he then speaks of Reynolds's troops taking position on his left, and at two o'clock of General Hooker's troops arriving on the field of battle, so that by two p. m., according to Siegel, his whole corps, with Kearney's, Reynolds's, Hooker's, and Reno's divisions were engaged. General Schurz speaks of "the fire extending along his whole line and that it became lively." This was before ten o'clock, for at that hour he speaks of Kearney's arrival on the field. Schenck, division commander, states "that before one or two o'clock all his brigades were engaged." General Heintzelman, corps commander, says: "At ten a. m. reached field of battle; at eleven a. m. head of Hooker's division arrived, and General Reno an hour later; that at the request of Siegel he ordered Hooker to place one of his brigades at Siegel's disposition, then hard pressed."

Kearney, a division commander, who was killed on the 1st of September at Chantilly, wrote his report of the battle at Centreville on the 31st, but had not time to sign it. It was forwarded by General Birney, who succeeded him. That report states substantially that on the 29th, on his arrival, he was assigned to the holding of the right wing, with his left on the Leesburgh road; that during the first hours of combat, on some tired regiments falling back, General Birney, on his own accord, rapidly pushed across to give them a hand. "In the early afternoon" General Pope's order was received to send a strong force diagonally to the front to relieve the center in the woods from pressure. General Robinson's brigade with some other regiments drove forward several hundred yards, but the center of the main battle being shortly driven, my detachment was obliged to cease to advance. All this appears to have happened before five o'clock, for he says: "At five o'clock, thinking I might drive the enemy by an unexpected attack, I brought up the most of Birney's regiment, changed front to the left to sweep with a rush the line of the enemy. This was most successful. The enemy was rolled up on his right. We took no part in the fighting of the 30th."

General J. B. Carr, present secretary of state of the State of New York, says: "At two o'clock, 29th, Friday morning, received orders to march at three a. m., to support General Kearney. A march of ten miles brought us to Bull Run battle-field. About eleven a. m. was ordered into position to support a battery where the enemy was engaged with Siegel. Remaining in that position some time, was ordered to send two regiments to relieve Siegel's troops. Did so, and afterward received orders to take balance of brigade into woods, which I did about two p. m., where I at once engaged the enemy and fought him for a space of two hours, holding my position until ammunition was expended, and about four p. m. was relieved." He was in Hooker's division, and the country knows that Hooker's command, before expending its ammunition, as a rule did some fighting that was more serious than a "sharp combat."

Grover, another brigade commander, says: "Arrived on the battle-field about nine a. m. The battle had already commenced, and the brigade was temporarily placed under the orders of Siegel." At three he says he received the order to advance, which was immediately obeyed, to carry the embankment, which he did, in a charge that was, perhaps, unequaled in the history of the war. The conflict was hand to hand with bayonets and clubbed muskets, and his brigade broke in succession two lines of the enemy, but the third line swept him back. In this fierce encounter he lost out of five small regiments forty-one killed, three hundred and twenty-seven wounded, and one hundred and sixteen missing.

Even the authority referred to by the board (Gen. Robert E. Lee's report, pages 519 and 520, record of board) speaks of "the battle raging with fury," and of its continuing until nine p. m. He also says that Steuart (the cavalry officer on the right) reported the advance of a large force threatening Longstreet's right; that the brigades of Wilcox were sent to re-enforce Jones, but no "serious attack was made, and after firing a few shots the enemy withdrew." He also speaks of this demonstration as having been made on the right, while a large force advanced to assail the left, Jackson's position. The enemy which he speaks of as having made a demonstration and firing a few shots could have been no other command but that of Porter's, and Lee subsequently says that Wilcox was withdrawn from the right where he had been sent.

From this and other evidence the minority of your committee report that, in their opinion, there was much and serious fighting on the 29th, except in Fitz-John Porter's front, where there appears to have been none. Serious as it was, and reaching the dignity of a battle, according to General Lee, as well as many officers on the Union side, the board of officers speak of it as a number of "sharp and gallant combats between small portions of the opposing forces." From the best evidence we can gather, Siegel with his corps was engaged on the 29th. Heintzelman with Hooker's and Kearney's divisions were engaged on the 29th. Reno and Stevens's divisions were engaged on the 29th. Reynolds and part of King's were engaged on the 29th, and, in fact, all the available forces were in action on that day except Porter's command and Ricketts's division. How long "intervals" there were between the fighting we cannot say; but, judging from the reports of officers engaged, they were neither frequent nor prolonged; and unless those who made them are much mistaken, there was a long list of killed and wounded on the 29th.

When the board predicts the disastrous consequences that would have followed an attack by Porter at any time after the early afternoon, they enter the field of speculation. There we shall not follow them, but we simply call attention to the reports (page 519, board record, report of General Lee) from confederate sources, which show that the mere appearance of the head of Porter's column was so threatening that General Lee detached a division to meet it. Who can predict the result had a powerful and well-sustained attack been made by eight thousand or ten thousand men, at any time during the day, on the Gainesville road? On this point we wish to call attention to the opinion of a careful military historian—the author of, perhaps, the best history of our civil war that has been written. With ample facilities to inform himself, and so situated that he can and does write without prejudice or passion, the Compte de Paris, in volume 2, page 292, of his history, says:

"His (Porter's) attack, therefore, could not have produced the results upon which the commander-in-chief had counted. But neither the impossibility of executing to the letter the order of the latter, nor even the instructions which McDowell may have given him during the day, afford any excuse for his having remained so long inactive in the presence of the enemy, with two fine divisions, while a great battle was being fought in his vicinity. In short, if the road he had to follow was barred against him—if, therefore, he could not cut the enemy's army in two and secure its defeat—it is equally certain that a vigorous attack made by him upon Longstreet's right would have drawn out all the forces of this general, and, by freeing the rest of the Union line, would probably have prevented the reverse which the latter sustained at the close of the day. We cannot avoid, therefore, blaming his inaction at such time and under such circumstances.

"This indifference on the part of Porter to the cannon's appeal, the manner in which he interpreted the orders of superiors, and the tardiness with which these orders reached him, were the inevitable consequences of the confusion we have already referred to in the general movement of the army."

This is the deliberate opinion of a disinterested writer, who, while he accepts the board's theory that Longstreet was up within supporting distance of Jackson early in the day, still censures in distinct terms the inaction of Porter. Whatever may be the action of Congress on the bill now before it, that this will be the verdict of history the minority of your committee certainly believe.

The minority concede that if the Government does injustice to one of its citizens it should make reparation, but in this case, in their opinion, no injustice has been done. Notwithstanding this, they have concluded to recommend to the House the passage of a joint resolution removing so much of Fitz-John Porter's sentence as prohibits him from holding any office of profit or trust under the Government. Its passage will give him no claim, however, upon his former rank, or upon the Treasury of the United States. Logically, perhaps, the minority should not recommend it, but when we consider that amnesty and pardon have been given to those formerly in arms against the Government, and that the removal of disabilities for offenses certainly as dangerous as his to the perpetuity of the Union are of every-day occurrence, the reasons for their action in Porter's case are obvious.

One of his complaints is that his sentence is a continuing one, and that he has been deprived of the rights of citizenship. The passage of the resolution will remove these disabilities, and enable him to remit the whole question to the people, or to some other tribunal than Congress. It is, in our opinion, quite clear that he should not be restored to his former rank in the Army, and that he should not receive the retired pay, amounting to $50,000 or $60,000, provided in the bill for his relief; but his restoration to the rights of citizenship is an act of grace and clemency that the Government can do without in any way manifesting its disapproval of the findings and sentence of the court-martial that tried and convicted him. There were periods of his life when his services were of value to his country, and it is but fair, perhaps, that they should be considered now in determining his case; but that they should go to the extent of the relief proposed by the majority would be, in our opinion, unwise, inexpedient, and unjust.

ANSON G. McCOOK.
B. F. MARSH.
THOMAS M. BROWNE.

Whereas the President has laid before Congress the proceedings and report of a board of Army officers convened in the case of Fitz-John Porter, for such action as may be deemed expedient and just: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is requested to remit the remainder of the unexecuted sentence which disqualifies Fitz-John Porter from holding any office of trust or profit under the Government of the United States.

Mr. BREWER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

By Mr. CHARLES G. WILLIAMS: Papers relating to the claim of John Whitaker for pay for property taken for the use of the Government at Port Huron, Michigan, in 1870—to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. WILSON: The petition of J. M. Reed and others, against the passage of Senate bill No. 496—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of R. G. Linn and others, of Calhoun County, West Virginia, urging the improvement of the Little Kanawha River by locks and dams—to the Committee on Commerce.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 23, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

SAMUEL BURWELL.

Mr. HAYES, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3772) granting a pension to Samuel Burwell; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

JOEL E. CADY.

Mr. VALENTINE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3773) granting a pension to Joel E. Cady, of Valparaiso, county of Saunders, State of Nebraska; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

RAIDS ON TEXAS BORDER.

Mr. UPSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3774) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to ascertain and report to Congress the amount of money expended and indebtedness assumed by the State of Texas in repelling, surpressing, and guarding against invasions, raids, incursions, and hostilities by Indians and Mexicans in said State and upon its borders and in frontier defense; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN F. CLANCY.

Mr. McCOOK, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3775) for the relief of John F. Clancy; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LANDS ACQUIRED IN COLLECTION OF DEBTS, ETC.

Mr. KNOTT, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting report in relation to lands of the United States acquired in the collection of debts and otherwise, and moved that the same, with accompanying documents, be printed and recommitted.

The motion was agreed to.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS IN FLORIDA, ETC.

Mr. COVERT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3776) to extend the provisions of the act entitled "An act for the final adjustment of private land claims in the States of Florida, Louisiana, and Missouri, and for other purposes," approved June 22, 1860; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF HYACINTH ROBERT AGNEL.

Mr. COVERT also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3777) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Hyacinth Robert Agnel, deceased, late professor of the French language, United States Military Academy, at West Point; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

JOHN H. WALKER.

Mr. COVERT also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3778) for the relief of John H. Walker, a captain in the United States Army; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

OWNERS OF B. L. HODGE.

Mr. ELLIS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3779) for the relief of the owners of the B. L. Hodge; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

MARY A. GOURLEY.

Mr. TAYLOR, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3780) granting a pension to Mary A. Gourley; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

NARRATIVE OF POLARIS EXPEDITION.

Mr. HAYES. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back with a favorable recommendation the Senate concurrent resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That whenever the Public Printer shall have received a sufficient number of orders for copies of the narrative of the Polaris Expedition, accompanied by the cost price thereof with 10 per cent. additional, to warrant in his opinion the expense of putting the plates to press, he shall cause an edition thereof to be published: Provided, however, That the number of copies thus at any time printed shall not exceed the number ordered and paid for in advance of such publication.

The resolution was agreed to.

TIMBER LANDS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. CONVERSE. I ask unanimous consent to report back at this time from the Committee on Public Lands the bill (H. R. No. 2914) to authorize the President to reserve from sale or other disposition certain timber-lands in the State of California, and for other purposes. The bill relates to the reservation of "big trees" and "redwood" in California. It will excite no controversy, and I ask its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. If the bill is to cause any discussion the Chair is under obligation to recognize the gentleman from New York, [Mr. McCOOK.]

Mr. CONVERSE. It only relates to the reservation of some small tracts of land in California where the "redwood" and "big trees" grow. It will take but a moment.

Mr. PAGE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio if this is the bill which my colleague [Mr. BERRY] reported from a sub-committee of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CONVERSE. It is the same bill.

Mr. PAGE. I think it should pass.

Mr. HAYES. Let the bill be read; I do not understand what it is.

The bill was read.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to say that the machinery of this bill is simply copied from the regulations adopted for the government of the Yellowstone Park. The only new feature of the bill is the reservation of these sections by the President of the United States. I hope the bill may pass at once.

Mr. BRIGHT. I was not present at the reading of this bill. I am informed, however, that it is liable to parliamentary objections.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has reserved all the rights of members to raise objections.

Mr. BRIGHT. Inasmuch as to-day is set apart for the consideration of private business, I must interpose an objection to the consideration of this bill at this time—not to the bill itself, perhaps, for I do not understand what it is.

The SPEAKER. There being objection, the bill is not before the House.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS, BOUNTIES, ETC.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of the following as members of the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay:

ALEXANDER H. COFFROTH, of Pennsylvania; GEORGE W. GEDDES, of Ohio; WILLIAM R. MYERS, of Indiana; BENTON MCMILLIN, of Tennessee; ALFRED C. HARMER, of Pennsylvania; LUCIEN B. CASWELL, of Wisconsin; and JOHN R. THOMAS, of Illinois.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN OHIO.

The SPEAKER announced as the conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 582) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Columbus, Ohio, and transferring certain counties from the northern to the southern district in said State, Mr. CONVERSE of Ohio, Mr. CULBERSON of Texas, and Mr. BUTTERWORTH of Ohio.

MARIA L. LEE.

Mr. KLOTZ, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3781) granting a pension to Maria L. Lee and her children; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

NATIONAL LINCOLN MONUMENT, SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent to introduce for consideration at this time the joint resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The joint resolution authorizing certain books and mementoes in the possession of the Government to be placed in memorial hall of the national Lincoln monument at Springfield, Illinois, was read as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be transmitted to the National Lincoln Monument Association of Springfield, Illinois, to be placed in the memorial hall of the monument erected to the memory of the late Abraham Lincoln, as many copies as can be spared from the State Department of the book published by Congress, in 1867, entitled "The Assassination of Abraham Lincoln, late President of the United States of America;" and also to cause fac-similes of the original memorial papers transmitted to the Department of State by foreign governments and citizens thereof for the same purpose to be prepared and transmitted to the association; and also from the War Department such mementoes connected with the assassination, and trial of the conspirators, as may have been placed therein, which do not pertain to the records of the Department, and that there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to the Secretary of State, a sum sufficient to meet the expense of carrying this joint resolution into effect.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 178) was received, read three several times, and passed.

MILITARY STOREHOUSE AT OMAHA, NEBRASKA.

Mr. McCOOK. At the urgent request of the gentleman from Nebraska, [Mr. VALENTINE,] I ask consent to report, from the Committee on Military Affairs, for consideration at this time, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 163) authorizing the Secretary of War to expend a sum of money heretofore appropriated for the erection of a storehouse and depot building at the city of Omaha, in the State of Nebraska.

The preamble and joint resolution were read, as follows:

Whereas, by act of Congress approved June 23, 1879, the sum of $30,000 was appropriated for the purpose of erecting a military storehouse and depot building at the city of Omaha, in the State of Nebraska, providing that no part of said sum should be expended for the purchase of ground; and

Whereas the citizens of said city of Omaha have donated to the Government of the United States five acres of land, the title having been approved by the Attorney-General, whereon said building or buildings are to be erected; and

Whereas the Legislature of the State of Nebraska does not convene until January, 1881, so as to fulfill the requirements of section 355 of the Revised Statutes touching the expenditure of said money; and

Whereas the necessities of the Government demand the immediate erection of said building or buildings: Therefore,

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, empowered and directed to expend the said sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the erection of said building or buildings.

Mr. McCOOK. I do not know that it is necessary to make any explanation beyond the simple statement that in the act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, the amount of $30,000 was appropriated for the purpose of erecting this storehouse at or near Omaha, in the State of Nebraska. Before anything was done it was discovered that there was a clause in the statutes which required the consent of the Legislature of the State to be given. The Legislature of Nebraska cannot meet until the 1st day of January, 1881, and unless we can give effect to the appropriation by the passage of this joint resolution, it will fall. I have here in my hand an opinion from the Attorney-General of the United States that the warrantee deeds made by the owners of the property were ample and proper, in his judgment. I am assured also, by the Representative of the State of Nebraska, that immediately upon the assembling of the Legislature a law will be passed such as is required. It is for that reason that I ask the present consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VALENTINE moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DANVILLE, VIRGINIA.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I ask consent to report back for consideration at this time, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the bill (H. R. No. 325) for the erection of a public building at Danville, Virginia, with an amendment.

Mr. BRIGHT. I will consent to the consideration of that bill at this time, provided it does not lead to debate.

Mr. CABELL. It will take but a little while to pass it.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I think it will elicit no debate. I will say that this bill has met the unanimous approval of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for the last three Congresses, as it does of that committee of this House.

There being no objection, the bill was received and read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed, at Danville, Virginia, a building for the accommodation of the circuit and district courts of the United States, the post-office, and internal-revenue officers, at a cost not exceeding $65,000: Provided, That no money shall be used or applied for the purpose mentioned until a valid title for the land and building shall be vested in the United States, and until the State of Virginia shall cede to the General Government jurisdiction over the property, and exempt the same from taxation.

The amendment was to strike out "$65,000," and to insert "$60,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CABELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. HOUK, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of S. E. Rankin, an act for his relief having become a law.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SMITH, of New Jersey, until the 1st of February.

GOVERNMENT BUILDING, FORT SNELLING RESERVATION.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, recommending an appropriation for the construction of a building for use as headquarters of the Department of Dakota, on the Fort Snelling military reservation; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CLOSE OF DEBATE ON REVISION OF RULES.

The SPEAKER. Yesterday, when debate was closed upon the report of the Committee on Rules, the Chair stated that the time could not be extended for the reason that after the adoption of the motion to close general debate a motion to reconsider had been made and laid on the table. In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the making of the motion to reconsider and lay on the table is not stated; but the Journal shows that such action was taken, as do also the short-hand notes of the reporter who took down the proceedings. The recollection of the Chair and of several other gentlemen, including the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN,] is to the same effect. The Chair makes this statement because members in looking at the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD may see a discrepancy between the statement there and what was the actual fact.

Mr. GARFIELD. The RECORD ought to be made to conform to the fact.

The SPEAKER. The RECORD will be corrected so as to conform to the evidence in every other direction confirming the position of the Chair.

REPORT OF DISTRICT HEALTH OFFICER.

Mr. WILSON. The other day the House adopted a resolution for printing the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia. It was in the form of a simple House resolution, when it should have been a concurrent resolution. I ask that the necessary correction be made.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to amending the resolution referred to so as to make it a concurrent resolution of the two Houses? The Chair hears none, and it is ordered accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CONVERSE. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the morning hour begins at thirty-three minutes after twelve o'clock. This being Friday, reports of a private nature are in order. The call rests with the Committee on Military Affairs.

NAPOLEON B. GIDDINGS.

Mr. SPARKS. The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1702) for the relief of Napoleon B. Giddings, have directed me to move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

There being no objection, the bill was referred to the Committee on War Claims, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED ORDNANCE.

Mr. SPARKS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 3347) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish four pieces of condemned ordnance for the soldiers' monument at Marietta, Ohio.

The bill was read. It authorizes the Secretary of War to furnish to the Soldiers and Sailors' Monument Association, of Washington County, Ohio, from the condemned ordnance of the United States, four pieces of cannon for the soldiers' monument recently erected in the public park in the city of Marietta, Washington County, Ohio.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPARKS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

J. H. AND R. F. SHUGART.

Mr. BRAGG, from the same committee, to which was referred House bill No. 877, reported as a substitute therefor the bill (H. R. No. 3782) for the relief of John H. Shugart and Robert F. Shugart; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JERRY FOLEY.

Mr. BROWNE. The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Jerry Foley, have directed me to report a bill to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Jerry Foley. I ask that the bill be put on its passage.

The bill (H. R. No. 3783) was read a first and second time. It authorizes the Secretary of War to remove the charge of desertion now standing upon the records of the War Department against the name of Jerry Foley, late of Company C, Ninth Regiment of Maine Volunteers, and grant to him an honorable discharge, with the same pay, bounties, and benefits he would have been entitled to if the charge of desertion had not been entered against his name.

Mr. PAGE. Is there a report accompanying this bill?

The SPEAKER. There is. It will be read if the gentleman desires it.

Mr. BROWNE. It is very brief.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the petition of Jerry Foley, late a private of Company C, Ninth Maine Volunteers, in which he asks to be relieved from the charge of desertion, beg leave to report:

This soldier served a three-year enlistment in the volunteer army of the United States, and in 1864 re-enlisted in the same company and regiment—Company C, Ninth Maine Volunteers. At the battle of Deep Bottom, Virginia, in August, 1864, he was shot through both feet, taken prisoner, and carried to Richmond. He was sent from Richmond to Annapolis, and, his wounds being severe, he was furloughed and allowed to go to his home at Portland, Maine. From Portland he was sent to hospital at Bangor to be treated for his wounds. His wounds continued to be such as to render him unfit for service, and he remained at Bangor for some two months. He then left the hospital without leave and returned to his home at Portland, where he continued until his regiment was mustered out. From the time he was wounded until the muster-out of his command he was at no time fit to render the Government any military service whatever. He seems simply to have transferred his treatment from the hospital to his home. Had he remained in hospital he would have been regularly discharged, and upon such terms as would have assured him an immediate pension. He was only a deserter in a purely technical sense, for he was all the time unable for duty. The Adjutant-General of the Army writes as follows in regard to this case:

[The letter of the Adjutant-General will be found in the subsequent debate.]

Your committee beg leave to report the accompanying bill and recommend its passage.

Mr. BROWNE. I will state that accompanying this report is a letter from the Adjutant-General in which he recommends very strongly the passage of this bill.

Mr. WARNER. I do not rise to object but to ask whether the Adjutant-General has not now authority under law to make this correction?

Mr. BROWNE. No, sir; he has not.

Mr. WARNER. I understand the Adjutant-General is changing the record every day in removing charges of desertion upon satisfactory evidence.

Mr. BROWNE. It is held by the Adjutant-General that he can only amend the record by some other part of the record; that he cannot amend the record by evidence dehors the record, and that particularly he cannot amend the record when the facts under the military law show there has been desertion, however technical that desertion may have been.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that the letter of the Adjutant-General be read, as it makes the case very plain.

Mr. BROWNE. Certainly.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, November 29, 1879.

SIR: In reply to the communication referred by you to this office in the case of Jerry Foley, Company G, Ninth Maine Volunteers, from A. K. P. Knowlton, esq., of Lewiston, Maine, I respectfully inform you that as the records now stand the man is a deserter, the only evidence in favor of a removal of the charge being an affidavit of Mrs. Margaret Foley, which shows he was suffering from severe wounds, but does not establish the fact that he had proper authority for being absent from the hospital after his furlough expired, especially since it appears he was well enough to travel, and could have gone to some hospital nearer than Annapolis.

This is a peculiar case, in which the man is technically a deserter, yet was of no manner of use to the Government. Had he remained in hospital he would have been discharged on papers that would have given him a pension as soon as his wounds were healed. As it is, the Department is prevented by law from removing the charge, but would consider it right and just that a special act of Congress should pass for his relief.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Adjutant-General.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
House of Representatives.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BROWNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

W. C. SHELTON.

Mr. DIBRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back adversely the petition of W. C. Shelton for services as lieutenant-colonel Seventh Tennessee Infantry; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

A. B. ROWDON.

Mr. DIBRELL also, from the same committee, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 706) for the relief of A. B. Rowdon; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN BLANKENSHIP.

Mr. DIBRELL also, from the same committee, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 735) for the relief of John Blankenship; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MONTANA TROOPS, NEZ PERCÉ WAR.

Mr. DIBRELL also, from the same committee, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 1320) for the relief of citizens of Montana who served with the United States troops in the war with the Nez Percés, and for the relief of the heirs of such as were killed in such service; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REDMOND TULLY.

Mr. LE FEVRE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 2058) for the relief of Redmond Tully, late first lieutenant Twelfth Infantry, brevet captain, United States Army; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM WHEELER HUBBELL.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back adversely the petition of William Wheeler Hubbell for payment of balance of interest on sum found due in Court of Claims for the use of his patent time and impact burning fuse in the naval service; which was laid on the table, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TRANSPORT BARK TORRENT.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 3186) for the relief of the sufferers by the wreck of the Government transport bark Torrent; and the same was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, not to come back on a motion to reconsider.

ASA WEEKS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3784) to compensate Asa Weeks for his labor and expense in perfecting torpedoes, torpedo machinery, and the art of torpedo warfare for the sole and exclusive benefit of the United States, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MULDROW. Is it in order to report from the Committee on the Territories to-day other than private bills?

The SPEAKER. Only by unanimous consent. What report has the gentleman from Mississippi to make?

Mr. MULDROW. It is a bill relating to the formation of a Territory.

The SPEAKER. That is a public bill, and cannot be received to-day unless by unanimous consent.

DAKOTA PENITENTIARY.

Mr. HUMPHREY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Territories, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3785) appropriating money for the erection of a penitentiary in the Territory of Dakota; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CLERKS TO PENSION COMMITTEE.

Mr. HATCH. I am instructed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to report the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be, and they are hereby, empowered to employ three additional clerks for service during the remainder of the present session at a cost not to exceed $5 per day each, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, whose duty shall be to aid and assist the members of the committee in examining the evidence and preparing the reports upon bills referred to the said committee, and such other labor as may be referred to them.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to hear some statement from the Committee on Invalid Pensions in reference to this resolution. This application for three clerks seems to me to be rather unusual, although it may be all right. We want to give them all the clerks they need for the work.

Mr. HATCH. This is the unanimous request of the committee, but I will state for the information of the House that there are now pending before that committee over fourteen hundred pension cases. Many of these are cases that have been rejected in the Pension Department, and have a large mass of testimony accompanying them. These cases have been divided among the different members of the committee according to States, and some of the committee have as many as two hundred cases. It is utterly impossible for any member of the committee to report the bills back to the House without some clerical help, and every member of the committee and every member of this House who has been before the committee and seen the mass of work upon its docket will appreciate the necessity for this additional clerical aid.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, might I not inquire of the Committee on Invalid Pensions whether this would not be a proper time to add to this resolution a proposition made recently to increase the number of clerks in the Pension Department. The same difficulty that the Committee on Invalid Pensions encounter in this House is also encountered in that department. We all know, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The committee have reported unanimously on that subject.

Mr. WHITE. Well, I propose to amend the resolution by adding to it a resolution reported some time since from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. HATCH. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that, because that report to which he refers is now before the House, and a special report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions will be presented in reference to it, and it will be called up for action on the very first opportunity.

The SPEAKER. In addition to the point as to whether the matter proposed is germane, there is another that the rules do not permit the incorporation of one bill or subject-matter as an amendment to another bill or resolution pending before the House.

Mr. ACKLEN. Mr. Speaker, this is a simple House resolution as I understand it, and the other would of necessity be a joint resolution.

Mr. WHITE. I appreciate the difficulty to which the gentleman refers. One is a joint resolution and the other is a House resolution, but I appeal to the Committee on Invalid Pensions to get the floor and call up that joint resolution.

Mr. HATCH. We have been trying ever since this has been here to get it before the House, but it has been several times objected to.

Mr. REAGAN. I have no objection in the world to giving a clerk to the committee for any ordinary purposes, but I doubt very much the policy of giving them a clerk for some of the purposes mentioned in this resolution.

The SPEAKER. There being objection the resolution will necessarily go to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not think this committee or the House should delegate to any clerk the preparation of reports in determination of pension cases.

Mr. HATCH. It is not proposed by the committee that these clerks shall take charge of preparation of the cases, or to do anything more than to perform clerical work in the preparation of reports for presentation to the House, which labor now devolves upon the members of the committee themselves. It is utterly impossible that the members of the committee can do the work that is now before them and report the bills to the House. The gentlemen will appreciate the necessity for this when I state the fact that I have already stated, that some of the members of this committee have now before them two hundred cases, some of which involve the examination of a hundred pages of testimony. So that it is beyond their power to prepare the cases and report them to the House as rapidly as might be desired by members who have bills pending before that committee. It is utterly impossible for the committee to perform the labor themselves.

Mr. REAGAN. I would have much preferred that simply an additional clerk should have been asked for. It seems to me that this resolution goes a long way toward giving each member of the committee a clerk to do the work which he ought to do himself.

Mr. HATCH. I hope the gentleman will not object to the consideration of this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The statement of the gentleman from Texas is in the nature of an objection; and the resolution will go to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. COFFROTH. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it there is no objection. The gentleman from Texas has only made a suggestion.

The SPEAKER. The suggestion made by the gentleman, however, is in the nature of an objection.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not make objection to the resolution. I merely thought it was before the House for discussion and made a suggestion, but I do not object to its consideration.

Mr. COFFROTH. The gentleman from Texas withdraws his objection.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman propose, then, to amend the resolution?

Mr. REAGAN. If the resolution is up for action I do propose to amend it.

The SPEAKER. That is the desire of the committee, to have the resolution acted on by the House. But the Chair has stated if the point is made the resolution must go to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not make that point; but if in order I will move to amend by striking out the portion of the resolution which defines the duties of the clerks.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be again read.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to amend by striking out all after the words "contingent fund of the House."

Mr. ACKLEN. I would suggest to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] that he should incorporate in his resolution the words "while these clerks are in the employment of the Committee on Invalid Pensions." It may occur that the work the committee has on hand may be completed long before this session of Congress terminates, and then it will be unnecessary to continue this expense of $5 a day for the clerks when the necessity for their employment would have ceased.

Mr. HATCH. I will say the Committee on Invalid Pensions will discharge these clerks, or any one of them, the very moment the labor is ended.

Mr. ACKLEN. Therefore I suggest the incorporation of the words "while in the employment of the committee."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will reach his object by the words "during the session."

Mr. HAZELTON. That is already in the resolution.

The question being taken on Mr. REAGAN'S amendment, it was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the resolution as reported.

Mr. SPARKS. As I understand it the resolution is for the appointment of three additional clerks. That makes four.

Mr. HATCH. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPARKS. I do not think that is right. I must object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects to the resolution, and it goes to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. KENNA. I rise to a point of order. Is it not too late to object to the resolution after it has been considered and the amendment voted on?

Mr. SPARKS. I will not consent to having three additional clerks employed by the committee.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman reserve the right to object?

Mr. HATCH. He does not say he did.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the objection would come too late after the resolution had been considered and an amendment to the resolution acted upon. If the gentleman had made the point of order in time the Chair would have ruled the resolution should go to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. HAZELTON. As a member of the committee I desire to say a word on this question. If gentlemen will give their attention to the subject one moment I think they will withdraw all objection and support the resolution.

Mr. HATCH. There is no objection.

Mr. HAZELTON. Then I do not desire to say anything further.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. Now I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill authorizing the employment of additional clerks in the Pension Office.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot ask unanimous consent for that purpose, to interfere with the call of committees in the morning hour.

Mr. WHITE. After the morning hour, I suppose I can move to go into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will rule as to that when the time comes. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. COFFROTH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with favorable recommendations, bills of the following titles; and the same were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

The bill (H. R. No. 2044) granting a pension to Martha J. Porter;

The bill (H. R. No. 2852) granting a pension to Mary A. Simmons;

The bill (H. R. No. 280) granting a pension to Dennis McGinnis;

The bill (H. R. No. 281) granting a pension to Francis B. McNamara;

The bill (H. R. No. 2547) increasing the pension of Mary A. Steece, widow of Tecumseh Steece, late lieutenant United States Army; and

The bill (H. R. No. 2448) for the relief of Benjamin F. Worrell.

Mr. COFFROTH also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3786) granting a pension to William C. Parker; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOSTETLER, from the same committee, reported back, with favorable recommendations, bills of the following titles; and the same were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calender, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

The bill (H. R. No. 1628) granting a pension to Dalton Hinchman;

The bill (H. R. No. 788) for the relief of James J. Ferris; and

The bill (H. R. No. 2453) for the relief of Bridget Sherlock.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, from the same committee, reported back, with favorable recommendations, the following bills; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calender, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 859) granting a pension to William H. Scribner; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1649) granting a pension to William W. Church.

Mr. TAYLOR, from the same committee, reported the following bills; which were read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 3787) to restore the name of James W. Allison to the pension-roll; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3788) granting increase of pension to William Hamill.

Mr. CALDWELL, from the same committee, reported back, with favorable recommendations, the following bills; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 1579) granting a pension to Mrs. Sallie T. Ward; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2603) to place on the pension-roll the name of Masach Finn, late corporal in the Fifty-second Kentucky Mounted Infantry Volunteers.

WATER-ROUTE FROM LAKE MICHIGAN TO LAKE ERIE.

Mr. WISE, from the Committee on Railways and Canals, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 994) to provide for a water-route to facilitate transportation between Lake Michigan and Lake Erie.

The SPEAKER. That is a public bill, and can be received now only by unanimous consent.

There being no objection, the bill was received and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

E. K. SNEAD.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2567) for the relief of E. K. Snead, deceased, and his sureties, for the loss of certain books of special stamps and coupons.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit upon the official bond of E. K. Snead, deceased, late collector of internal revenue for the first district of Virginia, and of his sureties therein, so much, not exceeding $2,020.83, as shall be satisfactorily proven to said Secretary to have been transmitted, in books containing special-tax stamps and coupons, by the deputy of said E. K. Snead, deceased, a certain Patrick H. Slaughter, on or about April 21, 1874, through the mail to said E. K. Snead, and were lost in transitu, and were never received by said Snead, and have never, therefore, been accounted for by him to the Government: Provided, however, That it shall be satisfactorily shown that the said stamps and coupons were not lost under such circumstances as to have probably devolved a loss upon the Government by reason thereof, or were not lost from the fault or negligence of the collector or his deputy, involving in its result a probable loss to the Government.

Mr. TUCKER. I ask consent that the bill be considered at this time.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TUCKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES D. GRANT.

Mr. MORRISON, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 2968) for the relief of James D. Grant, of Texas; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. BRIGHT, from the Committee of Claims, reported back the following bills, and moved that the committee be discharged from their further consideration, and that the same be referred as indicated:

A bill (H. R. No. 399) for the relief of Balaam A. Bridges, of Bartow County, Georgia—to the Committee on War Claims; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2723) for the relief of Augustine Olvera—to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion of Mr. BRIGHT was agreed to.

WILLIAM S. BURGESS AND OTHERS.

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee of Claims, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 709) for the relief of William S. Burgess and others; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HOMER FELLOWS.

Mr. SAMFORD, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3789) for the relief of Homer Fellows; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT METROPOLITAN POLICE.

Mr. SAMFORD also, from the same committee, reported adversely upon the memorial of the Metropolitan Police force of the District of Columbia for relief; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ROCK ISLAND HARBOR.

Mr. HENDERSON, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and requested to furnish for the use of the House of Representatives such information as to an obstruction of the harbor on the Mississippi River, at the city of Rock Island, in the State of Illinois, and the expense of removing the same, as he may have on the files of his Department.

Mr. HENDERSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

KANSAS WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. JOHNSTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1199) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to ascertain and report to Congress the amount of money expended and indebtedness assumed by the State of Kansas in repelling invasions and suppressing Indian hostilities.

The bill was read.

Mr. WHITE. Where does this bill come from?

The SPEAKER. From the Committee on Military Affairs, of which the gentleman himself is a member.

Mr. WHITE. It seems to be a public bill, and one authorizing the expenditure of a large amount of money.

The SPEAKER. It authorizes the expenditure of no money, but directs the ascertainment and report to Congress of the amount expended by the State of Kansas in repelling invasions and suppressing Indian hostilities.

Mr. McMILLIN. Is not this bill subject to a point of order, as a public bill which cannot be considered to-day?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. McMILLIN. I make that point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia had better withdraw the bill.

Mr. HASKELL. As the gentleman from Virginia in charge of the bill seems to have left the Hall, I ask that permission be given for the withdrawal of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be withdrawn.

GUARDIAN OF WILLIAM W. BREWER.

Mr. CARLISLE. The Committee of Ways and Means, to whom was referred the memorial of William Turman, guardian of William W. Brewer, minor child of William R. Brewer, for the passage of an act authorizing the issuing of a duplicate for a lost draft which was issued for arrears of pension, have directed me to ask that the Committee of Ways and Means be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

WILLIAM D. OYLER.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 2359) for the relief of William D. Oyler.

The bill was read. It states in the preamble that William D. Oyler purchased of the United States, by cash entry, on the 21st day of July, 1874, at Dixon, Illinois, the west half of the northeast quarter of section 19, in township 26 north, of range 6 east, and paid therefor the sum of $100, and afterward conveyed the same to Jacob Jackson, who conveyed the same to Peter H. Bigelow and John Jackson, who were, in fact, partners in trade; that afterward the title of Oyler and his assignees to said land failing, by reason of conflict of his entry with a prior pre-emption claim thereon of John Shumaker, and Oyler, because of said failure of title, having, as appears, afterward refunded the purchase-money to said Peter H. Bigelow and John Jackson, and thereby became entitled to have the original purchase-money refunded to him by the United States; that the same has never been refunded, because of technical insufficiency of the quitclaim made by the assignees to Oyler.

The bill therefore directs the Secretary of the Interior to refund and pay to Oyler, or his legal representatives, the sum of $100, with interest at 6 per cent. per annum, from the 22d day of June, A. D. 1861, in full satisfaction and discharge of any claim in the premises.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out in lines 6, 7, and 8 these words: "with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the 22d day of June, A. D. 1861."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PACIFIC RAILROAD SINKING FUND.

Mr. McLANE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3790) to alter and amend the sinking-fund act, approved May 7, 1878; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed.

W. A. H. ALLEN.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back adversely the memorial of W. A. H. Allen, past assistant engineer United States Navy, praying for relief; it was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. MORSE, the Committee of Accounts was discharged from the further consideration of the following claims, and they were referred to the Committee of Claims, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider:

Claim of C. B. Culver for compensation as a clerk to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, from August 1, 1878, to December 1, 1878;

Claim of John L. Shaw for compensation as a committee clerk in the Forty-fourth Congress;

Claim of Alfred Lyles for pay for labor under the Doorkeeper of the House in the Forty-fifth Congress;

Claim of Patrick Doran for pay as messenger of the Forty-fifth Congress;

Claim of Frederick Carlisle for pay as expert to a committee of the Forty-fifth Congress; and Claim of J. B. Holloway for compensation for services rendered to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. WHITE. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of taking up and considering the bill of the Committee on Invalid Pensions for the employment of additional clerks.

The SPEAKER. This being Friday, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] to make the usual motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, which has preference of a motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WHITE. I beg the gentleman from Tennessee to give way for my motion.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and the House, in the name of reasonable fair play, to allow the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] a few minutes at this time, before we go into Committee of the Whole. I ask that before either of these motions be put the House by unanimous consent give the gentleman from Michigan fifteen minutes. [Cries of "Go on."]

Mr. BRIGHT. If it be the pleasure of the House to hear the gentleman from Michigan at this time for a few minutes, I will yield the floor for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. How long does the gentleman from Michigan desire?

Mr. WHITEAKER. I object. [Cries of "Oh, no; that is not fair."]

Mr. GARFIELD. Let us go into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and we will have general debate on the first bill that comes up.

Mr. MILLS. It will save time by withdrawing the objection.

The SPEAKER. Is the objection withdrawn?

Mr. WHITEAKER. No, sir.

MESSENGERS IN THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a memorial of the messengers and laborers of the Navy Department for restoration of pay; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan withdraw his objection?

Mr. WHITEAKER. I do not.

The SPEAKER. The first motion the Chair will entertain, this being Friday, is the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. BRIGHT,] chairman of the Committee of Claims, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is this objection day?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then I move, and I ask the gentleman to allow the motion to be put, that the House go into Committee of the Whole on the President's message.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I hope that will be adopted.

Mr. GARFIELD. That allows time for general debate, and we can get out of the committee in a short time.

The SPEAKER. If the House so desires, it can reach the object sought by the gentleman from Ohio. The Chair, however, is bound by the rules to entertain the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, and if that is voted down, then the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union will be in order.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman will withdraw his motion to allow me to make this, we can get at it by one vote.

Mr. BRIGHT. I will withdraw the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar for the purpose of allowing the motion to be made to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the President's message, if there shall be an understanding that after the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] the committee will rise and the House will then go into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly; that is right.

Mr. BRIGHT. I withdraw the motion, then.

Mr. GARFIELD. And I submit the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the President's message.

Mr. THOMAS TURNER. Ought not there to be a stipulation that the gentleman from New York shall have an opportunity to reply if he wishes to do so?

Mr. GARFIELD. That will take care of itself.

Mr. COX. I do not ask any favor of gentlemen on the other side, or of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARFIELD. I say there will be no trouble about that on either side.

The SPEAKER. The question, then, is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and general debate is in order.

Mr. COFFROTH. I give notice that when the gentleman is through I will seek the floor for the purpose of moving to take up for action at this time the pension bill.

Mr. HORR. Mr. Chairman, previous to commencing the few remarks which I propose to make to-day in reference to the eloquent and able speech of the distinguished and weighty member from New York, [Mr. COX,] I will ask the Clerk to read the speech which I delivered a few days ago, or that portion of it that gave the occasion for the fearful effort we witnessed here yesterday. The Clerk will be kind enough to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Genial little friend.

[Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HORR. I wish to say in defense of myself that those words were used in the heat of debate. [Laughter.] I am a plain man. My early education, unfortunately for me, was not among books nor among the crags of the awful Alps. I spent my boyhood in manual labor, at hard work, and consequently sometimes in the heat of debate, owing to my embarrassment and exceeding diffidence, I have no doubt I drop words which I am sorry for afterward. [Laughter.] And had I known the sensitiveness of the gentleman from New York, had I known the poetry of his nature, I certainly never should have used the language I did at that time. I should have addressed him in the language of one of our modern poets, "Dear little Buttercup, sweet little Buttercup, I." [Laughter and applause.]

I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that I was led into this expression of speech partly by having previously read the book which the gentleman was so kind as to give me yesterday before the House and the country. This is a book compiled by the gentleman from New York. [Laughter.] I have read several of his works, and this is the best I have read, for there is but little of COX in it and a good deal of other men. [Laughter.] Now, in turning over the pages of that book, the first thing which struck me was some passages that some one had marked, perhaps the gentleman, for my benefit.

He says:

To call a large man "My feeble friend" or a little man "The gigantic gentleman," to dilate upon a loud-voiced member or cry "Louder" to his loudness, to mimic his intonations or "take off" his hair or wig, make sport of its color, or emphasize the peculiarities of his dress or toilet, of his eyes, ears, or legs—these little diversions are as common to the legislature as to the stage.

Again, he says:

An allusion to the personal appearance of a member excites as much if not more fun in the English Parliament than in our Congress.

Why, he says, "Delaware has sometimes received a slap for being small, but only when small States and small men are pretentious do good men assail their diminished proportions." [Laughter.] Am I not within the rule?

Now, I wish to say to my friend from New York that nothing was further from my mind possibly than the idea of endeavoring to belittle him before this assembly. I had no idea of doing anything of the kind. I knew the gentleman's weight; I know the gentleman's accomplishments, and far be it from me to seek, in any way, a contest with him.

Why, some one intimated to me that the gentleman thought I was trying to get some belt from him that he has been wearing here. Good God! [placing his hands on his right and left sides] what good would a belt of that length do me? [Loud laughter.] Mr. Chairman, I never prided myself on being a handsome man, and the little speech which you have heard from the desk was the only occasion for that tirade yesterday upon this beautiful form of mine. [Laughter.] Because I happen to be unfortunate, I say it is unkind in the gentleman to attack me on that account, for there is no man in this House who shall ever surpass me in my admiration of the beautiful form of my friend from New York. [Laughter.] I never look at him without thinking of the creations of the early masters, Mr. Chairman, as if he had been molded in marble.

Some poet has told us that "a thing of beauty is a joy forever." How simple the statement, and yet how true it is! Now, with all the gentleman's transcendant loveliness, I would wish to make this one suggestion which I think, if he will follow, will add much to his already exceeding grace and beauty. My idea is that Brother COX should part his hair in the middle, and wear bangs. [Loud laughter.] It will add, you know, such dignity of character to the gentleman's appearance.

Now, I approach this subject tremblingly. I cannot get over it, because he told us yesterday that he blew one man out through the keyhole! [Laughter.] I do not want the gentleman to treat me in that way. I do not want to be squeezed through that kind of a hole. But, Mr. Chairman, that gentleman has a great advantage over me. He made a speech here in the extra session of this Congress on the test oath.

A MEMBER. On test oaths?

Mr. HORR. Yes, on test oaths, I believe. That speech has marked in it "laughter" fourteen times, "applause" six times, "great laughter" once, "applause and laughter" once, and "long-continued applause" once.

Now, I would like to know of the gentleman if the rumor is true that that speech was printed, "applause," "laughter," and all, three days before he delivered it. [Laughter.] Why, Mr. Chairman, I saw that speech in print, "laughter" and all, before it was delivered.

Now, I say, that is a big advantage. [Laughter.] Why, you know that there is a great advantage in any man being able to sit down in the darkness and silence of his own room, at the midnight hour, and whenever he has written anything which he considers fine, stops all of a sudden and writes in his own "laughter." [Laughter.] Then he will write on a little further, comes to something else, and he thinks he should write "applause and laughter;" so in goes again his own "applause and laughter." [Laughter.] I wish to say to the gentleman that that is probably one reason of his thinness in flesh. [Laughter.] He overworks himself. He does too much for the world. If he would simply furnish the speeches and let the world furnish the laughter and applause it would not draw so heavily upon his constitution. [Laughter.]

What I wish to say to the members of the House now is that I am not wholly to blame for the little slip of my tongue in applying the term I did to the distinguished gentleman. I will ask the Clerk to hold open upon the desk, in the presence of the House, this book.

[The Clerk opened a bound volume of Harper's Weekly upon the desk, containing a cartoon of Mr. COX looking over the Speaker's desk in the House of Representatives, being the cartoon of Nast on Mr. COX just after his defeat for Speaker.

Mr. HORR, pointing with a cane to the picture, continued as follows:]

That, Mr. Chairman, is a picture which was made just after the gentleman was not elected Speaker of this House. [Laughter.] You will find it headed, and that is the reason, I suppose, the gentleman got it published himself; for it is written under it, "Why we laugh," just the same title the gentleman has given to his book. [Laughter.]

Now, if anybody will look at that picture they will find why I was misled. They have put the gentleman on top of the Speaker's chair, standing on it, too, to get his head over the top of the desk. [Laughter.] Then there are on the side of the desk there, as you will perceive, seven bills. Here is one of those bills, [indicating,] and the other six make a pile just as high as the gentleman's head. [Laughter.] And you see the mallet here. They have made the mallet almost as large as his head. Of course it is not; his head is the biggest.

Well, on looking that picture over I was naturally misled into using the term I am now so sorry for; for I say to you I never regretted anything more in my life than offending the gentleman as I did.

I have a few words to say to the democracy of this country. Gentlemen, you are partly to blame for the trouble I am in. A gentleman from New York informed me this morning that my friend [Mr. COX] once stated in his presence, or in the presence of a gentleman who told him, that if he had been six inches taller he would have been President of the United States to-day. [Laughter.] What I complain of is that the democrats of this country have fallen into the mistake of which the gentleman so loudly complains, of giving heed to muscle instead of brain. Now I have no doubt that six inches would help the gentleman if you put it on the upper story, although it would not help to make him a better democrat. Why, only think of it. He would have been Speaker of the House if he had only had three inches more on his head and a lot of more votes; for he did lack votes. [Laughter.]

I wish to say in conclusion that whatever I may say hereafter in debate I beg that gentleman to understand I have no malice nor any hardness of heart in me. I do not suppose that the half hour of billingsgate that he piled up on me was called for. But he is a high literary man and I am a poor, unsophisticated boy. He was kind enough to give you yesterday an epitaph for me. I am not a poet. I may say there are many things I wish I was that I am not; but there is a friend of mine who furnished me an epitaph for my friend from New York, and I will say for him that I think it covers the case:

Beneath this slab lies the great SAM COX,
He was wise as an owl and grave as an ox;
Think it not strange his turning to dust,
For he swelled and he swelled till he finally "bust."
Just where he's gone or just how he fares
Nobody knows and nobody cares.
But wherever he is, be he angel or elf,
Be sure, dear reader, he's puffing himself.

[Laughter and long-continued applause.]

Mr. COFFROTH. Would it now be in order to call up the bill (H. R. No. 3258) for the employment of additional clerks in the Pension Bureau?

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and had come to no resolution thereon.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, Mr. COX in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. This is objection day. [Laughter.] The Clerk will read the first bill on the Calendar.

GEORGE EYSTER.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2796) for the relief of George Eyster, reported from the Committee of Ways and Means by Mr. DUNNELL.

The bill and report were read.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether it is the custom of Congress to reimburse public officers for moneys stolen from them by their own subordinates. I know there have been cases where it has reimbursed public officers for money lost by theft when that money was kept in the place of deposit designated by the Government; but I do not recollect a case where a collector has been reimbursed for money stolen by his own subordinate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair need scarcely remind the gentleman from Illinois, who is so familiar with the rules, that one objection is sufficient, and debate is not in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is this objection day?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I object to this bill.

REFUND OF TAXES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2797) for the relief of certain citizens of Lynchburgh, Virginia, and refunding to them taxes improperly collected from them on manufactured tobacco; reported from the Committee of Ways and Means by Mr. PHELPS.

The bill was read.

Mr. PHELPS. I call for the reading of the report.

The report was read.

Mr. CONGER. I think that bill should go over. I object.

THOMAS KEARNEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2188) for the relief of Thomas Kearney; reported from the Committee of Ways and Means by Mr. PHELPS.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, in settling the accounts of Thomas Kearney, late collector for the district of Corpus Christi, in Texas, credit and allow him the sums of $12,470.50 in gold, and $340 in silver, public money, of which he was robbed, while his life was in jeopardy, by Sergeant Connor and private Jackson, United States soldiers, on the highway in Texas, on the 6th of May, 1870.

The report was read, as follows:

In the year 1870, Kearney, as collector of customs for the district of Corpus Christi, left that place on the 21st of April, under instructions from the Secretary of the Treasury, to collect from his deputies the several amounts in their hands belonging to the Government. His only practicable mode of conveyance was by ambulance, and he had hired one for the purpose, with four horses, for the necessary changes, that he might be able to proceed with all reasonable dispatch. The danger of traveling with money or other valuable property along the Mexican frontier rendered it prudent and necessary that he should have a suitable military escort for the protection of the specie to be received and carried by him, and, on application to Colonel Anderson, commanding Fort McIntosh, he was, by order of the War Department, furnished with a guard of six men, under command of Sergeant Philip Connor, of Company C, Fourth United States Cavalry.

This guard with the proprietor of the ambulance and his driver and two merchants of Corpus Christi, comprised the parties who were connected with the collector at the time of the robbery hereinafter referred to, in consequence of which and the loss under it relief is sought.

Kearney had visited several places where his deputies were located, and had received from them, in gold coin, $12,470.50, and in silver coin $340, in all $12,810.50, belonging to the Government, which he had packed and securely locked in strong boxes, which he carried in said ambulance, in which he rode and slept. He had also in gold $3,240, which he had received from private parties for the purpose of safe transit to Corpus Christi.

On the evening of May 5 the party encamped for the night one and a half miles from the Rancho el Radado, at a place selected by the sergeant of the guard. In the morning the sergeant ordered all his men, excepting one private by the name of Jackson, to take all the horses of the guard except their own to the rancho to be watered, and the driver of the ambulance also took the ambulance horses there for the same purpose, leaving no persons in the vicinity of the ambulance except the collector and the proprietor of the ambulance.

Soon after they had all left, Sergeant Connor and Private Jackson seized the pistols of the collector and the owner of the ambulance, and, with loaded carbines presented at their heads, demanded the keys of the boxes, and compelled them to stand disarmed at some distance from the ambulance while they opened the boxes, took from them the above amounts, and immediately mounted their horses and rode rapidly away.

The alarm was given as soon and extensively as possible, and efforts made to organize an efficient pursuit, but the men were all unacquainted with that section of the country and it was abandoned as impracticable. A reward of $1,000 was offered by Kearney and $600 by the owners of the private coin for the apprehension of the perpetrators of the robbery, but no traces of them could be found. The Treasury Department was immediately notified of the particulars of the occurrence, and everything appears to have been done by Kearney that was reasonable under the circumstances.

The evidence of Kearney is corroborated by that of all the members of his party and of the two merchants of Corpus Christi who were at the ranch at the time, and also by the several deputy collectors from whom he had received the money in his possession, and the committee are of the opinion that the robbery and loss were in no degree chargeable to any complicity or neglect of Kearney. He stands charged on the books of the Treasury Department with the amount of the money stolen, and cannot obtain credit for the same, and a just settlement of his account as collector, without the Department has authority to apply the amount to his credit.

The committee believe he is justly entitled to relief, and recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

W. B. FARRAR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 393) for the relief of W. B. Farrar, reported from the Committee of Ways and Means by Mr. PHELPS.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Treasurer of the United States be authorized and required to refund to W. B. Farrar, of Whitfield County, Georgia, the sum of $300, being the amount of illegal and unjust taxes paid during a part of the year 1877, for deficiency in the production of spirits at his distillery.

Mr. PHELPS. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

Farrar was the proprietor and operator of a small distillery, without experience in or a practical knowledge of the business, and the taxes asked to be refunded were imposed for an alleged deficiency in the production of his distillery.

The collector appointed as storekeeper a dissipated and worthless man with whom Farrar was unacquainted, who promised to run the distillery in such a manner as to secure him against a deficiency, but who, in fact, neglected his duties, and often left the premises in the care of a dishonest and incapable man, who sold and otherwise misappropriated, without the knowledge of Farrar at the time, a large quantity of the product of the distillery.

Under the claim of the Government, the distillery and all its fixtures were distrained and sold for the non-payment of a deficiency tax which had been assessed, and the property was purchased and is now held by the Government for the small sum of $133.07, and Farrar is left entirely destitute of property and employment.

The committee find that Farrar paid all legal taxes on all the spirits that were turned over to him by the storekeeper, and that the proceedings of the Government in imposing the tax and distraining and selling his property were oppressive and unjust, and that he is entitled to the relief provided for in said bill, and recommend its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

L. MADISON DAY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2798) for the relief of L. Madison Day; reported from the Committee of Claims by Mr. O'CONNOR.

Mr. KNOTT. As I understand that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] who in the former session of this Congress submitted an adverse report upon this claim desires to be heard and is not present, I object to the consideration of this bill at this time.

OWNER OF THE BARK GRAPESHOT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2802) for the relief of the owner of the bark Grapeshot; reported from the Committee of Ways and Means by Mr. PHELPS.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to George Law, of the city and State of New York, the sum of $15,861.50, the same properly belonging to said Law, and being a deposit in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the registry of the United States district court for the eastern district of Louisiana as the avails of the sale under a libel brought to said court of the bark Grapeshot, owned by said Law, and of certain freight earned by said bark; all the demands of the libellants in said cause having been fully satisfied by said Law, and he by order of the circuit court of the fifth circuit of the United States, before which said cause was pending, having been legally subrogated to all the rights of the libellants in the premises.

The report was read, as follows:

Before and on the 15th day of July, 1858, George Law, of the city and State of New York, was the sole owner of the bark Grapeshot. On that day Wallestein, Massett & Co., of Rio Janeiro, Brazil, to enforce payment of a bottomry bond previously given them by the master of said bark, to secure the payment of a loan of $9,769.45, and a premium thereon of 19½ per cent. for the pending voyage, filed a libel against said bark in the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Louisiana.

Such proceedings were had in the cause that under said libel the said bark was sold, and the net proceeds of the sale, amounting to $13,805.85, and also $2,055.20, the net proceeds of the freight earned by said bark on said voyage, amounting in the aggregate to $15,861.05, in gold, were, by order of said court, deposited in the registry thereof, subject to the order of the libellants.

The cause was appealed from the district to the circuit court for the fifth circuit of the United States, and, before final adjudication by said circuit court, the late civil war was commenced and the cause taken before a provisional judge of the Confederate States, and by him decided in favor of the libellants. It was subsequently returned to the circuit court of the United States and by appeal taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, by which it was remanded to the circuit court under an order for a commission to examine and report the amount justly due; and on the 29th day of March, 1875, a final decree was passed in favor of the libellants for $4,392.25, together with 19½ per cent. maritime premium and 5 per cent. interest on said sum from July 3, 1858, until paid.

On the 27th day of May, 1876, the libellants received from George Law, the former owner of said bark, $9,175.89, being the full amount of the judgment, including interest and costs to which the libellants were entitled. Whereupon, and by virtue of such payment, on proper motion to and order of said circuit court, the said George Law was declared subrogated to all the rights of the libellants and to be entitled, in his own right, to all and singular the proceeds of said sale of said bark and to said freight, and to the said money deposited, as before stated, in the registry of said court.

The said sum of $15,861.05 so deposited was placed in the Bank of Louisiana, in the city of New Orleans, to the credit of the treasury of the Confederate States. On the 17th day of June, 1862, Major-General Benjamin F. Butler, then commanding the Department of the Gulf, ordered and compelled the same to be transferred, for safe-keeping, to the Treasury of the United States, where it has ever since remained as a technical deposit by the Government through its aforesaid military authority, but justly belonging to the said George Law, and payable to him in gold.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying substitute for the bill referred to them.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

EDWARD K. WINSHIP.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 91) to authorize the settlement of the accounts of Acting Assistant Paymaster Edward K. Winship, United States Navy; introduced by Mr. HAWLEY, and reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs by Mr. BREWER.

The bill and report were read.

Mr. SPRINGER objected to the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish the gentleman would allow the bill to be considered.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order; this is objection day.

Mr. BREWER. All I desire to say is that this same bill passed at the last Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. SPRINGER subsequently withdrew his objection.

Mr. SPARKS renewed the objection, and the bill was passed over.

JOHN D. M'GILL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2804) for the relief of John D. McGill; reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs by Mr. HARMER.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $102 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay John D. McGill for advertising the sale of the property known as the Philadelphia navy-yard in the Georgetown Courier in November, 1875.

The report was read, as follows:

By act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, a commission was created to make sale and conveyance of the property known as the Philadelphia navy-yard. Authority was given to advertise the sale, and of the newspapers selected for that purpose the Georgetown Courier was included. The expenses of the commission were to be paid out of the money received from the sale of the property, which included the advertising. All the bills were received and paid except for advertising in the Georgetown Courier, which was not presented for payment until after all the funds in the hands of the commissioner had been expended, and the amount due Mr. McGill remains unpaid.

The Secretary of the Navy says the claim is just, the charges reasonable, and recommends the payment of the amount due.

Your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Since this bill was reported Mr. McGill has died. I ask consent to insert the words "to the administrator of" before the words "John D. McGill."

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

CHARLES DOUGHERTY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 270) to reimburse Charles Dougherty for his expenses to the consulate at Londonderry; introduced by Mr. WRIGHT, and reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs by Mr. BICKNELL.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and required to pay Charles Dougherty, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000, to reimburse him for his expenses to the consulate of Londonderry.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 270) to reimburse Charles Dougherty for his expenses to the consulate of Londonderry, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

Mr. Dougherty, on the 2d day of October, 1866, the Senate not being in session, was appointed by the President consul to Londonderry.

He received from the Department of State forms of his bond and oath of office, with instructions to proceed to his post within thirty days after taking the oath. His bond and oath were duly executed and sent to the Department, which gave him his passport and instructions, and informed him that his commission would be sent to the United States legation at London, and would be thence transmitted to him as soon as the exequatur of the British government could be obtained. The Department also gave Dougherty an order upon his predecessor for the records and archives of the consulate.

Dougherty sailed for Londonderry on the 12th of December, 1866, within the time prescribed; his commission was received by the United States minister at London, who applied for the exequatur, but before it could be obtained the Senate had refused to confirm Mr. Dougherty's nomination. The nomination was rejected on the 21st of February, 1867. Mr. Dougherty was notified of it in a letter from Minister Adams, dated March 8, 1867. In the mean time Mr. Dougherty, acting under the advice of the minister, and waiting for the exequatur, had not presented to his predecessor his order for the records, and therefore not only never had his commission, but never had possession of the office or any of its archives.

When he received his instructions he was notified by the State Department that there was no salary for the office, that his compensation would be fees only, and that his right to fees would not accrue until after his receipt of the exequatur of the British government. He was also notified that no allowance for outfit or for traveling expenses was provided by law.

Upon these facts, Mr. Dougherty now presents the following claim against the United States:

Fare to Londonderry, via New York and Glasgow	$493 75
Expenses in New York awaiting ship	98 00
Hotel bill in Glasgow	140 00
Expenses for five months in Londonderry	1,000 00
Fare returning for self and family	420 00
Nine months' time from October, 1866, to July 1, 1867	1,500 00
Total	3,651 75

Your committee are unanimously of opinion that Mr. Dougherty has no legal claim upon the United States for any of the foregoing items, but a majority of the committee, deeming it a hard case for Mr. Dougherty, who seems to have followed the orders of the State Department without default, are of opinion that Mr. Dougherty ought to be reimbursed for his traveling expenses, and they consider $1,000 a reasonable allowance in that behalf. They therefore report back the House bill No. 270, with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. McMILLIN. I object to that bill.

Mr. WRIGHT. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection. I know the bill is right.

Mr. McMILLIN. I must insist upon the objection.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. McMILLIN said: Mr. Chairman, I entered an objection to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 270) to reimburse Charles Dougherty for his expenses to the consulate at Londonderry. I am willing that the Committee of the Whole should consider that bill now. So far I withdraw my objection, without espousing in any manner the bill, to which I am opposed.

There being no further objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

PATSY DAVENPORT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1597) granting a pension to Patsy Davenport; reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. TAYLOR.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Patsy Davenport, mother of William Henry Davenport, who died in the service of the United States, and upon whom she was dependent wholly for support; said pension to be at the rate of $8 per month, to begin at the date of the death of said William Henry Davenport.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1597) granting a pension to Patsy Davenport, a dependent mother, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report:

That from the testimony on file in this case, it appears that Captain James Taylor was authorized to recruit a company for the United States Army in Carter County, Tennessee, in the year 1862; that he did recruit said company, and was killed by the confederate soldiers before joining his regiment or the muster of his men; that William Henry Davenport was one of said recruits, and before reaching his regiment and before being mustered into the service he was captured by the confederate soldiers, taken to Vicksburgh, Mississippi, as a prisoner of war, where he died of chronic diarrhœa about the 25th day of June, 1863.

The proof also shows that the said Patsy Davenport is a dependent mother, having no husband or other children able to contribute to her support.

In view of all the facts and the proof, your committee are satisfied that said William Henry Davenport had enlisted in the United States Army, that he was captured before he could be mustered, and died in prison as aforesaid, and that his mother was dependent upon him for support; they therefore recommend the passage of the bill granting her a pension as provided in said bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

MARTHA J. ROBINSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 740) granting a pension to Martha J. Robinson; introduced by Mr. BICKNELL and reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. HOSTETLER.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Martha J. Robinson, widow of James H. Robinson, late private in Company E, Fifth Regiment Indiana Cavalry Volunteers, and to pay her a pension from and after the passage of this act.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 740) granting a pension to Martha J. Robinson, widow of James H. Robinson, a private in Company E, Fifth Regiment Indiana Cavalry Volunteers, have had the same under consideration, and ask leave to submit the following report:

The committee find, from the records of the Surgeon-General's Office, from the Adjutant-General's Office, and from the certificate of disability on which he was discharged, that he was enlisted August 18, 1862, and was honorably discharged September 26, 1863, of chronic pneumonia, at Louisville, Kentucky. It is also in proof by the affidavits of five different witnesses, all of whom are vouched for as being reliable, that the soldier entered the service a healthy, sound man, and became diseased while in the service and in the line of duty. Some of the witnesses swear to visiting him, among them his stepmother, and waiting on him for weeks in hospital while sick at Louisville, Kentucky; that they know he was sick when discharged, and was never afterward able to work, but lingered along and finally died of the disease for which he was discharged. The certificate of disability for discharge shows that he was unfit for the invalid corps. The evidence is conclusive that he was sound at enlistment; that his health was broken down in the service and in the line of duty; and that he lingered along and finally died of the same disease, leaving his widow, Martha J. Robinson, and one child, Abraham L. Robinson, born March 19, 1862, entitled to pension.

The committee, therefore, report back the accompanying bill and recommend its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

WHITEWOOD FLUME COMPANY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2805) incorporating the Whitewood Flume Company; reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining by Mr. ACKLEN.

Mr. BOUCK. I object to the bill.

Mr. PRICE. I suppose the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOUCK] knows all about the bill without hearing it read.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. PRICE. I know it is not.

Objection being made, the bill was passed over.

MRS. A. P. BELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3033) for the relief of Mrs. A. P. Bell, of Bertie County, North Carolina; reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads by Mr. STONE.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That whereas the post-office building in the town of Windsor, in the county of Bertie, North Carolina, was destroyed by fire during the year 1877, and $500 in money and post-office orders were consumed therein, and the Post-Office Department demands that the postmaster, Mrs. A. P. Bell, of said post-office, shall pay over to the Government the said sum so lost, therefore that the sum of $538, or so much thereof as may be necessary to reimburse the said postmaster, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid to and reimburse the said Mrs. A. P. Bell, postmaster at Windsor, Bertie County, North Carolina, for such sum as may be collected from her or sureties by reason of said loss.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Ann P. Bell for relief, would report as follows:

On the 1st day of June, 1877, the post-office in the town of Windsor, Bertie County, North Carolina, was destroyed by accidental fire, without the fault or negligence of the postmaster, Mrs. Ann P. Bell.

The building containing the post-office, and also the adjacent buildings, were totally destroyed with their contents, including stamps, postal cards, stamped envelopes, money-order and other funds belonging to the Government.

It satisfactorily appears to your committee that the amount in current money belonging to the Government which was in the post-office at the time of said fire, and was consumed, was $497 belonging to the money-order division, and $41 belonging to the general postal fund, making a total amount of $538 in current money destroyed, and that Mrs. Bell has settled with the Post-Office Department for the same. Her statements under oath are corroborated by the affidavits of other credible persons. We recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

JACKSON GRUBB.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 710) to refund to Jackson Grubb internal-revenue tax wrongfully collected; introduced by Mr. DIBRELL, and reported from the Committee of Claims by Mr. O'CONNOR.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to refund to Jackson Grubb, of McMinn County, Tennessee, $300, improperly collected from him by the internal-revenue collector in the year 1868, for tax improperly assessed upon him as a distiller of fruit brandy, in the year 1868, after orders had been issued suspending the collection of the special tax on fruit-distillers, and the same is hereby appropriated.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee of Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 710) for the relief of Jackson Grubb, of McMinn County, Tennessee, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

From a letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of April 27, 1878, and the proof in this case, it appears that Jackson Grubb was a distiller of brandy from fruit, in McMinn County, Tennessee, in 1868; that by the act of 20th July, 1868, distillers of brandy were assessed the sum of $400 annual tax; that upon an opinion of the Attorney-General the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in accordance with the second section of said act of July 20, and with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, did on the 12th day of October, 1868, issue an order suspending the collection of and relieving the distillers of fruit brandy from the payment of said special tax, and that after the issuance of said order forbidding the further collection of said special tax, the collector of internal revenue of the second district of Tennessee, afterward, to wit, on the 21st day of October, 1868, collected from said Jackson Grubb $300, said special tax. By reference to the letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue above referred to it will be seen that this is the only claim, so far as the Commissioner is advised, paid after said order that has not been refunded.

The committee being well satisfied of the justness of this claim, recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. DIBRELL. Since the making of the report Mr. Grubb has died. I move to amend the bill so as to make the amount payable to his legal representatives.

There being no objection, the amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

JOSEPH B. CAMPBELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1800) for the relief of Joseph B. Campbell, captain in the Fourth Artillery, United States Army; introduced by Mr. BRAGG, and reported by him from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a certain judgment, in which Hugh Waters is plaintiff and J. B. Campbell is defendant, obtained in the United States circuit court for the district of Oregon, amounting at the time it was rendered to the sum of $2,100.50, said judgment having been obtained against said J. B. Campbell while acting in his official capacity in the line of his duty as an officer of the Army of the United States; and also to pay to said J. B. Campbell, captain Fourth Artillery, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $191.35, it being the sum expended by said Captain Campbell for court and witness fees in defending said suit in court.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred a communication from the Secretary of War, recommending the passage of an act for the relief of Captain Campbell, of the United States Army, beg leave to report that they have carefully considered said communication and accompanying documents, and recommend the passage of the bill reported herewith.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

JAMES M. RUBY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1128) for the relief of James M. Ruby, introduced by Mr. BRAGG, and reported by him from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States of America is hereby directed and authorized to pay James M. Ruby the pay of a private soldier from and including the 28th day of June, A. D. 1862, to the 18th day of August, A. D. 1862, and the pay of a sergeant-major from the 18th day of August, A. D. 1862, to the 26th day of August, A. D. 1862, the period which the said Ruby was sergeant-major of the Twentieth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and also the pay of first lieutenant from the 26th day of August, A. D. 1862, inclusive, when the said Ruby was commissioned and mustered as first lieutenant in the Eighteenth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, to the 2d day of December, A. D. 1862, when the said Ruby was commissioned and mustered as an officer in the Thirty-fourth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry.

Mr. WHITE called for the reading of the report; which was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1128) for the relief of James M. Ruby, submit the following report:

The Committee have had such bill under consideration, and report the following facts upon which the claimant bases his claim to relief:

1. The muster-roll of the non-commissioned staff of the Twentieth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry shows that James M. Ruby enlisted in the service of the United States June 28, 1862; was mustered June 30, 1862, and was mustered as sergeant major in such regiment August 18, 1862. And the petition and affidavit of the claimant shows that he entered upon and discharged the duties of sergeant-major of such regiment from the date of his enlistment to the 22d day of August, 1862, and that he has received no pay for such period of service.

2. The petition of the claimant shows, among other things, that on the 22d day of August, 1862, he was commissioned by the governor of Wisconsin a first lieutenant in the Eighteenth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and that on the 26th day of August, 1862, he was duly and regularly mustered into the service of the United States, at Madison Wisconsin, by Major R. S. Smith, of the United States Army, on duty at Madison, Wisconsin, as muster-in officer and superintendent of recruiting service; the regiment in which he was so mustered, Colonel Bouck commanding, then being on duty near Corinth, Mississippi.

That by virtue of such commission and muster he reported for duty in person to Colonel Bouck, commanding Eighteenth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry in the field, at Corinth, by whom he was directed to report to Colonel Oliver, commanding brigade to which the Eighteenth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry was attached; that in obedience to such order he did so report to Colonel Oliver, and was by him assigned to duty as such first lieutenant in the Fourteenth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, Colonel John Hancock commanding, which last-named regiment was a part of Colonel Oliver's brigade; that under such order of assignment he entered upon active duty as such first lieutenant, participating in the march to Iuka, and engaging in a sharp skirmish near Iuka, Mississippi, and in the battle of Corinth on the 3d and 4th of October, 1862; that thereafter he was refused pay as such lieutenant, by the paymaster, on account of alleged irregularity in his muster, whereupon leave of absence was granted him by General John A. Rawlins, adjutant-general of General Grant, then in command of the troops in that department of military operations, to report to the governor of Wisconsin at Madison, and that he did so report on the 2d day of December, 1862, and was on said last-named day commissioned by the governor of Wisconsin a captain in the Thirty-fourth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and served as such until the 8th day of September, 1863.

The statements of Colonel Bouck and Colonel Hancock corroborate in substance the fact of his service as stated by the claimant, and bear testimony to his faithfulness and efficiency as an officer.

From these facts your committee report that in their opinion the said James M. Ruby is entitled to pay as a private soldier from the date of his enlistment, June 28, 1862, to August 18, 1862, when he was mustered as sergeant-major, and to pay as sergeant-major from August 18, 1862, to the 26th day of August, 1862, when he was mustered as first lieutenant.

And your committee further report that the claimant is entitled to pay as first lieutenant from the date of his muster as such by Major R. S. Smith, August 26, 1862, until the date of his muster as captain, on the 2d day of December, 1862.

Your committee base their favorable report upon the ground that the claimant performed the duty under the color and authority of the Government, and is not chargeable with irregularity, if any there was, in the mustering officers of the Government.

The Government received the service knowingly, and under color of its authority, and in justice should pay for the same.

Your committee, therefore, report back the bill and recommend its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

RACHAEL J. REBER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2855) granting a pension to Rachael J. Reber; which was introduced by Mr. COFFROTH, and reported by him from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Rachael J. Reber, widow of Effenger L. Reber, first lieutenant and adjutant of the Two hundred and fifth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and pay her a pension for herself and four children under sixteen years of age, commencing on the 2d of June, A. D. 1865, that being the date of the honorable discharge of her husband from the Army of the United States, at the rate of pensions for widows of deceased first lieutenants and adjutants of regiments in the late war of the rebellion; the said Effenger L. Reber having died from the effects of wounds received and disease contracted while in military service of the United States in the line of duty.

Mr. SPARKS called for the reading of the report, and it was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2855) granting a pension to Rachael J. Reber, widow of Effenger L. Reber, late first lieutenant and adjutant of the Two hundred and fifth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to make the following report:

Effenger L. Reber, at the age of eighteen, left school and enlisted as a private soldier in Company D, Fifth Regiment of Pennsylvania Reserve Volunteers on the 16th of July, 1861, to serve three years, and served with his company until the 16th day of February, 1864, when he was discharged, in order to re-enlist as a veteran volunteer, as sergeant-major of the One hundred and ninety-first Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers; and, on the 3d of September, 1864, he was discharged from the service of the United States by reason of promotion and in accordance with instructions from Adjutant-General's Office; and on the 2d day of September, 1864, was enrolled and commissioned first lieutenant and adjutant of the Two hundred and fifth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was discharged from the military service of the United States on the 2d of June, 1865, by order of the War Department. On the 2d of April, 1866, he was promoted by the President of the United States to the rank of captain by brevet from the 2d of April, 1865, for gallant and meritorious service at Forts Steadman and Sedgwick, Virginia; that while in the service aforesaid, in the line of duty, he received, on or about the 1st day of November, 1861, an injury which resulted in the loss of the sight of his right eye. On the 12th of May, 1864, he received a severe flesh wound above his right hand. On the night of the 15th of February, 1865, while acting assistant adjutant-general of the second brigade, third division, Ninth Army Corps, he was thrown from his horse and badly injured in the back. On the 2d day of April, 1865, during the battle at "Fort Hell," Virginia, a shell from the rebel line exploded above his head, knocking him down, stunning and shocking his nervous system in such a way that he never recovered from its effects, and from that day to the time of his death there was a gradual failing. His nervous system was shattered, causing tremors, weakness, unsteadiness, and impaired condition of his mental faculties, and finally a gradual softening of the brain. He died on the 26th of December, 1877.

On the 4th day of September, 1866, Lieutenant Reber filed his application for pension, but it was not acted upon because he was not treated in the hospital, either field or local, and the medical evidence of treatment while he was in the service was not furnished, which the Pension Department required to grant a pension.

Lieutenant Reber left a widow, Rachael J Reber, and four children, as follows: Thomas Jones Reber, born July 8, 1868; Rudolph Traugh Reber, born March 9, 1870; Effenger Lier Reber, born October 21, 1872; and Mary Rachael Reber, born July 25, 1874.

Effenger L. Reber was a brave and gallant soldier. He went into the Army when only a boy, and rendered valuable and praiseworthy services to his country. He came out of the military service with his system shattered and broken down, and the injuries which he received in the service in the line of duty were the cause of his death. This is clearly shown by the affidavits and other papers of reputable persons presented to the committee, beside the papers on file in the Pension Department.

The committee are of opinion that this is a meritorious case, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

ELIZABETH AULTS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2853) granting a pension to Elizabeth Aults; which was introduced by Mr. COFFROTH, and reported by him from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth Aults, widow of Ambrose N. Aults, of Company G, of the Two hundred and fifth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and that the said Elizabeth Aults be allowed a pension commencing from the date of the honorable discharge of said Ambrose N. Aults from the Army of the United States on account of injuries and disease received and contracted by him while in the service and line of duty during the late war of the rebellion, at the rate of pensions for widows of first lieutenants of the late war of the rebellion, and for two children from the date of their birth until they reach the age of sixteen.

Mr. SPARKS called for the reading of the report, and it was read as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2853) granting a pension to Elizabeth Aults, widow of Ambrose M. Aults, late captain of Company G, Two hundred and fifth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

Ambrose M. Aults, the late husband of the claimant, was first mustered into the military service of the United States in Company D, One hundred and thirty-first Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, on the 9th day of August, 1862, and was honorably discharged from said company in May, 1863. On the 2d of September, 1864, he again entered the military service as first lieutenant in Company G, Two hundred and fifth regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was promoted to the captaincy of said company on the 14th of May, 1865, and was honorably discharged from the Army of the United States on the 2d of June, 1865. He applied for a pension on the 30th of April, 1874, alleging that he contracted in April, 1865, tuberculosis, while being conveyed in a steamer from City Point, Virginia, to Annapolis, Maryland, he being wounded at the time. He died on the 17th of February, 1875, and before any decision was made on his application by the Pension Department. The claimant on the 14th of July, 1875, filed her application as widow for pension for herself and two children. This pension application was "rejected on the ground that the disease of which the soldier died was not chargeable to his military service."

Ambrose M. Aults left a widow, Elizabeth Aults, and two children, namely: Mary Louisa Aults, born June 3, 1870, and Ambrose M. Aults, born July 19, 1873.

Alexander Bobb, who was major of the Two hundred and eighth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, on the 21st of April, 1874, testifies that "at the charge on the rebel works before Petersburgh, Virginia, on the 2d day of April, 1865, Captain Aults was wounded by a gunshot in left hip, and went to the hospital at City Point, and while there he saw said Captain Aults; and that the said Aults was then sent by steamer to Annapolis, Maryland, and while absent he took a severe cold, and coughed and complained of lung affection. That he saw him in Harrisburgh, Pennsylvania, about the 1st of June, 1865, and he was then coughing and looking haggard, and complained of lung disease; and that he was sound and free from disease of lungs at the time he was lying in City Point hospital, Virginia, and before that; and that after coming from Annapolis was ever sickly, and that he got this disability in the service of the United States and in line of duty."

Captain Aults, in January, 1875, testified that he was unable to get the regiment surgeon's certificate, from the fact that on the 2d of April, 1865, he was wounded and left the regiment, and while away from it he took sick and did not get back to the regiment until it was ready to be mustered out, in June, 1865, and then he did not see the surgeon; and that he was unable to give the name of the surgeon on the boat, because he was on the boat but a short time, and there were a large number of wounded to be treated by the surgeon, and that he was given "leave of absence" at the hospital and he went home. In a deposition filed on the 12th of September he swears: "I claim on account of tuberculosis contracted in April, 1865, while being conveyed in a steamer from City Point, Virginia, to Annapolis, Maryland, being wounded at the time."

Dr. David D. Mahan, in August, 1874, testified that he well knew Ambrose M. Aults for fifteen years prior to enlistment in the Army, and was his family physician three years prior thereto, and was at the time of his enlistment, and knows that said soldier was a sound and hearty man, and free from tuberculosis or any disease of the lungs.

Dr. J. F. Wilson, on the 10th of August, 1874, testified that "he well knew Captain Ambrose M. Aults at the time of his discharge; that he was his family physician to and for him from the date of his discharge, June 2, 1865, to the year 1873, and that he treated him during this time for incipient tuberculosis."

Dr. Rowan Clark, on the 10th of August, 1877, testified that he was the family physician to Captain Ambrose M. Aults from October, 1871, to August, 1874; that he treated him all that time for tuberculosis, or disease of the lungs.

Dr. J. M. Smith, attending physician at the time of Captain Ault's death, on the 17th of September, 1875, testified that the "physical condition of Ambrose M. Aults from August, 1874, to date of death: Disorganization of greater portion of left lung, with perceptible flattening of chest-wall in infra and supra clavicular region; tubercular deposit in right lung; cough, with copious muco-purulent expectoration; gradual exhaustion and extreme emaciation, evidenced by hectic symptoms; active hemorrhage from lungs February 4, 7, and 15, caused by breaking down of lung tissue. Died from exhaustion February 17, 1875, at one o'clock, a. m."

From this mass of medical evidence, given by reputable and distinguished members of the medical profession, the committee readily came to the conclusion that Captain Aults contracted tuberculosis while in the Army, and which was the cause of his death. As the tuberculosis was contracted while Ambrose M. Aults was a first lieutenant, his pension should be at that rate.

The committee do not hesitate to recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. WARNER. I do not rise especially to object to this bill, but I must say that if the evidence referred to in the report is true this person is entitled to a pension from the Pension Office, and does not require a special act.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. WARNER. Yes; I do object.

Subsequently Mr. WARNER withdrew his objection, and the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

WILLIAM R. WEIMER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3076) granting a pension to William R. Weimer; reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. COFFROTH.

The bill and report were read.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. It seems to me that we are running very wild upon the subject of pensions. We have a general law in regard to pensions, and an expensive organization for the purpose of carrying out that law.

Mr. BRIGHT. Debate is not in order.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Then I object to the bill.

Objection being made, the bill was passed over.

JOHN H. BLACK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2862) granting an increase of pension to John H. Black; reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. COFFROTH.

(Objected to by Mr. MCMILLIN.)

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COX reported that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar had directed him to report sundry bills, with the recommendation that they be passed with or without amendments respectively.

ADJOURNMENT TILL MONDAY.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHARLES CLINTON.

The SPEAKER. There comes over as unfinished business from last Friday the bill (H. R. No. 1542) for the relief of Charles Clinton, of New Orleans, late assistant treasurer at New Orleans. This bill was reported from the Committee of the Whole with an unfavorable recommendation.

Mr. CARLISLE. Since the action of the Committee of the Whole upon this bill I have received from the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] who introduced it a telegram requesting that its further consideration may be postponed until his return to the city. In accordance with this request, I move that the bill be postponed until next Friday.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the bill will be allowed to retain its present attitude before the House until next Friday.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

THOMAS KEARNEY.

The first bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2188) for the relief of Thomas Kearney; which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRIGHT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

W. B. FARRAR.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 393) authorizing the Treasurer of the United States to refund to W. B. Farrar, of Whitfield County, Georgia, illegal taxes collected from him in the year 1877; which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PHELPS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OWNER OF BARK GRAPESHOT.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2802) for the relief of the owner of the bark Grapeshot; which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PHELPS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHARLES DOUGHERTY.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 270) to reimburse Charles Dougherty for his expenses to the consulate at Londonderry; which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WRIGHT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PATSY DAVENPORT.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1597) granting a pension to Patsy Davenport; which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TAYLOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARTHA J. ROBINSON.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 740) granting a pension to Martha J. Robinson; which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOSTETLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. A. P. BELL.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3033) for the relief of Mrs. A. P. Bell, of Bertie County, North Carolina.

Mr. STONE. In drafting this bill I omitted to insert after the words "five hundred" the words "thirty-eight." I move to amend in the sixth line of the bill so as to make the sum $538.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STONE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOSEPH B. CAMPBELL.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1800) for the relief of Joseph B. Campbell, captain in the Fourth Artillery, United States Army; which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES M. RUBY.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1128) for the relief of James M. Ruby; which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RACHAEL J. REBER.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2855) granting a pension to Rachael J. Reber; which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COFFROTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELIZABETH AULTS.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2853) granting a pension to Elizabeth Aults; which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COFFROTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN D. M'GILL.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2804) for the relief of John D. McGill.

The amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole to insert after the word "pay," in line five, the words "to the administrator of," was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HARMER, the title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the administrator of John D. McGill."

Mr. HARMER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JACKSON GRUBB.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 710) to refund to Jackson Grubb internal-revenue tax wrongfully collected.

The amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole to insert in line five after the word "Tennessee," the words "or his legal representatives," was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DIBRELL, the title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to refund to Jackson Grubb or his legal representatives internal-revenue tax wrongfully collected."

Mr. DIBRELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is not at all agreeable, it is true, but there is a piece of injustice in the RECORD this morning so gross I must take the time of the House for a few moments in regard to it. I ask the Clerk to read a passage, which I have marked, from this morning's RECORD.

The SPEAKER. It will be read, and then the Chair will decide whether it is a privileged question or not.

The Clerk read as follows:

A very distinguished gentleman, a citizen of the State of Illinois, a distinguished ex-soldier and philologist, said on the 20th day of this month, in a speech made not very far from this Chamber, (see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, January 21, page 4,) that the bill introduced by General WEAVER into the House of Representatives to equalize the pay of soldiers was the worst piece of "demagogy"—"demagogy" is good—ever introduced into an American Congress. That gentleman is General JOHN A. LOGAN. The country is prepared for just such a declaration from him. They remember that in 1873, when the country was financially ruined, and thousands of ex-soldiers were out of employment and suffering for bread, that JOHN A. LOGAN voted for the back-salary act, and then pocketed $3,800 as his share of the swag.

Mr. HAWLEY. And he was perfectly right.

Mr. WEAVER. No doubt the gentleman, who on the floor of this House characterized the greenbackers as belonging to "the tag-rag and bobtail of the country" would say that it was perfectly right. He is in the same boat. [Applause.] Opposition of that kind to the soldiers' bill would very naturally be expected.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I requested the official reporters to get me from the Government Printing Office the manuscript report of these remarks of the gentleman from Iowa, and I had hoped it would be here in time. I intended to show by it what the reporter assured me could be shown by it, and what appears in the Associated Press report, and what I am confirmed in by every member, and what I know anyhow, that when the gentleman from Iowa referred to the opinion of a distinguished gentleman, formerly a member of this House, that his soldier bill was the worst piece of demagogy ever introduced into the American Congress, I said in a conversational way, and rather glad of the opportunity, "And he was perfectly right" with reference to that. Everybody understood me round here. Well, then the gentleman from Iowa went on to say, "No doubt the gentleman," meaning myself, "who on the floor of this House characterized the greenbackers as belonging to the tag-rag and bobtail of the country would say that it was perfectly right." Then he went on to make some reference to General LOGAN'S voting for the back-pay salary act when he was in the House. That was the last of the three paragraphs, and in regard to that I said nothing. The two paragraphs have been transposed, and my remark, "And he was perfectly right," has been made to come in after that third paragraph about General LOGAN'S voting for the back-salary act which I was a very bitter opponent of, and was among those who returned the money. I do not desire that kind of credit. I was glad then and am now of being able to say that the bill introduced by the gentleman from Iowa in regard to paying the Army the difference between gold and silver and greenbacks was a piece of demagogism and humbug, or anything else you choose to call it.

The SPEAKER. But that is not a part of the personal explanation.

Mr. WEAVER. The language used by myself and by the gentleman from Connecticut appears in the very order in which I understood it at the time, when I was correcting the manuscript last evening. Now, it will not bear the construction which the gentleman puts on it, and there is nothing between us except the order in which it should occur. I was caricaturing a remark of General LOGAN, of Illinois, animadverting on it, and in that connection, by way of retort, took occasion to say what has been read from the desk, when I understood the gentleman to remark, "And he was perfectly right." I did not understand him to say that he was right in taking the back-salary grab, nor did I reply in that vein.

My reply is to the effect, I would suppose that a gentleman who, on the floor of this House, had characterized the members of the greenback party as belonging to the tag-rag and bobtail of the country, would justify the remark made by General LOGAN in his speech. That is what I understood the gentleman to mean, and that is what I meant at that time, and not to accuse the gentleman from Connecticut of taking the back-salary grab.

The gentleman from Connecticut has been guilty of a parliamentary discourtesy, if he intended to say here yesterday, as he did say in a very angry and excited manner, that the remark of General LOGAN, that the introduction of this bill of which I am said to be the author was demagogical, was perfectly right. If he intended to do that upon the floor of this House it was in violation of Rule 57 and every parliamentary rule in the world, and was a personal discourtesy, and he stands here to-day self-confessed before this House of having offered a personal insult to a brother member. Now, there is no occasion for any hard-feeling at all. There are gentlemen on my left who understood the remark of the gentleman from Connecticut to come in exactly in the way in which it appears in the RECORD. I know there was considerable confusion at the time, and we all know in correcting our remarks made before the House it is a very common thing to find errors by the reporters; at least, things reported coming in conflict with our opinion of the order in which they occurred. The gentleman repeats his insult upon the floor of this House, and he is the last gentleman who should complain of any injury in that direction, if he persists in insulting a brother member on the floor of this House. I will now hear what he has further to state.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understand the gentleman from Iowa himself admits having changed the official report and transposed two important passages.

Mr. WEAVER. I did.

Mr. HAWLEY. He changed those two paragraphs, which transposition results in a gross injustice to me. I supposed he did it. I did not say so in my first remarks, but I supposed he changed the official report. I think official courtesy, if there was any doubt in his mind, should have led him to inquire whether I had approved the back pay as well as the denunciation of his soldier's bill. But he does not say that. He says I spoke of the introduction of the bill as an act of demagogy; no, not quite that, for there is a slight shade of difference. He has the entire right to introduce a bill of that sort. I do not question his legal right. I speak of the bill as demagogism, and if there was any discourtesy in that let us call it square, and then he had better change his reference to a distinguished member of the other branch of Congress whom he has no right to refer to in opprobrious terms, or in any way to discuss here what that gentleman said in the Senate. Under the rules of the House the thing should have been objected to at the time. But I have said enough to set the matter right before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker was not in the Chair at the time this debate occurred. The gentleman from Connecticut is correct in saying that a member of this House has no right to speak of a member of the Senate in any other than respectful language.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have not quite done.

Mr. WEAVER. Very well.

Mr. MILLS. But supposing a Senator denounces him as a demagogue in the Senate?

The SPEAKER. Two wrongs do not make a right.

Mr. MILLS. But he should have a right to defend himself. If a man strikes another he has a right to strike back.

Mr. WEAVER. The gentleman will permit me to proceed.

The SPEAKER. The rules do not permit members to strike back in either House.

Mr. MILLS. But when one is struck in the other House I say he has a right to defend himself.

Mr. WEAVER. I alluded to nothing said in the Senate. I have not characterized anything any Senator said as such.

Mr. HAWLEY. I did not quite get through. I had a word more to say. There is one more error of the gentleman from Iowa which I will not stop to explain or correct. That was the remark about the character of the greenback party. That is a gross misrepresentation. I have answered my end in making it clear that I condemned in the severest language the bill offered by the gentleman from Iowa, and that I said nothing about the back pay, to which my opposition is very well known.

Mr. WEAVER. I have succeeded in making it clear that the gentleman confesses to having offered a personal discourtesy. I wish to say in reply to his animadversion, that I have not alluded to the remarks of a member of the Senate in his official capacity. I did no such thing. You will not find it in the report of my speech. I said "a distinguished citizen of Illinois, General JOHN A. LOGAN." I did not say where the speech was made.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman referred to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which states where the speech was made.

Mr. WEAVER. But it does not state he made the speech which was in the RECORD. [Laughter.] I will say this, Mr. Speaker, in reply to that, that no member of the Senate, if such a thing did take place, has a right to attack a member of the House in the indecent manner that a certain gentleman is reported to have done; but when they do it I will defend myself in some way.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. WILBER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 3034) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Macon, Georgia, and to transfer certain counties from the northern to the southern district in said State; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 145) authorizing certain printing for the land commission.

JAMES FLEMING.

Mr. DICK, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3791) for the relief of James Fleming, a wounded soldier of the war of 1812; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

PRINTING BILLS AND OTHER DOCUMENTS.

Mr. MORSE, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 179) to print additional copies of bills and other public documents; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution, which was read, provides that the Public Printer shall be directed to furnish to all applicants copies of bills, reports, and other public documents printed by order of Congress and distributed heretofore from the document-room of the Senate and House on said applicants paying the cost of such printing with 10 per cent. added.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF GENERAL ORD.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report of General E. O. C. Ord, under House resolution of June 25, 1879; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CHANNEL OF SUSQUEHANNA RIVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the improvement of the channel of the Susquehanna River at Havre de Grace; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SAINT PAUL, MINNEAPOLIS AND MANITOBA RAILROAD.

Mr. WASHBURN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3792) for the relief of settlers on the line of the Saint Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railroad in the State of Minnesota; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned till Monday next.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, January 26, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from Lieutenant-Colonel C. H. Tompkins, chief quartermaster Department of Dakota, recommending an additional appropriation of $100,000 for the construction of buildings for the use of the headquarters of the Department of Dakota on the Fort Snelling military reservation; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, recommending that the papers from his Department concerning the payment of the first installment of compensation to James B. Eads for maintenance of the channel at the South Pass, Mississippi River, sent to the Senate on the 21st instant, be attached to the papers touching the same matter which were transmitted to the Senate on the 16th instant; which was referred to the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in obedience to law, statements showing the contracts made by the several bureaus of the War Department on behalf of the United States during the year 1879; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Quartermaster-General and accompanying report of the agent of the Quartermaster's Department sent to Sandusky, Ohio, to ascertain what was necessary for the care and protection of the cemetery of the prison camp at Johnson's Island, near that place, as required by the act of Congress of June 20, 1878; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, stating, in answer to a resolution of the Senate of the 20th instant, that in his judgment the interests of the country and the naval service do require that the Pensacola navy-yard shall be put in a state of efficiency, and recommending an appropriation of $590,192 for the purpose; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, recommending the removal of the restrictions upon books ordered to be bound for the library of the Navy Department imposed by the act approved June 30, 1878; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, in further compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 20th instant, giving the estimated sum of money necessary to restore the Pensacola navy-yard to its former condition, and recommending the appropriation of an additional amount of $86,709 to rebuild the marine barracks which were destroyed during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 179) authorizing the Public Printer to print additional copies of bills and other public documents.

The message also announced that the House had passed the concurrent resolution of the Senate providing that whenever the Public Printer shall have received a sufficient number of orders for copies of the Narrative of the Polaris Expedition, accompanied by the cost price thereof, with 10 per cent. additional, to warrant, in his opinion, the expense of putting the plates to press, he shall cause an edition thereof to be published, &c.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3034) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Macon, Georgia, and to transfer certain counties from the northern to the southern district in said State.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 582) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Columbus, Ohio, and transferring certain counties from the northern to the southern district in said State, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. G. L. CONVERSE of Ohio, Mr. D. B. CULBERSON of Texas, and Mr. BENJAMIN BUTTERWORTH of Ohio, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution authorizing the Public Printer to print 2,500 copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. No. 3108) amending the charter of the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 3034) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Macon, Georgia, and to transfer certain counties from the northern to the southern district in said State; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 145) authorizing certain printing for the land commission.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I present a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York, against the bridging of the Detroit River. In accordance with what I believe is the custom of the Senate, I ask that the resolution be read.

The resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK, ASSEMBLY CHAMBER,
Albany, January 20, 1880.

Whereas there is a proposition pending before a committee of Congress to erect a swing-bridge across Detroit River; and

Whereas such a structure must of necessity seriously impede the navigation of the lakes, and materially interfere with the commerce of the same; and

Whereas the water-route from Chicago to New York confessedly fixes railroad rates of the country; and

Whereas it is of vital importance that the water-route be preserved free and unobstructed: Therefore,

Resolved, (if the senate concur,) That it is the sense of the Legislature of the State of New York that the erection of such proposed structure would impede the navigation of the lakes, be prejudicial to the commerce of the country, and is therefore inexpedient and unwise.

By order of the assembly.

EDWARD M. JOHNSON, Clerk.

IN SENATE, January 22, 1880.

Concurred in without amendment.

JOHN W. VROOMAN, Clerk.

Mr. CONKLING presented the memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, in favor of the passage of the bill (S. No. 939) to amend the law relative to the seizure and forfeiture of vessels for breach of the revenue laws; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CONKLING. I present also a similar memorial signed by George Howes & Co. and others, leading ship-owners and business men of the city of San Francisco, California. I move its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING presented a petition of Delphine P. Baker, of Washington, District of Columbia, praying that she be allowed the proceeds of sales by the Quartermaster's Department of buildings located at Point Lookout and appropriated as a national asylum for disabled soldiers; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the memorial of A. C. Parkhurst and others, and the memorial of M. B. Robbins and others, citizens of New York and soldiers in the late war, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the American Dairymen's Association of Syracuse, New York, calling attention to the prevalence of the cattle lung plague in this country through the importation of foreign cattle, and suggesting that measures be taken to prevent its extension; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. CONKLING. I present five petitions signed by citizens of the State of New York, who were soldiers in the late war, praying the passage of a bill for equalizing bounties. I move their reference to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I present also the petition of Mrs. Myra Clark Gaines, described as a citizen of the State of New York, praying the conveyance to her by the Government of certain real estate. A proposed bill accompanies this petition, and I ask that it go with the petition to the proper committee, which I take to be the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition and accompanying papers will be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. HAMLIN. I present the petition of Reed, Walt & Co. and others, citizens of Waldoborough, in the State of Maine, who represent that they suffered damage by the action of the so-called confederate cruisers, and they pray that such legislation may be adopted at this session in relation to the Geneva award fund as shall bring relief to them. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I have a like petition from C. E. Wood, Joseph Nickerson & Co., Silsbee & Pickman, and others, well-known merchants, business men, and ship-owners in Massachusetts, who represent that they have claims against the balance of the Geneva award fund, and beg that Congress will take immediate action, with a view to enacting a law during the present session for the distribution of the money. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KERNAN. I present a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of New York against the construction of a swing-bridge across the Detroit River. It is the same presented by my colleague. I move its reference to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KERNAN presented the petition of C. T. Shields and other citizens of New York, late soldiers in the Union Army, praying for the passage of a bill for the equalization of bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HARRIS presented the petition of D. K. Cartter, chief-justice, and the associate justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, praying that sufficient and suitable court-rooms be provided for the courts of the District; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PENDLETON presented the petition of Samuel C. Derby, president of Antioch College, Ohio, and other professors thereof, and 81 citizens of the State of Ohio, praying for the passage of the bill (S. No. 865) to provide for the investment of certain unclaimed pay and bounty moneys now in the Treasury of the United States, and to facilitate and encourage the education of the colored race in the several States and Territories, and that Wilberforce University, at Xenia, Ohio, may be included in the distribution of the said funds; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BECK presented the memorial of James S. Morrow, G. P. Stone, and others, citizens of Monroe County, Kentucky, soldiers in the late war, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, in favor of an appropriation for the improvement of the Allegheny River from Pittsburgh to Olean; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, in favor of the speedy passage of what is known as the Reagan interstate-commerce bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, presented a resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin, against the construction of a swing-bridge across the Detroit River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Brockway, of Newburyport, Massachusetts, surviving executor of the last will and testament of the late William Bartlett, praying compensation for losses sustained by the deceased by certain acts of the French government prior to the year 1801; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

NOTICES OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McDONALD. I desire to give notice that to-morrow at the close of the morning hour I shall move to postpone the pending and all prior orders for the purpose of asking the immediate consideration by the Senate of Senate bill No. 19, which has been favorably reported from the Committee on Public Lands with a written report.

Mr. HAMLIN. What is the bill?

Mr. McDONALD. It is a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain and certify the amount of land located with military warrants in the States described therein, and for other purposes.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has the report in that case been printed?

Mr. McDONALD. Yes, sir. I will change the notice to Wednesday, as I understand the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] desires to occupy the floor to-morrow.

Mr. FERRY. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Indiana to the fact that Wednesday has been informally set apart for the delivery of eulogies upon my late colleague, and I intended this morning, when we reached the call for resolutions, to formally ask that the day be set apart for that purpose.

Mr. McDONALD. I will name Thursday, and give the notice for that day. I certainly would not interfere with the purpose of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERRY. I now ask that Wednesday, immediately after the Journal is read, be set apart for the delivery of eulogies on the life and character of my late colleague, ZACHARIAH CHANDLER.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is enough to give notice that you will at that time proceed to make the announcement.

Mr. FERRY. I give notice, then, that when that time arrives I shall ask the Senate to consider resolutions which will be offered on that subject.

Mr. McDONALD. And the notice I gave will be entered for Thursday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The notice will be entered for Thursday.

LINCOLN MEMORIAL PAPERS.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. A joint resolution from the House has just been received which transmits to Springfield, Illinois, to be placed in the memorial hall of the Lincoln monument, certain mementoes and books relating to Mr. Lincoln. I ask for its consideration at the present time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will lay before the Senate a joint resolution received from the House of Representatives. It will be reported.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 178) authorizing certain books and mementoes in the possession of the Government to be placed in the memorial hall of the national Lincoln monument at Springfield, Illinois, was read the first time at length.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The joint resolution has just come over from the House, I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It came over this morning.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it ought to be referred. I am in favor of it, but perhaps it needs some change in phraseology.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. It goes to the Library Committee, I suppose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We shall have it immediately attended to. I think it is a thing that ought to be done, but the joint resolution ought to be referred in the ordinary way.

The joint resolution was read the second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Missouri, asking Congress to repeal the existing laws providing for the removal of causes from the courts of the several States into the courts of the United States, and to limit the jurisdiction of courts of the United States exclusively to cases arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States in respect of their subject-matter, to report to the Senate that we have had the memorial under consideration, and are of opinion that the legislation asked for ought not to be granted. I therefore move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1094) to incorporate the National Education Association, reported it without amendment.

Mr. GARLAND. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 527) to provide that all persons sentenced to imprisonment by the United States courts shall be confined in the prisons of the States where they were tried and convicted, have instructed me to report it adversely, with a written report. I ask that the bill be placed upon the Calendar, inasmuch as the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. VANCE,] who introduced it, is not in his seat this morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee, which will be printed.

Mr. SAUNDERS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. No. 1136) to provide for the sale of a portion of the reservation of the Omaha tribe of Indians; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. INGALLS. From the Committee on the District of Columbia I report back adversely the bill (S. No. 518) to incorporate the National Electric Light Company of the District of Columbia, and move its indefinite postponement, as the parties have a right to incorporate under the general laws of the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 360) repealing the charter of the National Capitol Insurance Company, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1894) authorizing the employment of an inspector of plumbing in and for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. McDONALD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the petition of Sallie Yerger, Maggie J. Miller, and others, praying that their claim for payment for property taken by the Government be referred to the Court of Claims, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. McDONALD. The Committee on the Judiciary have also had under consideration other petitions, and have directed me to make an adverse report, which I send to the desk to be read.

The report was read, and agreed to, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred the following petitions:

The petition of Miss Virginia Taylor, executrix of Joseph Taylor, deceased, praying that her claim against the Government for captured property be referred to the Court of Claims;

Petition of Alex. Donnon, administrator of David Dunlop, deceased, praying compensation for certain tobacco alleged to have been captured by the United States military forces during the late war;

Petition of David B. Tennant, praying compensation for certain manufactured tobacco alleged to have been captured by United States military forces during the late war; and report that in the opinion of this committee the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted.

Petition of Watson McGill & Co., praying compensation for captured manufactured tobacco;

Your committee report adversely to the petitioners, and ask that the consideration of the same be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. WHYTE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Absalom Kirby, passed assistant engineer, United States Navy, praying to be restored to his former rank and position on the active list of the Navy, reported a joint resolution (S. R. No. 68) for the relief of Passed Assistant Engineer Absalom Kirby, of the Navy; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. GORDON, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom were referred resolutions of the Merchants' Exchange of the City of Saint Louis, Missouri, in favor of commercial treaty between the United States and France, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; which was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 33) to ascertain the amount of the claim of Joseph R. Shannon, of Louisiana, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CARPENTER (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1121) in relation to jury trials in certain cases; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1122) for the relief of Lucy Thompson, administratrix of Linus Thompson, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McMILLAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1123) to amend section 1113 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relative to post-traders at the military posts of the Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1124) for the relief of the heirs of Major D. C. Smith; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HEREFORD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1125) to provide for building a market-house on square 446 in the city of Washington, District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WHYTE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1126) for the relief of Lewis Jones, of Baltimore; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HARRIS (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1127) for the relief of J. W. Burbridge & Co. and Robert H. Montgomery; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COKE (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1128) for the relief of widows and orphans of Osage Indians killed near Medicine Lodge, Kansas, out of a fund heretofore appropriated to reimburse said Indians for losses of property; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. KERNAN (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1129) for the relief of the American Grocer Association of the city of New York; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. ROLLINS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1130) for the relief of David Wingate, of Rechester, New Hampshire; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. ROLLINS. As the bill is very short, I desire to have it read at length and printed in the RECORD.

The bill was read the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That David Wingate, of Rochester, New Hampshire, an American seaman who was impressed from an American vessel in the harbor of Falmouth, England, on the —— day of ——, 1811, placed on board the British ship Gorgon, where he served until the 1st day of November, 1812, when, because he would not serve against his country in war, he was discharged to the list of prisoners and placed in the Dartmoor prison, where he remained until the close of the war and was then discharged without compensation by either his own or the British government, be paid, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $25 per month from the time of his impressment to the declaration of peace between the United States and Great Britain, and for six months thereafter, to enable him to reach his home.

Mr. BECK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1131) for the relief of W. H. Slack, of Kentucky; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1132) for the relief of J. L. Allard and William Crozier, of Kentucky; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. VOORHEES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1133) granting a pension to Michael Hayne; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GORDON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1134) to repay to the State of Georgia $27,175.50, money advanced by said State for the defense of her frontiers against the Indians from 1795 to 1818, and not heretofore repaid; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BUTLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1135) authorizing the Secretary of War to adjust and settle the account for arms between the State of South Carolina and the Government of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLATT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1137) for the relief of George T. Marshall; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WINDOM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1138) to regulate the recovery of costs in suits for the infringement of patents; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. COKE (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 69) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to pay taxes accrued, and hereafter to accrue, on lands belonging to the eastern band of North Carolina Cherokees from the fund belonging to said band remaining to its credit on the books of the Treasury Department; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. GARLAND, it was Ordered, That the papers in the claim of Winfred N. Swayne and Philip K. Howard be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. WITHERS, it was Ordered, That the papers in the claim of the Protestant Episcopal Theological Seminary, Alexandria, Virginia, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. SLATER, it was Ordered, That all papers relating to wreck of the Government transport bark Torrent and losses sustained by reason thereof be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion of Mr. ALLISON, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Durfee & Peck be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Ordered, That the papers in the case of E. H. Durfee & Co. be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

On motion of Mr. WALLACE, it was Ordered, That the papers of Bernard Reilly, jr., be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DISTRICT HEALTH ORDINANCES.

Mr. HARRIS. At the request of the health officer of the District of Columbia I offer a concurrent resolution.

The resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States of America, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the health ordinances for the District of Columbia, as revised, amended, and adopted by the late board of health of said District, November 19, 1875, together with the regulations governing vital statistics, sale of unwholesome food, inspection of marine products, inspection of streets, and prevention of the spread of infectious and contagious diseases, passed by said board, be, and the same are hereby, legalized.

PATRICK SULLIVAN.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take into consideration the bill (S. No. 426) for the relief of Patrick Sullivan.

The bill was read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This bill is favorably reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. I thought it was the understanding when this bill was reported that additional information should be obtained. Unless that information has been obtained, I shall certainly object to its consideration.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. What is the information desired?

Mr. COCKRELL. Information as to whether the State had paid this man or not. This claim is for recruiting expenses supposed to have been incurred in 1861 and 1862, and for which remuneration has been made to the respective States. Now the claimant comes here without any evidence to show that the State has not paid him, and we have no evidence before us that the State has not been paid.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. The evidence was given before the Committee on Military Affairs nearly two years ago, and the report was made by the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. RANDOLPH.] The claim was again referred to the committee at the last session and examined by myself. I believe the claimant is entitled to all that he asks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. I object to its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill goes over, as the morning hour has not yet expired.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 559.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 559) donating condemned cannon and cannon-balls or field-pieces to William L. Curry Post, No. 18, Grand Army of the Republic, for their place of burial.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

M. F. CLARK.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 76) for the relief of M. F. Clark.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to M. F. Clark $510, being the value of three horses and one mule purchased of him by Lieutenant E. D. Hillyer, acting assistant quartermaster, and Captain E. J. Barnes, assistant quartermaster, in 1864, and paid for to other parties, upon vouchers fraudulently obtained and receipts the signatures to which were forged.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN OHIO.

Mr. THURMAN. I ask that the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 582 be laid before the Senate, with a view to a conference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 582) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Columbus, Ohio, and transferring certain counties from the northern to the southern district in said State, and requesting a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. THURMAN. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was ordered to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Messrs. THURMAN, GARLAND, and CARPENTER were appointed.

GIBBES & CO.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senate to consider at this time the bill (S. No. 185) for the relief of Gibbes & Co., of Charleston, South Carolina.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Messrs. Gibbes & Co., of Charleston, South Carolina, $4,576.92, being a balance due them on account of money deposited by them with the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Is there a report accompanying the bill? This seems to me to be something unusual in the way of a bill, and I should like to hear the facts about it.

Mr. TELLER. There is a report which can be read. The bill comes from the Committee on Claims and is unanimously recommended by that committee.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I should like to hear an explanation from the Senator, if the report is not read.

Mr. TELLER. I will simply say that the report shows, and the evidence shows, that this money belonging to this firm, owing to a dispute between the firm and another, was retained for several years, and the Secretary of the Treasury says there is no reason why it should not be paid. The committee unanimously recommend its payment. If the Senator wants the report read, that will be the shortest way.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand the Senator to say that there is something from the Secretary of the Treasury. Perhaps the reading of that will explain the bill.

Mr. TELLER. The quickest way is to read the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. TELLER January 14:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 185) for the relief of Gibbes & Co., having carefully examined the facts, and finding the report adopted by the committee at the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress and second session of the Forty-fifth Congress fully sustained, adopt the same, as follows:

"The facts in relation to this claim, furnished, at the request of your committee, in a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, dated July 10, 1876, are as follows:

"Late in the year 1865 certain cottons in Augusta, Georgia, were seized or detained by Treasury agents as confederate or blockade cottons. They were claimed by Gibbes & Co., of Charleston, as being in part their property and in part the property of certain English firms, of whom they were the agents. Upon evidence produced by the claimants, the Secretary of the Treasury, on the 27th of February, 1866, directed that the cottons be restored to them upon their payment to the United States of all costs, charges, and expenses paid or incurred by Treasury agents in connection with the cottons restored.

"The amount so paid as charges was principally due to Savary & Co., who were engaged in putting in order Government cottons and in transporting and shipping the same. The amount of their bill for expenses, &c., on the Gibbes & Co. cotton, $44,217.48, was deposited by Gibbes & Co., and went into the hands of the United States Treasurer. Afterward it was ascertained by Gibbes & Co. that there had been delivered to them by mistake one hundred and sixty bales of cotton which did not belong to them, and which they accordingly returned. In the bill rendered by Savary & Co. there was charged the sum of $7,733.04 as expended by them on this lot of one hundred and sixty bales. This sum Gibbes & Co. claimed should be returned to them by the United States. To this demand Savary & Co. interposed a further bill of expenses, not included in their first bill, which they claimed they had incurred on the Gibbes & Co. cottons. This second bill amounted to $4,576.92. Gibbes & Co. allege that the charges made by Savary & Co. were generally excessive, but consented to receive at that time from the United States the difference between their bill of $7,733.04 and the bill of Savary & Co., $4,576.92, namely, $3,156.12. Afterward Savary & Co. applied to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment of their bill of $4,576.92. Upon a close examination of all their accounts, it was found that their charges which had been paid to them in connection with Government cottons and cottons seized, but released by the Secretary, were excessive to an amount greater than their claim of $4,576.92 against the United States. The payment of this claim was therefore refused.

"The balance (namely, $4,576.92) of the bill of $7,733.04 paid by Gibbes & Co., as expenses on cotton returned to the United States, has never been paid to them. Justice would seem to require the payment of this balance.

"In answer to inquiries made by your committee of the Secretary of the Treasury as to whether this claim, if properly presented, would not have been cognizable by the Department without the intervention of Congress, the Secretary, under date of July 13, 1876, replies that prior to the 30th day of March, 1868, the question to whom the sum of money now claimed by Gibbes & Co. was due, whether to them or to Savary & Co., had not been decided. On that day was passed the joint resolution of Congress requiring all moneys derived from captured and abandoned property to be covered into the Treasury. The money in question was included in that fund, and was accordingly covered into the Treasury. Since that time no appropriation has been made by Congress out of which the claim of Gibbes & Co. could properly have been paid."

A bill for the relief of Gibbes & Co. passed the Senate April 25, 1878, but failed to pass the House of Representatives.

Claimants are clearly entitled to the relief asked, and we therefore report back the bill and recommend its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MICHAEL GRANERY AND OTHERS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 695) for the relief of Michael Granery, Nicholas Wax, and Moliere Lange, reported favorably from the Committee on Claims in the Forty-fourth Congress and passed the Senate, also in the Forty-fifth Congress and passed the Senate. It was reported favorably in the House of Representatives in each case, but did not pass both Houses for want of time; and it is again reported favorably.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Michael Granery, Nicholas Wax, and Moliere Lange each the sum of $500, in refundment of so much money exacted from them as joint obligors on a bond taken by Colonel D. A. Pardee, provost-marshal of the district of Baton Rouge, Louisiana, in 1863, for the appearance of one B. F. Rhodes, the payment of which was improperly and illegally enforced by the marshal.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment, to add:

"In full payment and satisfaction therefor."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLEMENT TO REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. WALLACE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. No. 19) to provide for the publication and distribution of a supplement to the Revised Statutes, reported from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws with amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution comes up now, after the morning hour, as a matter of right.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives, which were as follows:

In line 8, after the word "offices," to insert:

"And index and plates and all right and title therein and thereto shall be in and fully belong to the Government for its exclusive use and benefit."

In line 12, before "copies," to strike out "six thousand one hundred and seven" and insert "six thousand three hundred and fifty-seven."

In line 17, after "1878," to insert:

"And joint resolution passed December 21, 1878."

In line 24, after "supplement," to strike out the words:

"There shall be paid to said editor such compensation, per copy, as shall be fixed by the Secretary of State, not exceeding fifty cents for each copy printed from the stereotype plates thereof, to be included in the sale price of copies kept for sale."

And in lieu thereof to insert:

"Including indexing and all clerical work necessary to fully complete said work, there shall be paid to said editor the sum of $3,500."

And to strike out lines 31, 32, and 33, in the following words:

"And that to carry into effect the foregoing provisions sufficient money is hereby appropriated from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

And in lieu thereof to insert:

"The publication herein authorized shall be taken to be prima facie evidence of the laws therein contained in all the courts of the United States and of the several States and Territories therein; but shall not preclude reference to, nor control, in case of any discrepancy, the effect of, any original act as passed by Congress since the 1st day of December, 1873: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to change or alter any existing law."

So as to make the joint resolution read:

"That the supplement to the Revised Statutes, embracing the statutes general and permanent in their nature passed after the Revised Statutes, with references connecting provisions on the same subject, explanatory notes, citations of judicial decisions, and a general index, prepared by William A. Richardson, be stereotyped at the Government Printing Office; and index and plates and all right and title therein and thereto shall be in and fully belong to the Government for its exclusive use and benefit.

"That 6,357 copies be printed, bound, and distributed as provided for the distribution of the Revised Statutes by the "Joint resolution providing for the distribution and sale of the new edition of the Revised Statutes of the United States," passed May 22, 1878, and joint resolution passed December 21, 1878, and such additional copies, on the order of the Secretary of State, as may be necessary from time to time, to be kept for sale in the same manner and on like terms as the Revised Statutes are required to be kept for sale, and to supply deficiencies and offices newly created. That for preparing and editing said supplement, including indexing and all clerical work necessary to fully complete said work, there shall be paid to said editor the sum of $3,500.

"The publication herein authorized shall be taken to be prima facie evidence of the laws therein contained in all the courts of the United States and of the several States and Territories therein; but shall not preclude reference to, nor control, in case of any discrepancy, the effect of, any original act as passed by Congress since the 1st day of December, 1873: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to change or alter any existing law."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To these amendments made by the House of Representatives to the joint resolution the Committee on the Revision of the Laws propose certain amendments, which will be reported in their order.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 9, it is proposed to insert "the" before the word "index," and after the word "plates" to insert "thereof;" so as to read:

And the index and plates thereof and all right and title, &c.

The amendment to the amendments was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 29, after the word "work," it is proposed to insert "including the legislation of the first and second sessions of the Forty-sixth Congress;" in line 32 to strike out "thirty-five hundred" and insert "five thousand," before the word "dollars," and after the word "dollars" to add:

And each Senator and Member of the present Congress who would not receive copies under said joint resolutions shall receive the same number of copies as other Senators or Members receive under the same.

So as to read:

That for preparing and editing said supplement, including indexing and all clerical work necessary to fully complete said work, including the legislation of the first and second sessions of the Forty-sixth Congress, there shall be paid to said editor the sum of $5,000; and each Senator and Member of the present Congress who would not receive copies under said joint resolutions shall receive the same number of copies as other Senators or Members receive under the same.

Mr. WALLACE. I move to strike out the words "of the first and second sessions," so as to read:

Including the legislation of the Forty-sixth Congress.

The amendment to the committee's amendment to the House amendments was agreed to.

The committee's amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. WALLACE. In the House amendment, in line 45, after the word "Congress," I move to strike out the words "since the 1st day of December, 1873," so as to make the clause a general one.

The amendment to the House amendments was agreed to.

The amendments of the House of Representatives, as amended, were concurred in.

UNITED STATES NOTES AS A LEGAL TENDER.

Mr. BAYARD. I shall ask the consent of the Senate to take up tomorrow at the close of the morning hour, Senate joint resolution No. 49, reported from the Committee on Finance adversely, to withdraw the legal-tender power from Treasury notes, so that on that occasion I may be permitted to submit some remarks in favor of the passage of the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To which the Chair hears no objection; and that will be the order.

NAVAL OBSERVATORY SITE.

Mr. WHYTE. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 891) to locate and purchase a new site for the United States Naval Observatory.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEALING FROM INDIANS.

Mr. CARPENTER. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 150, reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 150) to provide for punishing persons who steal horses, mules, and other property from the Indians.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment reported by the committee was in section 1, line 3, after the word "steal," to insert the word "or;" in the same line, after the word "embezzle," to strike out the words "purloin, or wrongfully take away;" in line 10, after the word "stolen," to strike out "or;" and in line 11, after the word "embezzled," to strike out "purloined, or wrongfully taken away;" so as to make the section read:

That any person not an Indian who shall steal or embezzle any horse, mule, cattle, goods, or chattels of any kind belonging to any Indian or Indians who are under the charge of an Indian agent or Indian superintendent, shall be guilty of felony, and on conviction thereof before any district or circuit court of the United States in the district wherein said offense may have been committed, or into which he shall carry or have in possession said property so stolen or embezzled, shall be punished therefor by imprisonment at hard labor in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than five years for each offense, and by a fine equal to double the value of the property so stolen, embezzled, purloined, or wrongfully taken away, at the discretion of the court before which he shall be convicted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 7, after the word "stolen," to insert "or;" in the same line, after the word "embezzled," to strike out "purloined, or wrongfully taken away;" in line 10, after the word "stolen," to insert "or;" in line 11, after the word "embezzled," to strike out "purloined, or wrongfully taken away;" and in line 19, after the word "felon," to strike out the words:

But if the parties have been convicted, then the judgment against him shall be conclusive evidence in the prosecution against such receiver that the property therein described as belonging to any Indian or Indians under the charge of an Indian agent or Indian superintendent has been stolen or embezzled, purloined, or wrongfully taken away.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That any person who shall receive, conceal, or aid in concealing, or have and retain in his possession with the intent to convert to his own use and gain, any horse, mule, cattle, moneys, goods, or chattels of any kind whatever, belonging to an Indian or Indians under the charge of an Indian agent or Indian superintendent, which has theretofore been stolen or embezzled from an Indian or Indians under the charge of an Indian agent or Indian superintendent, by any other person, knowing the same to have been so stolen or embezzled, such person shall, on conviction before the district or circuit court of the United States in the district wherein he may have such property, be punished by a fine equal to twice the valuation of said property so stolen and by imprisonment at hard labor in the penitentiary for not less than one year nor more than five years for each offense, at the discretion of the court before which he shall be convicted; and such receiver may be tried either before or after the conviction of the principal felon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 5, after the word "by," to strike out "legal process" and insert "due process of law;" in the same line, after the word "stolen," to insert the word "or," and in the same line, after the word "embezzled," to strike out the words "purloined, or wrongfully taken away;" so as to make the section read:

SECTION 3. That it shall be the duty of the proper civil officers of the United States to seize by due process of law any such horses, mules, cattle, moneys, goods, or any chattels whatever, which have hitherto been, or may hereafter be, stolen or embezzled from any Indian or Indians under the charge of an Indian agent or Indian superintendent, and return the same to their proper owners.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I did not hear the bill read very distinctly; but if I understood it, if any person shall steal any property of any value, without regard to the value of the property, he shall be liable to the punishment here prescribed. Is that correct? Should there not be a limitation on the value of the property?

Mr. CARPENTER. I do not hear the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I did not hear the bill read very distinctly; but as I understand it, it makes it a felony to steal property of an Indian without any regard to the value of it.

Mr. CARPENTER. Let the first section be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first section will be read as amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That any person not an Indian who shall steal or embezzle any horse, mule, cattle, goods, or chattels of any kind belonging to any Indian or Indians who are under the charge of an Indian agent or Indian superintendent shall be guilty of felony, and on conviction thereof before any district or circuit court of the United States in the district wherein said offense may have been committed, or into which he shall carry or have in possession said property so stolen or embezzled, shall be punished therefor by imprisonment at hard labor in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than five years for each offense and by a fine equal to double the value of the property so stolen, embezzled, purloined, or wrongfully taken away, at the discretion of the court before which he shall be convicted.

Mr. JOHNSTON. It seems to me that is rather too wide. It would make it a felony to steal any article, from a jack-knife to a pair of horses. It ought to be amended, I think, by inserting, "any article of such a value," fixing a limit. I suggest that to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CARPENTER. The object of the bill is to stop stealing from Indians, and therefore cut off the supply of Indian wars, and to make it an offense punished more severely than stealing by white men from white men. The very purpose of the bill explains why it is drawn in that form. The Senator, however, will accomplish his purpose by moving to amend the proposed punishment by saying the offender shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding so much, or by striking out the minimum, which would leave it in the discretion of the court for the larceny of property of small value to punish by imprisonment for a short term.

Mr. TELLER. Is there any provision for punishing Indians for stealing from white men?

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator apprehend that this would give the Indians a monopoly of stealing? [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I move to amend——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Perhaps the bill had better be read through and perfected. The next amendment of the committee will be read.

The next amendment reported from the Committee on the Judiciary was, to strike out section 4, in the following words:

SEC. 4. The military forces of the United States when required may be used to enforce this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I think there should be no minimum limitation in the matter of punishment. It may be advisable, according to the nature and value of the article stolen, to make the imprisonment ten days or thirty days, and, therefore, I move to strike out "less than one year," so that there shall be no minimum of punishment. I think it is wrong in all cases. That will leave it entirely in the discretion of the court.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, in section 1, line 13, to strike out "less than one year, nor more than," and insert "exceed;" so as to make the clause read:

Shall be punished therefor by imprisonment at hard labor in the penitentiary not exceeding five years.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Then I would insert after the word "penitentiary" the words "or jail," so as to leave it discretionary with the judge to have the prisoner confined either in a jail or in the penitentiary.

Mr. CARPENTER. It should be "imprisonment in the penitentiary at hard labor, or imprisonment in jail."

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question. Am I to understand that if a white man steals a few ears of corn to feed his horse from an Indian he shall go to the penitentiary?

Mr. CARPENTER. As it is proposed to be amended he might be sent to jail for stealing corn for his horse.

Mr. BECK. But he is obliged to go into jail or the penitentiary for five years?

Mr. CARPENTER. Oh, no; he is not obliged to go there for that length of time.

Mr. BECK. But he is to go for five years if the judge should choose to send him.

Mr. CARPENTER. Not more than five years, the time under that being entirely discretionary with the court.

Mr. BECK. I simply desired to know what the provision of the bill was. I am willing to punish a white man who steals from an Indian just as I would a white man who steals from a white man; but I do not think the law anywhere would send a man for five years to the penitentiary, if the judge saw fit to send him there so long, even if he did steal some trivial article, as I observed, enough corn to feed his horse. I merely desired information so that I could vote against the bill, as I surely will if that is the form of it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Allow me to state for the information of the Senator from Kentucky that sometimes this is done in a very large way. It is not the stealing of a single horse or of a single pony. Sometimes animals are driven off from the agencies, as I have reason to know by letters received, into parts of my State. They are taken from the reservations in large herds, twenty or thirty at a time. A man who would do that, it seems to me, ought to be punished severely, though I do not know that he ought to be imprisoned five years. This bill, as I understand, says that the punishment shall not exceed five years, and therefore I think it is good enough as it is.

I have letters in my possession from a United States officer, a marshal, who tells me that no less than one thousand ponies have been stolen from the Spotted Tail and Red Cloud agencies in the last year. Since the line has been run the reservation of Red Cloud comes within about two miles of the line of Nebraska, and men go over at night and drive off horses, ponies, &c., in herds and get them out, and then they are taken off into other States and sold. This is one case. There may be a dozen others in other States and Territories; but that belongs to my own State, and we want some kind of punishment for this class of people. If that here proposed is exorbitant or too severe, let it be amended, but let us have some bill of this kind. I believe there is a necessity for it, and I hope it will pass in some form.

Mr. GARLAND. I think the Senator from Kentucky is under a misapprehension as to the phraseology of the bill. Congress cannot very well specify the length of time the punishment shall extend in all cases. In other words, it cannot make a gradation of punishment for each particular offense; but it can fix a maximum, which it has done, leaving to the court the discretion of varying the imprisonment from five years to one day, as it pleases. The judge hearing the testimony, knowing all the facts according to the offense as presented to him, can fix the proper period of time. You cannot very well frame the law differently and make a gradation of the punishment for all the different offenses. It is vested in the discretion of the judge in this case just as in others.

Mr. MAXEY. The amendment as proposed authorizes the court in its discretion to confine the accused in jail for five years, as I understand it. I have never before heard of power being vested in any court to confine a man in jail for that length of time. In most States—I do not know how it is in the State of Wisconsin——

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. That was not the intention.

Mr. MAXEY. I think it likely it was not.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. That was not the intention; therefore the words "imprisonment in jail" had better be put after "confinement in the penitentiary."

Mr. MAXEY. I was about to add that in most States confinement in the penitentiary renders a man infamous in the law, while confinement in jail does not; and yet here is power to confine in jail for five years——

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I have just told the Senator that was not intended.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire of the Senator who has this bill in charge why there is any necessity for making the bill so broad as it is. It seems to me that it authorizes the conviction of a man in any of the States. The State laws now in force, I suppose, are ample in the States at least; I do not know how it may be in the Territories. Why we should make what is a petit larceny when an article is stolen from a white man a felony when it is stolen from an Indian on the same ground is more than I can understand.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I think this amendment will satisfy everybody: "punished therefor by imprisonment at hard labor in the penitentiary not exceeding five years, or imprisonment in jail, at the discretion of the court, not exceeding one year."

Mr. MAXEY. That will do.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS] as modified.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The same amendment ought to be made in the second section, line 15.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is first on this amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me that the bill is much broader than need be. If the purpose, as stated by the Senator who introduced it, [Mr. SAUNDERS,] is simply to protect the Indians from raids made on the reservation, the bill perhaps will do that; but it does much more, and it introduces a rule that seems to me to be objectionable. Under this bill if an Indian goes outside of his reservation and into a State or into a Territory with his property and it is stolen by a white man, the offense is made a felony. Now, in the first place he has no business there, and should be kept on his reservation; but, if he does go off, we say that if anybody purloins any of his property, however small, however inconsequential it may be, it may be the most trifling thing in the world, that person is guilty of a felony, while if a crime of the same character is permitted against a white man it is but petit larceny.

I am quite as much in favor of protecting the Indians in all their rights as any man in the Senate, but I am not quite prepared to say that one rule of punishment shall be meted out to a man when he steals from an Indian off his reservation, and another rule when he steals a similar article from a white man.

In the second place, there is no reason why the United States Government should attempt to punish an offense of that kind committed off the reservation. Every State and every Territory has made it an offense to steal from an Indian, certainly off the reservation. I called the attention of the committee, and inquired whether they had made it an offense for an Indian to steal from a white man. They said they had nothing to do with that; that was beyond their jurisdiction. Why? If they can go into the county of Arapaho, which contains the capital of the State of Colorado, and punish in the United States court a citizen of Colorado who has stolen a jack-knife from an Indian by making it a felony, they ought to be able, also, in the United States courts to punish the Indian who has stolen property from the citizens of Colorado. We have a great number of complaints in Colorado of this kind, and we are met by the authorities with the statement that for all those acts there is no redress whatever. I do not believe that the committee have very carefully considered this bill; I do not believe it is a good idea to introduce one rule of legislation in the same section of country, in the same Territory, for the Indian, and another for the white man.

Mr. BECK. The reason I asked the question I did was because I know, as the Senator who has just taken his seat has said, that all over the States or at least portions of the States of Minnesota, Nebraska, and Iowa, where I have been, the Indians not only go off the reservations, but they are allowed by the United States officials to go and hunt and fish. I have hunted with them myself and found them very good hunters. They go with their wagons, their ponies, their everything; and the idea does seem to me to be monstrous that when those Indians are going about the country just as other people are, if any white man should be charged with stealing, if you please a dozen ears of corn or a jack-knife, he shall go to the penitentiary, if the judge of the court sees fit to send him there, for five years, while if an Indian were to steal similar articles from a white man his offense would be petty larceny. The Indian hunts and fishes over great portions of the States along the Missouri River both in Nebraska and Iowa. He does the same in Minnesota.

Mr. TELLER. And in Colorado.

Mr. BECK. I have seen them hunting and have hunted with them, as I have said, and very good hunters they are. The white man is punished by the State law of course for stealing from the Indian; but now if an Indian goes about anywhere, (and they are nearly all the time off the reservation as well as on it,) and loses a dozen ears of corn or a jack-knife or anything that he leaves lying around that a white man picks up, that white man can be sent to the penitentiary for five years. For that reason I said this bill will be a bad law.

Mr. CARPENTER. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky if he thinks any Federal judge would send a man to the penitentiary for five years for stealing an ear of corn?

Mr. BECK. I do. The Federal judges may be better in that country than they are in some other sections, but I have heard of Federal judges who would be very glad to send men to the penitentiary for five years for anything. I could name them if it was worth while. I would not give any judge that power.

Mr. CARPENTER. I would introduce a bill to abolish that judge.

Mr. BECK. We tried that several times, but could not even do that.

Mr. INGALLS. I wish the Senator from Wisconsin would say upon what ground the committee make a distinction between the Indians and white men in this bill; why it is made a penal offense for any person not an Indian to steal while the Indian himself who steals is allowed to go with impunity; why the Indians are allowed a monopoly of stealing? And in that connection, if the Senator will be good enough to give me his views, I should like him to state whether he does not believe that under the language and by the operation of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution the Indian who is born within the limits of the United States, and subject to its jurisdiction is not ipso facto a citizen of the United States and subject to its laws? If that is true, if the Indian is a citizen of the United States, as I believe him to be, then in my opinion this proposed bill is unconstitutional and ought not to be passed. In any event, I am very clear that as a matter of expediency, as a matter of justice, as a matter to promote the interest of the white man and the Indian, it is exceedingly injudicious and ought not to be made into a law.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, I had no idea that so innocent a bill as this, merely to punish stealing from Indians, would open up in the Senate a discussion of the whole Indian policy, and especially of the construction of the fourteenth amendment. I therefore did not come prepared particularly to discuss that question. If the Senator from Kansas will take the trouble to examine he will find a report made by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate some four years ago, which I had the honor to draw myself, upon that very question, which was referred to the committee by the Senate, whether the fourteenth amendment had abolished the tribal relation of Indians and made them citizens of the United States. I know that the report was that it had not, and I think it was the unanimous opinion of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not agree with the conclusion of the report.

Mr. CARPENTER. The Senator was not asking me what the law was, but what my opinion was. [Laughter.] I was stating my opinion only. I do not propose to estop the Senator from Kansas from entertaining a different opinion, but simply to state my own. It would be a pretty broad consequence to follow the fourteenth amendment if the construction which the Senator from Kansas puts upon it is the sound one; every treaty between us and every tribe of Indians would fall to the ground. The United States cannot entertain treaty relations with our own citizens. There is no clause in the Constitution that authorizes the President and Senate to make treaties with American citizens. They may make treaties with foreign nations and with Indian tribes, and it is because the Indian tribes are regarded as quasi nations that the treaties have been made and are upheld. If that tribal relation be abolished by the fourteenth amendment, if the Indians be all made citizens of the United States in the sense in which I understand the Senator to express his opinion they are, then certainly every treaty existing when the fourteenth amendment was passed fell to the ground.

Mr. INGALLS. If they did not fall, I think they ought to have fallen.

Mr. CARPENTER. The Senator, I think, is mingling what he desires to have law with what is law. He may be sound on the one subject and very unsound on the other. I think it is not the law that the fourteenth amendment has made all the Indians citizens of the United States. In the broad, fraternal, affectionate feeling of Congress and the Government for the last ten years we have extended brotherhood and citizenship pretty broadly, but I do not think it takes in the Utes. I do not think the Senator from Kansas, in the highest flights of his ambition or benevolence, can hold his hand out to them and call them "my fellow-citizens." They are Indians, and have tribal relations and treaty rights; and they are not, as I understand it, citizens of the United States under the fourteenth amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. Even supposing they are not, why should they not be punished if they commit crime?

Mr. CARPENTER. There are two or three things to be said in that connection, and one of them I think is quite sufficient, that the Indian nation has jurisdiction to punish stealing among themselves. Under their treaty rights from the United States they have jurisdiction between Indian and Indian, but they have not jurisdiction over a white man. If one Indian steals from another on the reservation, one member of a tribe from another, the Indian tribe will punish him according to their own laws and regulations. They cannot punish a white man. Now, it is proposed by this bill that Congress shall provide punishment against the white man that the Indians cannot provide, and for the reason that they cannot.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator if he knows of any State or Territory where there is not a law that punishes a white man for stealing from Indians? If he does, I should like to ask him where it is.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Let me ask the Senator from Colorado——

Mr. TELLER. I want the Senator who has charge of the bill and who reported it to say whether that is so or not. Is there any State that has failed to provide punishment for stealing by white men from Indians?

Mr. CARPENTER. I do not know.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I ask whether that law would apply to reservations where white men are prohibited from going, and where the Indians have a right to make their own laws to regulate their own affairs, but have no right to interfere with white people? Would such State laws extend to Indian reservations? Each State can pass laws regulating affairs in its own limits; but an Indian reservation is in another territory, not in the State at all.

Mr. TELLER. I will answer that question if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I shall be through in a moment; I want to put the whole question before the Senator.

As I understand, the States cannot interfere with the Indians on their reservations. The Indians have no right to go off the reservations to follow their horses or their mules and cattle into our State. Now, the question is, whether, when our people or any other people go into the reservations of the Indians and take property from them and out of the reservations into the State, the State law can cover that case and thus extend outside of its own limits.

Mr. TELLER. Whether that is a fact or not is a mooted question, and I do not propose to pass on it so far as the reservations are concerned. But this bill goes further. It is not a bill to punish white men for stealing on the Indian reservations—it is to punish them for stealing from Indians anywhere. It is to adopt a new rule; that is, that it is a crime to steal from one man when it is not a crime of the same grade to steal from another. If, as I said before, the most trifling offense is committed in the way of larceny, it is made a felony under this act, provided the owner of the property is an Indian; but if he is a white man, then it remains petit larceny.

There is not so much necessity for this proposed law as the Senator from Nebraska would lead you to suppose. The moment the persons who commit this offense get off the reservation, they become amenable to State law by an elementary principle of criminal law. The moment they bring the property into Nebraska and have it in their possession they have stolen it in Nebraska by a law as old as any law that we have got, and are amenable to Nebraska law. They steal it in Dakota if they bring it there, and they can be punished in Dakota. They steal it in Nebraska when they have it in their possession there, and can be punished in Nebraska.

Now, Mr. President, I have no objection to anything that will protect the Indians. I am anxious to protect them from bad white men and from bad Indians; but I do insist that it is a remarkable condition of things when we come here in the Senate of the United States and declare that a white man committing a theft from an Indian in the city of Denver, the capital of my State, shall be punished in a different manner and in a different court from what he would be if he had stolen that same property from a white man. It is an invasion of the rights of the people of that part of the State to settle their own affairs of this character. The Government of the United States has no right to come there and declare that the offense is of a different character and of a different nature because the owner of the property happens to be an Indian. It might with as much propriety say that if I steal from a Norwegian or a German or any other foreigner who has not taken out his naturalization papers, it should be a special offense because of the character of the person whose property was taken.

I object to it upon principle, and I do not propose to be put down by the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin that this is an innocent bill, and that I am opposed to punishing men who steal!

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, I say for one to the Senator from Colorado that, though he cannot be defeated by an argument, he may be appeased by an amendment. He construes this bill to mean that if anybody should, in Massachusetts for instance, steal from an Indian, he would thereby violate this act. That is not our understanding of it; but I propose to offer this amendment in the third line of the first section, so as to read:

Any person not an Indian who shall, on any Indian reservation, steal from, &c.

Mr. TELLER. I will not object to that amendment; but there is the whole vice of the bill which, as I said to the Senator, the committee could not have very well considered or they never would have reported it.

Mr. CARPENTER. The Senator seems to be after the Judiciary Committee more than he is after the bill.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, debate on the question which Senators seem disposed to discuss would be more pertinent to another bill before the Senate. The Senator from Kansas asks whether Indians are not now citizens of the United States. The main objection made to the bill for the organization of the Indian Territory is that clause which provides for citizenship to the Indians comprising the five civilized nations; and the distinct and emphatic claim is now set up and has been set up always by members of those tribes that they are not citizens of the United States, and they strenuously oppose the organization of a United States district court for that Territory upon the claim that punishment for crime there is exclusively with the Indian tribunals, and that the Government of the United States has no right to administer any punishment upon their members. The United States court organized and in session at Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas, has jurisdiction over suits to which a citizen of the United States is a party. That court has no jurisdiction in regard to the members of the Indian tribes. The claim, I repeat, is distinctly made, and the issue will come before this Congress whether those Indians shall remain in the center of the jurisdiction of the United States Government and disclaim all allegiance as citizens to that Government.

Mr. President, I am opposed to this bill because it is based upon that namby-pamby sentimentality which draws a distinction between Indians and other persons subject to the jurisdiction of this Government.

The Senator from Nebraska says that the Indians cannot leave their reservations. Sir, the truth is that the young men, the dog warriors of all these tribes, as they are termed, as soon as they are fed by the United States and armed by traders, stay upon their reservations not one single minute longer than they can mount their horses and join some Indian chief then upon the war-path. The vice of the Indian system of the United States has been and is that there is one law for the Indian and another for the white man and other persons subject to the jurisdiction of the Government. Let there be one law for the white and black and red. Let the Indians of the country know that they are subject to the same authority, the same jurisdiction, the same laws that the white men of the country are subjected to. But so long as this fiction remains in the laws of the country, there is certain to be the existence of the same evils that we have had in the past few years.

To-day, sir, what are the facts in regard to the Indian Territory and the Indians upon the plains? I undertake to say—and I can establish the fact by testimony so unimpeachable that there shall be no question in regard to it—that the Indians upon the plains are mounted now, not upon their ponies, which can be had by the hundred and by the thousand in the mountain gorges, but they are mounted on horses which are a mixture of the California and American breeds, stolen from the white people of this country in order that they may ride them upon the war-path. These are the facts. Yet here now, in the Congress of the United States, is presented a bill which, as the Senator from Kansas properly remarks, gives a monopoly of stealing to the Indians, and if they understand anything they understand that identical idea. If there is anything in which the Indian is an expert and for which he is entitled to a patent almost by nativity, it is that very identical thing of picking up anything that lies around loose that does not belong to him and carrying it off, in the language of the common law, and in Indian parlance taking it to his own lodge and hiding it so effectually that the owner can never discover it.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. CARPENTER. Does he think Congress can punish one Indian for stealing from another on an Indian reservation?

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I do not see that that affects the issue before the Senate in this bill. I will say to the Senator, that in a very few days a bill will be introduced from the Committee on Territories which proposes to punish Indians in the Indian Territory for stealing from each other. But whether that be so or not, the principle of the bill before us is simply to the effect that if a white man steals from an Indian an extraordinary and unusual punishment shall be inflicted on him, but if an Indian steals from a white man he is to be subjected to the Indian tribunals, if it is done inside of his own reservation, or, if elsewhere, the ordinary punishment for petit larceny is to be inflicted on him.

Sir, the whole principle of this bill is wrong, and I repeat that until there is one law for the white man, one law for the negro, one law for the red man in this country, the vices which have sprung up under the Indian system will continue to exist. I protest against any legislation which says to the people of the United States or the world that the red men of this country are to be considered the especial wards of the nation and protected in their crimes, while the white man is to be subjected to the ordinary jurisdiction.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, it seems remarkable that Senators will not see the distinction between passing a law to punish a person who commits a crime where that person is subject to our jurisdiction, and passing a law to punish a person for committing a crime who is not subject to our jurisdiction.

Mr. SLATER. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Would not the stealing of horses or cattle or property of any description outside of any Indian reservation and within a State organization be punishable under this bill?

Mr. CARPENTER. I do not think it would, but I have already offered an amendment to take away all apprehension on that subject.

Mr. SLATER. But let me continue my question. Then, in that case, would there not be a conflict of jurisdiction between State authority and Federal authority, in the attempt of the Federal authority to punish a crime committed on any Indian reservation within a State, as the crime of larceny?

Mr. CARPENTER. Undoubtedly there would; but in my opinion this bill was never subject to any such objection. I do not think it is the fair construction of the bill as reported. But there is no difference of opinion as to what the bill should mean; and so as to make it certain I have moved an amendment on the third line, first page, of this bill; and, amended as I move, the bill will read thus:

That any person not an Indian who shall, on any Indian reservation, steal or embezzle the property of an Indian, &c.

Now, says the Senator from Missouri, why give a monopoly of stealing to the Indians; why let an Indian steal from another Indian and not punish him, while you punish a white man for stealing from an Indian. The difference is very manifest. In the first place, the white man who goes on a reservation is criminal for going there. If he adds to that crime that of larceny from an Indian, that is an additional crime, whereas the Indian who steals from an Indian is to suffer the punishment which the Indian nation metes out to him.

The Senator from Missouri says that he wants to see one law for all men. Very well, that good time may come; it will not come for several years, though, I take it. It will not come until the whole treaty system with the Indians is abolished, and until by the strong hand we shall put them down, either repudiate or recede or secede from our treaties with them, and then because we have got the force to compel them to submit, subjugate them, enslave them, or compel them to submit to such terms as we may dictate.

Now, I do not propose to enter into any sentimental discussion here about the rights of the Indians. They have had, in my opinion, a pretty tough road to travel in this country ever since the Puritan landed on Plymouth Rock. If I was disposed to yield to any sympathy, I should say that I sympathized pretty strongly with the Indians in these matters. I believe half our Indian wars have been provoked by white men. We set off a reservation to a tribe of Indians, and this great Government enters into a solemn treaty guaranteeing that they shall have the possession of that land undisturbed and free from intrusion by white men. As soon as the treaty is signed some mines are discovered on an Indian reservation, and away go the white men, in violation of treaty and law and everything else, and take possession of as much as they please of the Indian territory, introduce their ideas of cultivating land and modern improvements, &c., until the Indian cannot stand it any longer and fights, and then we put him down.

It is a little significant that from those States which surround these Indians, and where great profits may be made out of Indian wars, there is such a violent opposition to a bill which simply says that a white man who violates the law by going on an Indian reservation and adds to that the crime of larceny shall be punished. If the Senate really desire not to punish such an offense, they will kill this bill. If they desire to punish it, I see no objection to the bill, and I have heard no objection to the bill which is not completely obviated by the amendment I have offered.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Wisconsin if he does not understand that under the present intercourse laws white persons may be punished for going on Indian reservations and stealing the property of Indians there. I am under the impression that is the state of the law at the present time.

I myself, from my knowledge of the object sought to be accomplished by this bill, shall vote against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin. This bill is aimed particularly at an evil that exists on the northwestern border of my State. The Sioux Indians, who have their reservation on the north and west of our State, are in the habit of grazing their mules and ponies and cattle on the south side of the Niobrara River. There is no white settlement there, there are no white people residing there; nevertheless there is a set of white outlaws upon the border who, when these animals are found grazing on the south side of the river, make raids upon them, and that induces raids by the Indians upon the property of the white people in the western part of the State who are themselves engaged in grazing. Indeed this grazing interest in the western part of my State is one of the most important in this whole country. Tens of thousands of cattle are there yearly fattened for the great markets of this and European countries, and it is the protection of this great interest which we are aiming at by giving protection to Indians so that they shall have no excuse for retaliation upon the law-abiding and unoffending citizens whose property is scattered wide over that vast range.

It must be remembered that the Indians are no respecters of persons; if they are stolen from they steal in return the nearest property they can find belonging to white people, and the object of this bill is more particularly to secure the protection for white people and of the property of white people through this protection of the Indian himself; and I should say that if the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin should prevail, the object sought to be accomplished would fail. Moreover, I see that the committee has reported in favor of striking out section 4, which authorizes the use of the military force of the United States when required to enforce this act.

Mr. CARPENTER. That has been stricken out already.

Mr. PADDOCK. I was not in when the bill was first considered, but I shall feel disposed to vote against the bill if that section is stricken out, because it is an utter impossibility in that wild, unorganized country to serve process or to enforce process, or to visit punishment upon the outlaws who in large numbers combine and conspire to steal property from the Indians. I should feel more like advocating the retention of that section than almost any other section of the bill. The bill itself would be an absurdity so far as the protection of that frontier is concerned without that provision or some other that would authorize the use of the Army as a posse comitatus.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. PADDOCK. Certainly.

Mr. CARPENTER. I should like to ask him if the law does not already provide for using the whole force of this nation to enforce its civil process, except on election day?

Mr. PADDOCK. No, sir; there is a distinct and emphatic provision, passed during the Forty-fifth Congress, which prohibits the use of the Army as a posse comitatus for any civil purpose whatever; and I sought at the last session most earnestly to secure the repeal of that clause, which is to be found in the Army appropriation bill of 1878.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. TELLER. I do not propose to be led off from this bill by anything the Senator from Wisconsin says or any allusion that he makes, covert or otherwise, to the people of the frontier. When the time does come and when it is a proper time to do it I propose to be heard on the Indian question. I now have this bill and I do not propose to discuss anything else, but I propose to discuss this bill, because I think it is vicious in its principle, more vicious in principle perhaps than in its application, if that can be. It comes from a very respectable committee, a committee of great weight and great authority, and we have been in the habit, as a general thing, of receiving whatever came from the Judiciary Committee without much investigation.

Now, the Senator says it never was contemplated to punish by this bill except for stealing on the reservations, and yet every line of the bill in the first and second sections is full of contradiction of that statement, and I say that no lawyer of any experience or any character can read the bill and assert that it was confined to the reservations. If the Judiciary Committee say so I will guarantee that the lawyers of the Senate who are not on the Judiciary Committee, if they will take the bill and look at it a moment, will see that the statement cannot be supported.

He says that he has removed all the vice of the bill by providing that it shall apply to "any person, not an Indian, who shall steal on any Indian reservation." That may remove the objection in the first section; but take the second——

Mr. CARPENTER. I suppose the sections will be made to correspond.

Mr. TELLER. You cannot amend the second section unless you strike it out. The whole second section is based on the theory, and it is for the purpose, and the avowed purpose if the language means anything, to punish a man who shall take property off the reservation, and it is made specially the duty of United States courts to punish cases of that kind:

That any person who shall receive, conceal, or aid in concealing, or have and retain in his possession with the intent to convert to his own use and gain, &c.

Then it goes on clear through the section; and further it says in the third section:

That it shall be the duty of the proper civil officers of the United States to seize by due process of law any such horses, mules, cattle, moneys, goods, &c.

There is no objection, perhaps, to that part of it. If you want to authorize the officers of the Government to seize the property, that is well enough; but the second section is explicit, and it could not have been drawn more carefully for the purpose of declaring that this is not confined to what occurs on a reservation. The very purpose was to say that if an Indian was found in Massachusetts and somebody stole his buckskin, that should be a felony. I deny that the United States Government has any jurisdiction over such a case.

Mr. CARPENTER. Nobody suggested it. It is not likely that case would go very far.

Mr. TELLER. Then amend the bill so that it will be consistent.

Mr. CARPENTER. I have already moved to amend.

Mr. MAXEY. A bill of so much importance as this, it occurs to me should be very carefully considered. The amendment which was offered by the Senator from Wisconsin in the fifth line of the bill——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Texas permit the Chair to interrupt him? The pending amendment which should be first disposed of, as the Chair understands, is the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. MAXEY. That would make no difference to the line of argument I propose to pursue.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair only proposed to state the question.

Mr. MAXEY. The bill, as originally drawn, clearly and unquestionably, in my judgment, does confer on the United States district court the power to try and determine offenses committed within the limits and jurisdiction of the States. That was my construction of the original bill. Now, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin to confine this to crimes committed within the limits of Indian reservations removes that trouble from the first section; but, as was said, and well said, by the Senator from Colorado, the same vice runs all through the second section. It is possible that may be amendable, but it must be amended to conform to the first section to make the bill worth anything.

Mr. PADDOCK. May I ask the Senator from Texas a question?

Mr. MAXEY. I would rather finish the point I was trying to make.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am very anxious to have the Senator answer a question. I should like to inquire of him if he does not think it practicable and proper that an Indian, wherever he may be, shall be considered so much a citizen under the Constitution and the laws that his property shall be protected like the property of any other person, although you may not go further with him in respect of the matter of citizenship?

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I have great respect for human liberty and for human rights, and I am trying, as far as I know how to do it, to aid in that, and I am unwilling to confer on any court the power to try a man and deprive him of liberty without knowing precisely what I am doing. I respect the rights of an Indian, but certainly not higher than the rights of a white man. The Indian is not a citizen of the United States, in my judgment. The fourteenth amendment does not make him so. He is not counted in the apportionment of representation nor of taxes. He is not taxed for any purpose, and clearly the original Constitution designed article 1, section 2, to be the mark of citizenship, and it is not changed by the fourteenth amendment. That, however, is outside the main discussion. I do not care to go into that. I can understand perfectly why the Judiciary Committee should extend this bill only to white men committing offenses against Indians, because offenses committed by Indians against Indians are not within the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. Hence that was properly left out. But by the second section, if a piece of property is stolen, it matters not who stole that property, and it is retained by a man living in a State, who was never within the limits of an Indian reservation in his life, if he knowingly gets the stolen property and conceals it, knowing it to have been stolen, then under this bill the power is given to the Federal courts to try that man who was never inside an Indian reservation in his life, but living exclusively within the jurisdiction of the State courts.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question at that point?

Mr. MAXEY. Certainly.

Mr. CARPENTER. If a white man comes upon an Indian reservation and steals property and takes it over into a State——

Mr. MAXEY. It is a continuing offense.

Mr. CARPENTER. A continuous stealing! The second section, amended as it is proposed to amend it, will read in this way: "that any man," in the State of Wisconsin or any other State, who shall knowingly receive property which he knows has been stolen on an Indian reservation by a white man shall be punishable so and so.

Mr. MAXEY. Undoubtedly if a man goes inside of an Indian reservation and steals property and carries it out of there, the offense of theft is complete within the reservation, and, if possession is continued, he may by the laws of some of the States at least be prosecuted for fraudulently bringing stolen property within the limits of the State, and therefore the territorial jurisdiction attaches to the Federal courts for stealing within the reservation, and he may be prosecuted, where State laws provide, in the State courts for feloniously bringing stolen property into the State. It matters not where he carries that property, he is liable to prosecution. The case suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin was not the case I put. I say that the property may have been stolen within a reservation, and carried beyond that reservation by the thief, sold to a third man who never was in that reservation in his life, and that third man who conceals the stolen property, knowing it to be stolen, is under this bill liable to trial and punishment in a Federal court, which is against all my knowledge of the rights of the States and the Federal Government.

But I would call attention to another point, because the Judiciary Committee, it seems to me, should weigh, above all other committees, technical words. This bill says that "any person not an Indian who shall steal or embezzle any horse, mule, cattle," &c. I do not know how a man could embezzle a horse or a mule unless held in trust. That is something new, I think; and knowing so well as I do what a very able lawyer the Senator is who made this report, I assume that that passed without his noticing it. It does include goods, &c., which are, when held in trust, the subject-matter of embezzlement.

Mr. CARPENTER. May not a horse be embezzled?

Mr. MAXEY. I do not know how you would go about that under the phraseology of this bill.

Mr. CARPENTER. Suppose I should intrust to my friend from Texas my horse to take to Philadelphia and sell it, and on the way there he should violate his trust and sell that horse and dispose of it, would not that be embezzlement of that horse?

Mr. MAXEY. I would say that I think the Senator from Wisconsin, in all his reading of law, never heard the word "embezzlement" as applied to a horse or a mule in this bill. He may get it up for this occasion, but for this only. The words "steal" and "embezzle" seem to be used in the bill to mean the same thing.

Mr. CARPENTER. If that be so, then the word "embezzlement" would not apply to the horse if he cannot be embezzled.

Mr. MAXEY. Therefore the bill is inartistically drawn, as it appears to me, and inartistic language should never emanate from the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. CARPENTER. On that theory the word "embezzle" would apply to what could be embezzled, and the word "steal" to what could be stolen. I do not assent to that construction, however.

Mr. MAXEY. I have always thought there should be as little room left for courts to apply judicial construction as possible under the language which we speak. In other words, the Legislature should make its meaning plain and distinct and leave the courts, if possible, nothing to do but say of it ita lex scripta est. Now, if any living man can tell by the bill itself what it means to apply the word "embezzle" and what the word "steal" to, is a little more than I can tell.

The Senator was making some criticisms, something in this way, namely: that it was a little singular that a bill like this should meet with such opposition from the States which surround these reservations, intimating thereby that it was the desire of those living in those States, I suppose, to appropriate this Indian property. Now, I say to that Senator that we have a bill pending in the House, and which I hope and trust in the wisdom of this body will be enacted into a law, that the Indians shall not be permitted to go beyond their reservations into the limits of the States. I know that as far as my State is concerned the reservation Indians have gone there and do go there from the reservations and steal by wholesale and carry the property back inside of the reservations, and up to the present time we have not been able to recover that property. So far as the people of Texas are concerned we do not want to go among them; neither do we want them to come among us. We are willing to have them remain on their reservations, and if a white man steals property within a reservation let that man be punished, but do not pass a bill which, as claimed by the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. PADDOCK,] the colleague of the Senator who introduced it, [Mr. SAUNDERS,] was designed and intended to strike at people without the reservations who might steal property from an Indian who happened to live inside the reservations, although the property was stolen outside, and thus to confer on the Federal courts, in direct violation of the rights of the State, a jurisdiction which they have not got under the Constitution, and which belongs exclusively to the States.

Mr. PADDOCK. Will the Senator allow me to remind him of a fact? A Federal judge in our State recently allowed the writ of habeas corpus to be exercised in favor of an Indian who had been wrongfully taken into possession of the military because he was off his reservation and in the limits of the State, where it was claimed that he ought not to be and had not a right to be, thereby recognizing, to that extent, at least, his right of transit from one place to another beyond question.

Mr. MAXEY. I will only say that that Federal judge certainly never examined the laws of Congress to any alarming extent.

Mr. PADDOCK. That Federal judge is about as good a lawyer as there is here.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that there was a qualification in that decision which he has not stated.

Mr. MAXEY. I shall not change my opinion by reason of that decision, because I know that Congress did pass an act at the instance of the Texas delegation three or four years ago in terms prohibiting certain reservation Indians named in the act from going into Texas, and I hope this Congress will pass a bill absolutely prohibiting the Indians from leaving their reservations and going into the States. Congress does exercise that power and rightfully exercises that power. If Indians are found beyond the limits of their reservations they should be punished if they go without authority, and if "permits" are granted by the agents they should be removed from office. This judge referred to by the Senator from Nebraska may have made the decision he refers to, but I do not think many lawyers will say it is good law. But the point I desire to make is that I think it has been clearly shown that this bill should be recommitted, and I think the Senator from Wisconsin, after examination, can bring a bill in that will be far better in all respects than the bill now pending for the consideration of the Senate. The subject is too important to be acted on hurriedly.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me, I will call his attention to another singular incongruity, as it appears to me, about this bill. It has already been amended in the first section by inserting after the word "shall" the words "upon any Indian reservation," as I understand.

Mr. CARPENTER. That amendment has been offered.

Mr. INGALLS. That amendent is offered and pending, and is agreed to by the Senator from Wisconsin. The first section of the bill provides a penalty for the offense of larceny committed by any person not an Indian upon an Indian reservation. The second section of the bill affixes a penalty to the crime of receiving stolen property. Now, I want the Senator to tell me why he makes the crime of larceny in the first section punishable only when committed by white people, and in the second section makes the language general and provides that Indians as well as white people shall be punished for receiving stolen property. The language of the second section is general, that "any person who shall receive, conceal, or aid in concealing, any horse, mule," &c., "which has been stolen or embezzled from an Indian or Indians under the charge of an Indian agent or Indian superintendent by any other person," not "any other person not an Indian," as the language is in the first section of the bill, but "by any person"——

Mr. MAXEY. No difference where.

Mr. INGALLS. No matter where. The distinction is not preserved in the second section which is made in the first—that is to say, an Indian may steal with impunity, but if he becomes a receiver of the identical property that has been stolen, he then becomes subject to the operations of the law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 13, it is proposed to strike out "not less than one year nor more than five years," and insert "not exceeding," so as to read:

At hard labor in the penitentiary not exceeding five years for each offense.

And after the word "offense," in line 14, insert "or imprisonment in jail not more than one year, at the discretion of the court;" so as to make the clause read:

Shall be punishable by hard labor in the penitentiary not exceeding five years for each offense, or with imprisonment in jail not more than one year, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. TELLER. I move that this bill be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MAXEY. I desire to call the attention of the Judiciary Committee, and of the Senator from Wisconsin especially, to the fact that if he designs the Indian Territory to be embraced, it is not embraced in this bill as reported now.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 22d instant approved and signed the act (S. No. 765) to amend sections 2324 and 2325 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning mineral lands; and on the 23d the act (S. No. 594) for the relief of Thomas Langton, of Dundee, Michigan.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolutions from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. No. 1128) for the relief of James M. Ruby;

A bill (H. R. No. 1800) for the relief of Joseph B. Campbell, captain in the Fourth Artillery, United States Army;

Resolved, That 1,000 additional copies of the report of Professor Soley to the Secretary of the Navy on the foreign systems of naval education, and of the report of Lieutenant Commander Chadwick on the training of seamen, be printed for the use of the Navy Department.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours and fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and fifty-three minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 26, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of Friday last was read and approved.

CLERKS TO COMMITTEE ON INVALID PENSIONS.

Mr. LEWIS. It appears from the RECORD that it was stated on Friday that the report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions asking authority to employ three additional clerks was the unanimous report of the committee. I desire to state I never had any knowledge of the resolution before it came to the House. I was necessarily absent when it was before the House or I would then have made this statement. I was willing to grant one additional clerk, but certainly would have opposed the appointment of three.

NEW MEMBER SWORN.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I rise to a question of privilege. I present the credentials of Mr. John F. Philips, member-elect from the seventh congressional district of Missouri, elected to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. Alfred M. Lay, and I ask that he be sworn in.

The SPEAKER. The swearing in of a member is a question of the highest privilege. The certificate will be read.

The certificate was read, as follows:

MISSOURI, ss:

To all who shall see these presents:

Be it known that I, Michael K. McGrath, secretary of state of the State of Missouri, hereby certify that at an election held in the seventh congressional district of the State of Missouri, on Saturday, the 10th day of January, A. D. 1880, to fill the vacancy in the office of Representative in Congress from said district in the Forty-sixth Congress of the United States, caused by the death of the Hon. Alfred M. Lay, John F. Philips having received 11,817 votes for the office of member of Congress from said seventh congressional district, the same being a higher and greater number of votes than were cast for any other person for said office at said election, was duly elected to represent said seventh congressional district in the Forty-sixth Congress of the United States to fill the vacancy aforesaid.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my name and affixed the great seal of the State of Missouri. Done at the city of Jefferson this 17th day of January, A. D. 1880, of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and fourth, and of the State of Missouri the sixtieth.

[SEAL.] MICHAEL K. McGRATH,
Secretary of State.

Mr. GARFIELD. The paper which has been read does not seem to be a certificate from the governor. As I heard it read it is only a certificate of the secretary of state. It seems to me rather unusual.

The SPEAKER. The Chair presumes that the certificate is in conformity to the law of the State.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would like some gentleman from Missouri to inform me whether the law of Missouri does not require the certificate of the governor.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I believe it only requires the certificate as presented from the secretary of state.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not wish to delay the swearing-in of the member; but it seems to me very remarkable, and if there be any gentleman here from that State who knows certainly what is the law of Missouri I should like him to state it. In all the States of which I have any knowledge the certificate of the governor is required to authenticate an election.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I can only answer from general knowledge. I think the certificate which has been read is in accordance with the laws of Missouri.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is there any question about this gentleman's election?

The SPEAKER. None has come to the knowledge of the Chair.

Mr. GARFIELD. I should like the gentleman from Missouri, who presents the certificate to say whether there is any question raised by any party as to this gentleman's election.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. None, sir; and there is no probability of any.

Mr. GARFIELD. So that, whatever may be the reason for this form of certificate, it is not in consequence of any trouble?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has received no contesting statement.

Mr. GARFIELD. I waive the objection; but I certainly think it remarkable we have no certificate from the governor.

Mr. JOHN F. PHILIPS then appeared, and qualified by taking the oath prescribed by section 1756 of the Revised Statutes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at thirty-four minutes past twelve o'clock; and this being Monday, the first business in order is the call of States and Territories, beginning with the State of Maine, for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference to their appropriate committees, not to be brought back on motions to reconsider. Under this call memorials and resolutions of State and territorial Legislatures, and also resolutions calling for information from Departments, may be presented for reference.

Mr. RICHARDSON, of South Carolina. I ask unanimous consent that the call of States and Territories be continued until it is completed, notwithstanding the termination of the morning hour.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

NEGOTIATION OF COMMERCIAL TREATIES.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business coming over from last Monday is the completion of the roll-call on the motion to suspend the rules and pass a resolution offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY.] The yeas and nays had been ordered and the roll had been partially called, when it was interrupted by the Committee for the District of Columbia claiming the floor at two o'clock under Rule 82. The Clerk will read the names of those members who had voted.

Mr. ELAM. Let the resolution be again read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this House that the negotiation by the executive department of the Government of a commercial treaty whereby the rates of duty to be imposed on foreign commodities entering the United States for consumption should be fixed would, in view of the provision of section 7 of article 1 of the Constitution of the United States, be an infraction of the Constitution and an invasion of one of the highest prerogatives of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BUCKNER. I understand that the list was called over once last Monday, and the next thing I suppose will be to call the names of those who did not vote at that time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will direct the list to be read of those voting on the call last Monday, because some members have expressed a desire to change their votes.

The list was read, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The names of those desiring to vote will now be called by the Clerk, and they will vote on the assurance that they were within the bar when the last name on the roll was called.

The Clerk proceeded to call the names of members desiring to vote, during which the following announcements were made:

Mr. MCKENZIE. I desire to withdraw my vote, for I am paired with Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island.

Mr. MONROE. I desire to state that Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, is paired with Mr. PIERCE, of New York.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I am paired with Mr. BLOUNT, of Georgia.

Mr. REED. As I understand, only those are now entitled to vote who were present at the roll-call last Monday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated distinctly that gentlemen now desiring to vote did so upon the assurance that they were within the bar when the last name on the roll was called; that is, on Monday last.

Mr. REED. I was not here then.

The SPEAKER. Those who were not present on Monday last and within the bar when the last name on the roll was called, cannot now vote except by unanimous consent.

Mr. FISHER. I was not present last Monday and I desire to have my vote recorded. I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

There was no objection.

The following members, who were not present on Monday last, also asked and obtained unanimous consent to vote:

Mr. HARMER, Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. RUSSELL of North Carolina, Mr. ERRETT, Mr. WHITE, Mr. RICE, Mr. URNER, Mr. KILLINGER, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. BRIGHAM, Mr. RYAN of Kansas, Mr. TALBOTT, Mr. BELTZHOOVER, Mr. SPEER, and Mr. DICK.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks gentlemen to listen attentively while the roll is being read in order that they may see that their votes are correctly recorded.

The result of the completed roll-call was—yeas 175, nays 62, not voting 54; as follows:

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. REED. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. HUNTON. I ask the gentleman to yield to me to report from the Committee for the District of Columbia a joint resolution to which I think there will be no objection.

Mr. REED. I will do so.

HEALTH ORDINANCES AND REGULATIONS FOR DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HUNTON, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee for the District of Columbia a joint resolution (H. R. No. 189) legalizing the health ordinances and regulations of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read at length, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the health ordinances for the District of Columbia as revised, amended, and adopted November 19, 1875, together with the regulations governing vital statistics, sale of unwholesome food, inspection of marine products, inspection of streets and prevention of the spread of infectious and contagious diseases, passed by the board of health, be, and the same are hereby, legalized.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HUNTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] that the House now adjourn.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 128, noes 39.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. GILLETTE called for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays, and there were 22 in the affirmative; not one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. CAMP. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered, there being but 13 in the affirmative; not one-fifth of a quorum.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion to adjourn was agreed to; and accordingly (at two o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Also, a bill making appropriation for improving the navigation of Big Hatchie River, in West Tennessee—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. THOMAS L. YOUNG: The petition of Joseph S. Anderson and others, for the equalization of bounties—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 27, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, recommending that the binding for the library of that Department be exempted from the operations of the act of February 26, 1879; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with the act of March 3, 1879, a report of the operations of the National Board of Health; which was referred to the select committee to investigate and report the best means of preventing the introduction and spread of epidemic diseases, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, relative to the completion of Fort Assinaboine, Montana Territory, and the construction of a new post near Wood Mountain in that Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented the petition of Henry Devilles and others, citizens of Indiana and soldiers in the late war, praying for an amendment of the pension laws so as to allow pensions to those soldiers of the late war who contracted disease while prisoners of war in confederate prisons; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PENDLETON presented the petition of Edwin C. Myers, of Ohio, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 2480) for the relief of the soldiers and sailors who served in the Army and Navy of the United States in the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, and to restore to them equal rights with the holders of Government bonds; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of Andrew D. McKesson and others, citizens of Michigan and soldiers in the late war, praying for the passage of a law granting to soldiers the difference between the value of greenbacks and gold at the time of payment for their services; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of John Cook and others, citizens of Anderson County, Kansas, praying for the passage of a law granting compensation to C. C. Phillips, late surgeon Twenty-seventh Regiment Missouri Infantry, for extra services as such officer; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented a petition of citizens of Wiconisco, Dauphin County, Pennsylvania, soldiers and sailors in the late war, in favor of the passage of the bill to restore to soldiers and sailors who served in the late war equal rights with the holders of Government bonds; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CALL. At the request of the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. JONAS,] who is detained at his home by sickness, I present a memorial of the Cotton Exchange of New Orleans, in favor of the passage of an act restricting the Secretary of the Treasury from suppressing statistics relative to imports and exports of merchandise. I move that this memorial be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CALL presented the petition of John P. Wall, mayor, and members of the common council of Tampa, Florida, praying for an appropriation by Congress for the improvement of the Hillsborough River from its mouth to Hillsborough Bay, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, I ask leave to present the memorial of a large number of citizens of Texas, associated in an organization known as the State Grange, praying for such legislation as will regulate interstate commerce in a way to prevent unreasonable freight charges and unjust discriminations on railroad lines. The petitioners are representative men of a great agricultural community, who give expression to a feeling which is universal that the time has arrived when the Government should interpose for the protection of the products of labor against arbitrary taxation by great transportation lines, whose combinations too often exclude competition, leaving the producer entirely at their mercy. The carrying of the vast internal commerce of the country, amounting annually to many thousands of millions of dollars' worth, concerns too nearly the whole country to be left longer unregulated by law, and the interests are so enormous that their protection by the Government against unjust discrimination and unreasonable exactions is a duty of paramount importance. If railroad monopolies are permitted to lay an additional tax upon marketable products commensurate with the advance of prices, and reap the benefit of rising values, the producers of wealth are but little concerned in the prosperity said to be dawning upon the country. That transportation lines to a great extent habitually do this is well known. That vast body of our people subject to this unrestrained and unlimited taxation have a right to ask, as these memorialists do, that the Government take hold of the subject and protect them by law against such spoliation.

I move, sir, that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Commerce for consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN presented the memorial of John Johnston and others, the memorial of R. S. Gordon and others, the memorial of Thomas Collier and others, and the memorial of J. F. Cummings and others, all citizens of Illinois and soldiers in the late war, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of John Bryan and others and the petition of Thomas Collier and others, citizens of Illinois and soldiers of the late war, praying for the passage of a bill for the equalization of bounties; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of E. O. Jones and others, citizens of Ohio, praying for the passage of a law granting a pension to Martin Price, late private Company E, Seventy-ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteers; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. THURMAN presented the petition of Mrs. Mary Hopperton, of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying that a sum of money may be granted to her in lieu of a pension for services rendered by her husband, Edward Hopperton, in building wagon-roads in Mexico during the war with that country; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. THURMAN. The petition refers to certain evidence on file, which accompanied a petition formerly presented, and which was referred to the Committee on Pensions. The committee reported adversely, on the ground that it was not a matter coming within the purview of the pension laws. I ask that the papers on file with the former petition be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims. There was an adverse report, but there is new testimony.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. ROLLINS. I notice by the RECORD that the bill (S. No. 1130) for the relief of David Wingate, of Rochester, New Hampshire, introduced by me yesterday morning, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. It should have gone to the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which the other papers in the case have been referred.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That change of reference will be made.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McDONALD, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 309) for the relief of George Heard, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 531) to re-establish the office of assistant treasurer of the United States at Charleston, South Carolina, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am authorized by the Committee on Finance to report the bill (H. R. No. 2188) for the relief of Thomas Kearney, without amendment, favorably. I make this report with the proofs accompanying the bill. I call attention to the report of the Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, and ask that it may be considered as a part of the report of the Committee on Finance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. VOORHEES, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3058) authorizing the remission or refunding the duty on an altar from Rome, Italy, for the Saint John's cathedral of Indianapolis, Indiana, reported it without amendment.

Mr. GROOME, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 411) for the relief of Charles W. Rogers, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 768) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds to Albert V. Conway, substituted trustee for certain registered United States bonds redeemed or assigned by the Government upon forged assignments, reported it without amendment.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The Committee on Military Affairs have instructed me to make a report in the case of Fitz-John Porter, and with the report is a bill for his relief. I ask that the bill be read at length and placed upon the Calendar, and that the report be printed.

The bill (S. No. 1139) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, late major-general of the United States volunteers and colonel of the Army, was read the first time at length, as follows:

Whereas a board of Army officers was convened by order of the President, by Special Orders No. 78, dated "Headquarters of the Army, Washington, April 12, 1878," to examine, in connection with the record of the trial by court-martial of Major-General Porter, such new evidence relating to the merits of said case as was then on file in the War Department, together with such other evidence as might be presented to said board, and to report, with the reasons for their conclusion, what action, if any, in their opinion, justice required should be taken on said application by the President; and said board reported that they had made a very thorough examination of all the evidence presented and bearing in any manner upon the merits of the case, in addition to that which was before the court-martial; and also reported with entire unanimity, and without doubt in their own minds, with the reasons for their conclusions, that, in their opinion, justice required such action as might be necessary to annul and set aside the findings and sentence of the court-martial in the case of Major-General Fitz-John Porter, and to restore him to the position of which that sentence deprived him, such restoration to take effect from the date of his dismissal from the service; and

Whereas the President did heretofore transmit the proceedings and conclusions of the board to Congress with a message declaring that, as he was without power in the absence of legislation to act upon the recommendation of the report further than by submitting the same to Congress, the said proceedings and conclusions were transmitted for the information of Congress, and for such action as in their wisdom should seem expedient and just: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President be, and is hereby, authorized to annul and set aside the findings and sentence of said court-martial approved by the President January 19, 1863, and published in general orders numbered 18, dated "War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, Washington, January 22, 1863," if he shall deem it right and proper so to do.

SEC. 2. That in the event of the findings and sentence of the said court-martial being annulled and set aside as provided for in the first section of this act, the President be and is hereby further authorized to restore the said Fitz-John Porter to the Army of the United States, with all the rank, rights, title, and privileges to which he would have been entitled if there had not been any court-martial.

SEC. 3. The position of colonel to which the said Fitz-John Porter shall be restored by the action of the President under section 2 of this act shall be held by him as supernumerary until a vacancy shall occur, when he shall be assigned to the regiment to which it pertains; but if the said Porter shall so elect, the President of the United States may retire him on the rank of colonel, that being the rank held by him while in the service.

SEC. 4. That in the event of the finding and sentence of the said court-martial being annulled and set aside as provided for in the first section of this act, there shall be paid to the said Porter the pay and allowances of a major-general on the retired list of the Army from the 28th day of January, 1863, (date of last payment,) to the 31st day of August, 1866, both dates inclusive, and the pay and allowances of a colonel on the retired list of the Army, entitled to credit for twenty years' service, from the 1st day of September, 1866, to the date of the passage of this act; and the entire sum, or sums, so estimated and determined shall be paid to the said Porter by the Secretary of the Treasury immediately upon the passage of this act; the sum required for the purpose being hereby appropriated from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The bill was read the second time by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. LOGAN. As a majority of the Committee on Military Affairs have made a report to accompany the bill, I ask the leave of the Senate to submit the views of the minority. I have had no opportunity, except from the mere hearing of the report read before the committee, to know anything about it, but I desire that the minority should have permission to make a minority report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To this request the Chair hears no objection.

Mr. LOGAN. If I may be permitted, I desire to say in reference to the preamble of the bill that I dissent from it in toto: First, because the President had no authority in law to organize the commission that examined this case by taking ex parte testimony; second, because there being no error in the finding of the court-martial, its action is not reviewable by Congress; and third, when a person is out of the Army, Congress should not pay him for time he did not devote to the service of the country. On these three grounds, with others, I object to the bill.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BECK (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1140) for the relief of property holders on square 226 in Washington City; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BUTLER (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1141) to incorporate the Cosmo-American Colonization and General Improvement Bureau in the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. MORGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1142) for the relief of the Medical College of Alabama; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BAILEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1143) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Allison, the widow of a soldier of the war of 1812; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HEREFORD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1144) to pay James Ferguson for buildings destroyed by United States troops; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COKE (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1145) providing for the payment of awards made to Creek Indians who enlisted in the Federal Army, loyal refugees, and freedmen; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. EDMUNDS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1146) to limit the right of recovery in certain suits for the infringement of patents; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. INGALLS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1147) for the relief of Horace Boughton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HARRIS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1148) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to issue twenty-year 5 per cent. bonds of the District of Columbia, to redeem certain funded indebtedness of said District," approved June 10, 1879; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WALLACE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1149) to increase the pensions of all wounded soldiers of the war of 1812 who now receive less than $15 per month; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VOORHEES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1150) for the relief of Carlile Boyd; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PENDLETON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1151) to authorize the appointment of medical inspectors in the Navy to the office of chief of the bureau of medicine and surgery, and to remove the disability of the present incumbent; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McMILLAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1152) for the relief of Basil Moreland; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LOGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1153) to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PLUMB asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1154) for the relief of the legal representatives of William O. Redden; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CALL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1155) making an appropriation for the improvement of the Caloosahatchee River, in the State of Florida; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. TELLER. I ask leave to introduce a bill to regulate Indian affairs. I introduce the bill at the request of a gentleman who has given great attention to the subject. I dissent from a considerable portion of the bill.

By unanimous consent obtained, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1156) to regulate Indian affairs; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. LOGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 70) to increase the number of officers of the Army allowed to be detailed as professors of military science at colleges and universities; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SETTLEMENTS WITH RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Mr. EDMUNDS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it is hereby, instructed to inquire whether, in the settlement or adjustment between the United States and the railroad companies, or any of them, mentioned and provided for in the act of Congress passed on the 27th day of February, 1875, entitled "An act to provide for settlements with certain railway companies," any discrimination or difference of treatment or measure of relief or settlement, has been made by the officers of the United States in favor of one or more of said companies as compared with others of said companies under the same or similar circumstances of fact, and if so, upon what ground and by what authority; and that said committee consider whether any further legislation on the subject embraced in said act of Congress is expedient.

ACCOMMODATIONS FOR DISTRICT SUPREME COURT.

Mr. THURMAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds are hereby instructed to inquire whether the building now occupied by the supreme court of the District of Columbia is sufficient for the accommodation of the court and the transaction of its business; and, if it is not, what measures should be adopted to supply the deficiency; and that said committee report by bill or otherwise.

REPORTS ON NAVAL EDUCATION.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 1,000 copies of the report of Professor James R. Soley on foreign systems of educating naval officers, and 1,000 copies of the report of Lieutenant-Commander Chadwick on foreign systems of training seamen for the navy, be printed for the use of the Navy Department.

CLAIM OF MAX BROMBERGER.

Mr. VEST submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State transmit to the Senate all information possessed by the State Department in reference to the claim of Max Bromberger, a citizen of the United States, against the government of Mexico for merchandise belonging to said Bromberger, and which was seized unlawfully by an officer of the Mexican government, at Mazatlan, on the Pacific coast, while being transported from San Francisco to the Republic of Guatemala, and that he transmit to the Senate copies of all communications between the United States and the Mexican government in regard to said claim.

Mr. ANTHONY. I suggest that the resolution should be addressed to the President of the United States instead of to the Secretary of State.

Mr. VEST. I have no objection, although I supposed it should be directed to the Secretary of State.

Mr. ANTHONY. The usual mode in all resolutions relating to foreign affairs is to request the President of the United States to transmit the information, if not, in his opinion, incompatible with the public interest.

Mr. VEST. I am willing that the resolution should be changed in that respect.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so amended.

The resolution, as modified, was considered, and agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT OF GROUNDS SOUTH OF CAPITOL.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 169) making an appropriation for filling up, draining, and placing in good sanitary condition the grounds south of the Capitol along the line of the old canal, and for other purposes.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments: In line 3, after the word "dollars," to insert "or so much thereof as may be necessary;" in line 6, after the words "purpose of," to strike out the words "employing the poor of the District in the work of;" in line 8, after the word "condition," to insert "the old canal;" and after "grounds," to insert "of the United States;" in line 9, before the word "canal," to strike out the words "the old," and insert "said;" and at the end of the joint resolution to add "and make report of the same to Congress;" so as to make the joint resolution read:

That the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of filling up, draining, and placing in good sanitary condition the old canal, the grounds of the United States south of the Capitol, along the line of said canal. The commissioners of the District shall determine the plan of said work, and see that it is properly conducted, and shall disburse the money and make report of the same to Congress.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to move, in line 11, after the word "work," to insert the words "employ the labor to do the same by the day, week, or month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES REED.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask that the half-dozen or more pension cases upon the Calendar be now taken up and considered and acted upon. I presume they will be passed without objection. I first ask that the bill (S. No. 342) granting a pension to Charles Reed be taken up.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "pension," to strike out the words "at the rate of —— dollars per month;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Charles Reed, of Company H, Eleventh Regiment Iowa Volunteers, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISABEL L. EVANS.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask that the bill (S. No. 367) granting an increase of pension to Isabel L. Evans be next considered.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to increase the pension of Isabel L. Evans and Isabel M. Evans, widow and infant child of John J. Evans, deceased, late draughtsman on board the United States vessel Huron, who are now receiving a pension of $8 per month and $2 per month, respectively, to the rate provided by law for the widow and infant child of an ensign in the naval service of the United States; the increase to date from the 24th of November, 1877.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY A. ARMSTRONG.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 139) granting a pension to Henry A. Armstrong.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 7, after the word "artillery," to strike out the words "at the rate of $25 per month;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry A. Armstrong, late surgeon Second Regiment of New York Heavy Artillery.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL B. DAVIS.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask that the Senate next consider the bill (S. No. 578) granting a pension to Samuel B. Davis.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 7, after the word "him," to strike out the words "a pension at the rate of $36 per month, to date from February 28, 1877," and to insert "the pension now allowed by law to those who have lost both an arm and a leg;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Samuel B. Davis, of Company C, Eighteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and pay him the pension now allowed by law to those who have lost both an arm and a leg.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Samuel B. Davis."

JAMES KING.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask that the bill (S. No. 1044) granting a pension to James King be now taken up.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of James King, private Company F, First Regiment United States Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUSAN JEFFORDS.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask that the bill (S. No. 1045) granting a pension to Susan Jeffords be next considered.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Susan Jeffords, dependent mother of Edmund Jeffords, late a private in Company I, First Regiment Maine Heavy Artillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES H. REEVE.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 39) granting an increase of pension to James H. Reeve.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments: In line 5, after the word "allowed," to strike out the words "from June 26, 1865;" and in line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "thirty;" so as to make the bill read:

That James H. Reeve, late captain and brevet major in the Third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, be, and he is hereby, granted and allowed a pension at the rate of $30 per month; and the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of said James H. Reeve on the pension-roll at said rate, in lieu of the pension now paid him.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SIMEON CRAIN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask to trespass upon the courtesy of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] with the unanimous consent of the Senate, in order to get rid of the two remaining pension bills on the Calendar. I know there will be no objection to them.

Mr. BAYARD. If they will occupy but little time I yield for that purpose.

Mr. WITHERS. It will not take five minutes to dispose of these bills. If either of them leads to any debate I shall not insist upon its consideration.

Mr. BAYARD. Very well.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 335) granting a pension to Simeon Crain.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 5, after the word "Kentucky," to strike out the words "who was" and insert the words "as a;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll the name of Simeon Crain, of Bath County, Kentucky, as a first lieutenant in the Twenty-fourth Regiment Kentucky Infantry, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUIS CHRISTOPHER TIEDEMANN.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 870) granting a pension to Louis Christopher Tiedemann.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Louis Christopher Tiedemann, late a private in Company K, Thirteenth Regiment New York Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNITED STATES NOTES AS A LEGAL TENDER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The order of the day is the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 49) in relation to United States Treasury notes, reported adversely from the Committee on Finance, which is before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole. It will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask for the reading of the views of the minority.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on Finance, submitted the following as the views of the minority, to accompany joint resolution S. R. No. 49:

The undersigned, believing the industrial, commercial, and financial prosperity of a country, in order to be enduring and secure, must be based upon a money of actual and intrinsic value, and that our Government has no power and is incompetent to endow its paper obligations with such value, and the United States Treasury notes in existence and in circulation being now redeemable in gold and silver coin at the option of the holder, do therefore recommend the withdrawal of the present compulsory legal-tender power from such Treasury notes by the passage of the subjoined joint resolution.

T. F. BAYARD.
FRANCIS KERNAN.

Admitting the principle of the resolution as to the power of the Government to make paper legal tender, I reserve my action upon the resolution as to the time of the withdrawal of the power given heretofore.

WILLIAM A. WALLACE.

Reserving the right of amendment.

JUSTIN S. MORRILL.

Joint resolution in relation to United States notes.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this resolution all United States notes shall be receivable for all dues to the United States excepting duties on imports, and shall not be otherwise a legal tender; and any of said notes hereafter reissued shall bear this superscription.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, my object in urging the adoption of the present resolution is to bring about an actual resumption of specie payments; whatever else may be effected by this resolution is secondary, and merely incidental to this one cardinal object.

I ardently desire the prosperity of my country; I wish it to endure, and I know that to be permanent it must rest upon a sound basis, and I know that a sound currency is essential, and that real money is the only basis of a sound currency.

I have said that I desire to effect a real resumption of specie payments, for I do not believe what is at present called resumption, is real or reliable, because, although since January 1st, 1879, United States notes are redeemable in coin at the office of the assistant treasurer of the United States in New York City; yet, by the act of May 31, 1878, when any of said notes may be redeemed or be received into the Treasury of the United States, they shall not be retired canceled or destroyed, but they shall be reissued and paid out again and kept in circulation; so that while there is a resumption of payment in specie, it is neutralized in all its resumptive effects, by the immediate reissue of the notes just redeemed. To "resume" by such a delusive process is as idle as to bail water with a sieve.

I am for actual resumption and a restoration of real money in place of any substitute therefor, unless such substitute is voluntarily agreed upon by the parties to any contract. Plainly then this resolution is intended to secure the resumption of a standard of value—based upon value—and not upon mere credit.

It is not intended to destroy the convenience and assistance of the present paper currency—but as that paper rests upon the credit, that it is convertible, into specie and will be paid—so do I feel assured that by letting men feel a confidence that a stable standard is ultimately to measure all their contracts—they will naturally feel safer to enter into contracts—this will give them assurance that the lapse of time will not bring with it alterations in the basis upon which their agreements were formed. This will encourage capital to embark upon enterprises which will give employment to the laboring classes, and will insure to labor an honest equivalent for every hour of toil. Such I believe will be a part and a part only of the benefits to flow from the adoption of this resolution.

Mr. President, I would pause here, and ask the consideration of the Senate to a confusion of terms, which I am sure has led to a great confusion in thought, in dealing with this subject. It is unfortunate that notes should be called "money," as it tends to produce confusion and injustice; at best, notes are a promise, and until that promise is paid in money, it is unperformed.

When power was given to Congress "to borrow money on the credit of the United States," the words had a definite meaning. Not to borrow evidences of debt, but to give their evidences of debt for money. The issue of the notes was a proof that the Government had no money; that they thought it unadvisable to tax the people to obtain it; and therefore, the United States notes were merely instruments of the Government to obtain supplies to carry on the war, without paying for them.

The very issue of these notes, was a confession that the Government had no money. To make them circulate in the place of money, and enable the holders to get rid of them, they made them at first convertible into the interest-bearing obligations of the Government, and created them a legal tender for all debts, public and private. And let it here be noted that making notes legal tender, does not oblige any man to sell his property for such notes; it only compels him to receive them for a debt then due. In other words, legal tender is a debt paying power, but can never be made a debt contracting power; and no amount of tyrannical force in the history of the world has ever been able to accomplish this last. To define the difference between money and its substitute, I will accept the definition of Lord Liverpool, in his famous report upon the coins of the realm of Great Britain.

The money or coin of a country is the standard measure, by which the value of all things, bought and sold, is regulated and ascertained; and it is itself, at the same time, the value or equivalent, for which goods are exchanged, and in which contracts are generally made payable.

Paper currency in all its forms, bills of exchange, promissory notes, bank bills, are all useful auxiliaries of money, but are evidences of debt, and not of wealth, and possess no inherent value.

A thoughtful and sensible writer, Mr. Gouge, of Pennsylvania, put the truth in the following form:

Some fancy that it is the authority of the Government that gives money its value. But the true value of money, as measured by the amount of goods for which it will honestly exchange, cannot be affected by the edicts of princes or acts of parliaments. Monarchs and ministers may alter the weight of their coin, or lessen their purity, but they cannot make a coin containing half an ounce of pure silver worth as much as a coin containing an entire ounce.

The stamp of the State is a mere certificate of weight and fineness.

When Congress was authorized "to coin money," what would have been the use of all the nicety and precision expressed so carefully in all coinage laws, if it had been believed that Government could by its mint stamp, or by a statute, give what value it chose to its coined money? Of what use are all the statutes carefully regulating the tolerance and abrasion of the coin, if the inherent value of the precious metals which compose such coin had not been their only value. Mint stamps are only to inform men truly, upon the honor of a Government certificate, that each piece contains a certain weight of gold or silver of a certain purity; in order to save citizens the trouble of weighing the coins themselves.

In all of this careful regulation, is there not recognition of the value of the metallic coins?

Every piece of money represents the value of the labor which it cost to produce it, and the experience of mankind from the earliest ages has accorded value to gold and silver, and their use for conducting and facilitating the exchanges of mankind has been shown by the manufacture of coins since nearly one thousand years before the Christian era; and the civilized nations of the earth having now in reality but a single market, with rapid and easy intercourse, the precious metals being small in bulk and weight, are easily and quickly transferred, so that a very slight difference in value in the markets of the world suffices to call them wherever the demand arises for their employment.

The Supreme Court of the United States have, in cases comparatively recent, given an authoritative definition to the idea I am trying to impress. In the case of Bronson vs. Rhodes, 7 Wall., 249, the Chief-Justice, Chase, delivering the opinion of the court, after reciting the various coinage acts, said:

The design of all this minuteness and strictness in the regulation of coinage is easily seen. It indicates the intention of the Legislature to give a sure guarantee to the people that the coins made current in payment contain the precise weight of gold or silver of the precise degree of purity declared by the statute.

It recognizes the fact, accepted by all men throughout the world, that value is inherent in the precious metals; that gold and silver are in themselves values; and being such, and being in other respects the only proper measures of values, that those values are determined by weight and purity, and that form and impress are simply certificates of value, worthy of absolute reliance only because of the known integrity and good faith of the government which gives them.

These propositions are believed to be incontestable.

The coined dollar was a piece of gold or silver of a prescribed purity and weighing a prescribed number of grains; the note dollar was a promise to pay a coined dollar; but it was not a promise to pay on demand or at any fixed time; nor was it in fact convertible into a coined dollar.

It was impossible in the nature of things that these two dollars should be the actual equivalent of each other.

The Government by its statutes recognized these differences, in the very act authorizing the "note dollar," by making some things (duties and interests) payable "in coin" and others in these notes.

And in Bank vs. Supervisors, 7 Wall., 31:

The dollar note is an engagement to pay a dollar, and the dollar intended is the coined dollar of the United States: a certain quantity in weight and fineness of gold or silver authenticated by the stamp of the Government: no other dollars had before been recognized by legislation as lawful money.

These notes are obligations; they bind the national faith. They are strictly securities; they secure the payment stipulated to the holders by the pledge of the national faith; the only ultimate security of all national obligations, whatever form they may assume.

8 Wallace, p. 607, December, 1869; Hepburn vs. Griswold; per Chase, C. J.; coin dollars—note dollars:

The former possess intrinsic value, determined by the weight and fineness of the metal. The latter have no intrinsic value, but a purchasing value, determined by (1) the quantity in circulation; (2) by the general consent to its currency in payments; (3) by opinion as to the probability of redemption in coin.

To illustrate the exactness and care attending the manufacture of our coins let me read from the Revised Statutes:

SEC. 3535. In adjusting the weights of the gold coins, the following deviations shall not be exceeded in any single piece: In the double eagle and the eagle, one-half of a grain; in the half eagle, the three-dollar piece, the quarter eagle, and the one-dollar piece, one-fourth of a grain. And in weighing a number of pieces together, when delivered by the coiner to the superintendent, and by the superintendent to the depositor, the deviation from the standard weight shall not exceed one-hundredth of an ounce in $5,000 in double eagles, eagles, half eagles, or quarter eagles, in one thousand three-dollar pieces, and in one thousand one-dollar pieces.

The value of any commodity can only be measured by money; it does not determine the value, but it expresses it when it has been agreed upon, and measures it.

The first step in the increase of wealth is the organization, the combination, and division of labor. In this organization we find the steps of accumulation, and accumulation of the results of labor forms capital. Every product of labor has a purchasing power, an actual value, exchangeable by its possessor for other values. Capital is thus the savings of labor; the result of its surplus production, and therefore capital is the seed of wealth. Capital is the child of labor and born of its exertions. By the very law of its birth and origin, capital cannot be useful without the employment of labor; so that the laborer must share the advantages of capital. Increase of capital brings with it increased demand for labor; and, despite the false teachings of demagogues, capital and labor, having a common origin, are natural allies, and not enemies.

For all the varied productions of human industry, a machinery and measure of exchange is requisite. A universal medium of exchange is necessary,—not of weight, or length, or height alone,—but of value; because, at the bottom of all human dealings, for the sake of security, honesty and justice must be found. As human labor alone creates value, so the results of human labor should alone be justly exchangeable for value.

In no civilized country can all the exchanges of property be carried on by the agency of coin alone.

Paper notes are an essential auxiliary to coin, but never let it be forgotten, they are not coin—are not money—but are substitutes for it. They are not actual payments, but promises to pay,—evidences of debt which the law will enforce,—and do not give value for value; and their acceptance must be based on their credit, on their convenience, and be always voluntary in order to be safe.

When a paper note, an evidence of debt, is made a compulsory tender in payment of a debt,—the great law of honesty,—the great law of money—that value is to be given for value, is broken and disregarded.

Mr. President, we have heard in this Chamber allusions somewhat vague, but none the less alarming, to an unseen, undefined, but terrible, "money power."

What is meant by these ominous warnings against this invisible, intangible, immeasurable power?

What is meant is, I suppose, the power of capital.

How shall the law deal with it?

Capital is the result of labor and frugality; it is by the virtues of thrift, economy, and self-denial, working under the instruction of intelligence and enlightened self-interest, that capital is first created, and then accumulated.

Wealth and property of all descriptions are but forms of capital. Encouragement is given by the institutions of property, by the creation of government, by the enactment of laws, to induce men to exercise their faculties to gain wealth. Is all this founded upon fallacy and wrong? Is there to be discrimination, suspicion and assault visited upon those individuals of society who have been more successful than others in the accumulation of property? Is it not "money power" that enables a poor laborer to become the owner of the pick-ax or shovel, with which he prosecutes his daily task? Is it not "money power" that enables him to procure a wheel-barrow? Is it not "money power" that enables his savings of a year's labor, temperance, and frugality, to give him the means to purchase a horse and cart? Is it not "money power" that enables him to educate his children and fit them for an improved condition in life? Is it not the same "money power" that crowns his life of honesty, sobriety, and industry, with an old age of comfort and respectability?

Such, sir, are the humble, but honorable and useful, careers that America offers to the poor of all lands; and, of all institutions to secure such results, a money having real value is the chief, because it is the true and only road by which the laborer honestly becomes the capitalist.

Mr. President, there are few assemblages of men to whom I could appeal with more confidence to bear out the truth of my present utterances, than to my honored associates in this Chamber, so many of whom have illustrated in their own careers, the advantages and true glory of American republican institutions.

I do not shut my eyes, Mr. President, to the fact, that the equal and wholesome distribution of property, which it was hoped by the founders of our Government would be attained by the abolition of the rules of primogeniture, of entailments, of perpetuities, and the division of intestate estates among daughters and sons alike, has been greatly defeated. And I am inclined to believe the system of incorporation which we have introduced into all branches of industrial pursuits will be found nearly equal to the effects of primogeniture and mortmain combined in its influence upon the aggregation of wealth into a single and never-dying grasp.

But the millionaires of to-day, now to be counted by scores, where twenty years ago they were to be counted by units—were twenty years ago penniless boys, and I cannot comprehend in this vague denunciation of their "money power" at what point of their accumulations condemnation and proscription are to commence, or should their riches take wings as they have in so many conspicuous instances, whether pardon will then await them in their poverty for their former pecuniary success.

To no one thing, however, do I attribute this unequal division of property in this country so much as to the resort by the Government to the use of inconvertible legal-tender paper money, and I believe with Thomas Jefferson that—

> The abuses of paper money are inveterate—by breaking up the measure of value that it makes a lottery of all private property cannot be denied.

It is from such results that communism is the outgrowth, and to the distress caused by unwise financial management I attribute the dangerous projects, fallacious schemes, and attempts to array the force of numbers against property, which we witness all over the country, and which afford such opportunities for demagogues to ply their arts and excite an unthinking and suffering people to the adoption of false remedies and destructive measures of supposed relief.

Mr. President, I do not propose at this time to argue against the claim of power in Congress to make Treasury notes a legal tender for the payment of debts by the Government itself, or between private citizens.

Nor do I care now to recite the sad history of the overthrow of one of the most deliberate decisions ever reached by the Supreme Court, accomplished so speedily by the active interference and power of President Grant and Mr. Hoar, his Attorney-General, by the change not in the opinion but in the personnel of the tribunal, and an increase of its numbers.

I shall content myself by adopting the language of Chief-Justice Chase in his dissent from the newly-created majority, in their last judgment, in May, 1871, in favor of the passage of legal-tender laws in times of dire emergency, "when" (to use the language of Mr. Justice Strong) "it was certain that nothing else would have supplied the absolute necessities of the Treasury, that nothing else would have enabled the Government to maintain its armies and Navy; that nothing else would have saved the Government and Constitution from destruction."

I believe with Chase, Grier, Nelson, Clifford, and Field, that—

> If the plain sense of words, if the contemporaneous exposition of parties, if common consent of understanding, if the opinions of courts, avail anything in determining the meaning of the Constitution, it seems impossible to doubt that the power "to coin money" is a power to establish a uniform standard of value, and that no other power to establish such a standard by making notes a legal tender is conferred upon Congress by the Constitution.

This was the view of five judges in opposition to three, in January, 1870.

On May 1, 1871, this decision was overruled by the reconstructed court by a vote of 5 to 4, and their judgment is to be found in the twelfth volume of Wallace's Reports.

It has of course been obeyed ever since, and as I think the action of Congress in the reissue of United States notes "after they had been redeemed and become the property of the United States," is an extension of power, unauthorized even by the last judgment of the court. But I wish the Senate and people of the United States to consider the injurious results to all private contracts and business of continuing such a power in perpetuity. I do not now speak of the constitutionality of the power although no one has yet and I think no one will rise in this Chamber and affirm his belief in the power in Congress to create its paper notes lawful money and legal tender for all debts public and private.

But independently of the question of constitutionality consider for a moment the practical results and impolicy of exercising such a power over the private contracts of individuals.

When the Constitution of the United States expressly denied to any State the power to coin money—to issue bills of credit; to make anything but gold and silver legal tender for the payment of debts; and to pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts—what was necessarily intended?

Evidently to secure the inviolability of contracts against legislative power—and to promote the punctual and honest performance of all obligations of the citizens.

The power to make contracts (when not in derogation of morals) was a sacred right of individual dominion—one of the absolute and admitted rights of the citizen.

State jurisdiction over him was thus restrained by the Constitution, and a common coinage and universal standard and measure of values was sought to be secured.

Now is it reasonable—is it possible—that when thus carefully and strictly prohibiting invasion by the States of the personal right of contract—by prohibiting coinage to the several States, in order to secure a common and general coinage for all, by giving the power to "coin money" exclusively to Congress—it was intended that Congress should have the power to pass laws impairing the obligation of contracts—and instead of the plainly expressed power to "coin" money and regulate its value in order to secure inviolability to contracts by providing certainty and stability in their settlement—they should print paper notes having no intrinsic value, instead of coining metals which possess intrinsic value, and by compulsion interject them as a medium of fluctuating value, to breed confusion and uncertainty in all the transactions of the people? One great object of legislation is to prevent uncertainty in the interpretation of contracts—and it is requisite for the sake of justice and honesty that every contract expressed in money shall enable us to ascertain exactly how much of the precious metals, at their legal standard of purity and fineness is due from one person to another.

This power was committed solely to Congress—when they were authorized "to coin money"—and regulate the weight and fineness of the coins from which their value is to be determined.

If paper notes will express the true amount of the precious metals due from one man to another on a contract—these being the representatives of gold and silver, they are equally useful, but if they are not actually the representatives of such metals then they cannot measure how much of such metals is due upon any contract, and cannot therefore be relied upon to perform the necessary functions of money.

It has been held by the Supreme Court that Congress as well as the States was forbidden to pass laws impairing the obligation of contracts—and certainly by the provisions of the fifth amendment was expressly prohibited from "depriving any person of property without due process of law"—and from taking "private property for public use without just compensation." Is it not impairing the obligation of a contract? Is it not depriving a man of his property "without due process of law" when Congress compels him to receive for his contract or for his property United States notes admittedly worth less than the stipulated amount of money he had agreed and was entitled to receive? What is the difference to a farmer who delivers you five hundred bushels of grain according to his contract, if he is compelled to receive a currency which because of its depreciation would buy in the market but four hundred bushels at the date of delivery, although at the time of making the contract it would have bought five hundred bushels?

He has also given you full value in grain as he promised, and you pay him one-fifth less in value than you promised. Is he not deprived of his property without due process of law, and is not the obligation of your contract with him impaired? If you can persuade yourself that a law permitting such things is constitutional, can you say that it is either honest or just?

A more arbitrary exercise of power cannot be imagined than that which interferes with and alters every contract whether for labor and service, or for lands or property of any description. It is fatal alike to honesty and certainty in human dealings, to the laborer who is "worthy of his hire," as it is to the negotiation of a loan for national defense.

Yet such a power is now commended and sought to be continued as a law in a government called free!

The right to property is as important as the right to life and liberty; when the first is not secure, the other two cannot be.

I consider the construction of the Constitution by the Supreme Court in the legal-tender cases to be alarming and most dangerous, for I understand it to rest the power to issue legal-tender notes upon the existence of some great emergency of which Congress is the judge. By this rule there is no constitutional limitation upon the power of Congress, that in the heat of an emergency, of the existence and pressure of which they are the sole judges, does not melt away. As the Constitution was intended for the restraint of majorities, and to keep all power therein delegated within assigned limits, it is obvious that the necessity for maintaining its provisions is greater in proportion to the excitements and dangers of the hour. Yet by the interpretation of the Supreme Court the hour of the trial of the Constitution is the hour of its failure—it is never so weak as when it should be most strong.

The tiger of unlimited power in the majority is to be kept in his cage only until he becomes furious, and then the door is to be opened. Is not this like depriving a ship of her rudder just when the storm is at its height, and the power of control most needed?

If this be the doctrine we cannot be too prompt, now that the storm has passed, the sea smooth, and the wind favorable to put our ship of state in a condition to weather future storms. Let us see where we now stand. By the act of June 30, 1864, the total amount of United States notes issued or to be issued was $400,000,000.

Secretary McCulloch in his annual report of 1865 having expressed the opinion—

> That the legal-tender acts were war measures, passed in a great emergency; that they should be regarded only as temporary; that they ought not to remain in force a day longer than would be necessary to enable the people to prepare for a return to the gold standard; and that the work of retiring the notes which have been issued, should be commenced without delay, and carefully and persistently continued until all are retired;

the House of Representatives, under a suspension of rules, by a vote of 144 yeas to only 6 nays—

> Resolved, That this House cordially concurs in the views of the Secretary in relation to the necessity of a contraction of the currency, with a view to as early a resumption of specie payments as the business interests of the country will permit, and we hereby pledge co-operative action to this end as speedily as possible.

Among the one hundred and forty-four supporters of this resolution (and there were but six votes in the negative) I find the following who are to-day members of this body: Messrs. ALLISON, CONKLING, DAWES, FERRY, MORRILL, ROLLINS, and VOORHEES.

The resolution of March 12, 1866, authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to "retire and cancel" $10,000,000 of these notes within six months, and thereafter not more than $4,000,000 in any one month. By January, 1868, Secretary McCulloch had under this authority "retired and canceled" $44,000,000 of these notes, and then Congress stopped their further retirement.

In the fall of 1872, when Mr. Boutwell was Secretary of the Treasury, $5,000,000 of these "retired and canceled" notes were put in circulation by the Treasury Department, but on the meeting of Congress were called in again.

In 1873 $26,000,000 of the same "retired and canceled" notes were again reissued by Mr. Richardson, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the volume of United States notes thus increased to $382,000,000, was by the act of March 23, 1874, approved and legalized. Under the resumption act of January 14, 1875, redeeming 80 per cent. of United States notes for every 100 per centum of currency issued to the banks, the volume of United States notes was brought down to $346,681,016; and by the act of May 31, 1878, the Secretary of the Treasury is required to reissue and keep this amount in circulation "after it has been redeemed and become the property of the United States."

During the debate which attended the passage of the resumption act the present Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Sherman, who had charge of the bill in this body, was asked by several Senators, myself among the number, whether by the redemption of the United States notes under that act they were finally to be retired and destroyed, and he declined to give any construction whatever to the law on that point.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator if in his mind there is any doubt at all as to what the construction of that act was?

Mr. BAYARD. I was unable to say what its construction was. I thought it was a double-faced juggle intended to catch the votes of contractionists in one direction and of inflationists in the other. I said so at the time, and I withheld my vote, for I thought it was not treating a great subject with proper respect to legislate upon it in such a way. I therefore came to no construction. I was disposed to believe that with a Secretary favoring one view it would be made a means of contraction; under the other view, which it seems has been adopted by many, it would become a means solely of inflation, because there was no limit put upon the notes to be issued by the Government to the national banks, and there was no security that the Treasury notes retired nominally in the course of redemption would not be reissued again by the Treasury; and when the author of the bill—no, I will not say the author of the bill, for I have understood he was not the author of the bill, but he was the gentleman in charge of the bill—declined to say what was intended by it, and what its effect would be, I believed then that there was some snare, and that it was an improper way of dealing with the subject, and hence the measure was not fit really to be before the legislative body.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My apology for interrupting my honorable friend, to all of whose very interesting and satisfactory speech I am sorry I have not been able to listen on account of an engagement elsewhere, is that I thought it right it should appear in that connection that I voted for the act of 1875, because, on a careful examination, it was to my mind perfectly clear, no matter what the present Secretary of the Treasury chose to think about it or chose not to say about it, but on the bill itself that I was voting for, it was perfectly clear that the redemption that that act provided for, both before the 1st of January, 1879, and afterward, was a redemption which took out in point of law from existence all the United States notes that should come in in the methods provided by that act. And I am inclined to think that if my honorable friend would now examine the statute, he would not have any doubt upon it at all. Of course the act of 1878 reverses all that, and that made the act of 1878 necessary to those who wished to inflate.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, such was the opinion of the honorable Senator from Verment. Of his ability to form and express opinions, no man has a doubt. But at the same time I repeat what I have said just now. I can call to mind a majority of the gentlemen of that party to which the honorable Senator belongs on this floor who had been making "in season and out of season" in this body nothing but inflation speeches, declaring that the safety and welfare of the country required the reissue of the whole four hundred millions again, and they had voted and passed a bill to that effect, which was vetoed, I do not say reluctantly, but certainly with great hesitation by the then President, General Grant; I remember all this well, and, therefore, I was peculiarly justified in what I was saying. I was not referring to the opinion of the honorable Senator from Vermont; I was referring to the opinion of the gentleman put forth by the majority at that time to answer for them on that bill, and he came here with a measure that he dared not or would not give a plain construction to.

I recite this merely to authorize the statement that, judging of the future by the past, the $54,000,000 requisite to bring the present volume up to the $400,000,000 fixed by the act of June 30, 1864, may at any time be added just as lawfully as were the $5,000,000 in 1872, and the $26,000,000 in 1873, to the present volume of that currency. Nay, more, the issue of these United States notes was until these later days of "greenback" finance always stated to be "a war measure," growing out of the exigencies of the times, and to be ended just so soon as peace was restored.

In his annual report of 1862, Secretary Chase said:

> The recommendations now submitted of the limited issue of United States notes as a wise expedient for the present time * * * are prompted by no favor to excessive issues of any description of credit moneys; * * * for just so soon as victory shall restore peace, the ample revenue already secured by wise legislation will enable the Government through advantageous purchases of specie to replace at once large amounts, and at no distant day the whole, of this circulation by coin, without detriment to any interest, but, on the contrary, with great and manifest benefit to all interests. The Secretary recommends therefor no mere paper-money scheme, but, on the contrary, a series of measures looking to a safe and gradual return to gold and silver as the only permanent basis, standard, and measure of values recognized by the Constitution.

The language of Secretary McCulloch, in 1865, I have read already to the same effect, and the "cordial concurrence" of Congress. To this I could add abundant proofs from the debates, and from the valuable "Financial History of the War," by Mr. Spaulding, to show that the issue of Treasury notes was at no time intended as a permanent measure with or without legal-tender power.

The peace looked forward to by Secretary Chase came three years after he wrote the words I have read, and fifteen years have passed since the war ended, and yet we find this measure of confessed temporary expediency still in force, and by many urged to be continued in perpetuum. And Senators say "these notes are now at par—are redeemable by the Government at the will of the holder in gold and silver coin." "Therefore let well alone" and "it is inexpedient" to do anything now to make resumption permanent and fix gold and silver as the only basis, standard, and measure of values recognized by the Constitution. The proposition to restore our constitutional and safe basis of value for all money is called "tinkering with the finances." To this complexion have we come—that a proposition to adopt measures of admitted safety and wisdom to secure a permanent prosperity, is called "tinkering with the finances."

Mr. President, such a condition of sentiment alarms me, and only causes me to be the more vigorous in my efforts to secure my countrymen against such manifest dangers.

When I see error so supported my efforts will be redoubled to defend the country against it—to warn my associates here, and my countrymen everywhere, against the seductions of false measures of finance and the necessity of securing a sound basis for their business prosperity.

This assumed legal-tender power is like the germ of a deadly fever, that needs only the heat of excitement, of speculation, of war, or of distress to develop its deadly powers; and it is while it is dormant that I would put an end to its existence.

I heard it gravely urged the other day by the honorable Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] that to withdraw the legal-tender power from the notes of the United States would be to "question the validity of the public debt," in violation of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution.

To what result would such reasoning lead? Necessarily to the permanent existence of the notes unpaid.

These notes were never anything but evidences of debt, and issued only because the Government could not then pay money for its supplies; but now it is ready to pay them on demand, and no one who holds them but can exchange them for gold and silver coin whenever he chooses. The argument, therefore, that the offer to pay or the payment of a debt was a mode of questioning its validity has at least the merit of novelty even if it has little force.

Mr. COKE. May I be allowed a word?

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly.

Mr. COKE. The Senator from Delaware says the construction placed by myself on the fourteenth amendment would perpetuate the notes because they could not be paid, no legislation could be had with respect to them without questioning the validity of the public debt. Do I understand the Senator to say that?

Mr. BAYARD. Oh, no. The Senator understood me as trying to state the argument he made the other day, and I think I have elucidated that position, because he said if you withdraw from these notes a portion of their debt-paying power, to that degree you attack the validity of the debt which they represent.

Mr. COKE. Yes, sir. I said that the legal-tender notes are a part of the public debt, which were in existence as circulating money when the fourteenth amendment was adopted, and in that shape were recognized as legal and valid, and that which Congress may order them in for redemption and payment. Congress cannot demonetize them in the hands of the people unpaid, as this resolution proposes to do, because Congress is not permitted by the amendment to "question" the validity of the public debt, or any part of it.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I am not sorry that the honorable Senator from Texas has had an opportunity a second time to state his position; but I can only say this, that the plain-minded people of this country will consider that construction of the constitutional amendment most strange, and they will hope and pray that every debt which may be due then, may have its "validity questioned" in the same way I propose the validity of this debt—that is, by tendering the full amount in gold and silver coin.

Mr. COKE. Congress, I admit, has a perfect right to pay the debt at any moment.

Mr. BAYARD. But, Mr. President, the present time is most opportune for establishing a resumption of specie payment permanently. Taught by the adversity brought on by a dreadful war, unwise finance, and the fruits of an irredeemable and depreciated paper money—from the time the bubble of a false prosperity burst in 1873—our people have been following lives of economy, industry, and frugality—they have produced more and spent less.

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator will pardon me. He has made his statement once, and again to-day, and I trust he will allow me to go on.

Providence has favored us with unusual bounty; and our last three years have been literally years of plenty, and the last year the best crops of all have blessed our labors.

During this time how different has been the fate of other nations! In Europe the last three years have been years of scarcity and the last, the worst of all. As a result, an enormous demand for our cereal productions has sprung up, and the balance of trade has made us largely the creditors of European states. To pay this great debt the precious metals have been imported into this country and at least $100,000,000 of gold is estimated to have been received here since June last.

And just here let me impress upon you this important truth, stated by Hume, "that nothing can keep real money (gold and silver) out of a thriving and prosperous country except the presence of spurious money." The increased flow of the precious metals into the United States can only therefore be arrested and prevented by our continued exclusive use of an unreal money. This law of money circulation was perceived and announced in the reign of Queen Elizabeth by Sir Thomas Gresham—"that bad money will drive out good money, but good money cannot drive out bad money."

And "Gresham's law," as it was afterward called, was known to Aristophanes, the Greek critic and grammarian, two centuries before the Christian era, as Macaulay has shown by his citations in his History of England.

Mr. Stanley Jevons in his work on "Money" has noted "that Gresham's remarks referred only to moneys of one kind of metal," but he adds:

> Gold compared with silver, or silver with copper, or paper compared with gold, are subject to the same law that the relatively cheaper medium of exchange will be retained in circulation, and the relatively dearer will disappear.

As paper drives coin out of circulation, so the withdrawal of paper will bring specie back again.

The stock of gold and silver in this country was never so large as it is to-day.

The report of the Director of the Mint informs us the amount of coin and bullion in the country on October 31, 1879, was, of gold, $355,681,532, and of silver, $126,009,537; making a total of $481,691,069. And he says:

> Should the unprecedented flow of gold continue from foreign countries unchecked by its reaction upon prices here, and abroad, the metallic circulation of the country at the end of the fiscal year, (June 30, 1880,) will have swollen to over $600,000,000.

Wisely appreciating this high tide of opportunity the banks are converting their reserves into coin; and a table furnished me by the Comptroller of the Currency, will show that by far the greater portion of the reserves of the banks (which are largely in excess of legal requirement) consist to-day of coin.

Who can doubt that if our smaller notes were withdrawn gold and silver coin would rapidly replace them in circulation? Mr. President, this state of things is exceptional; this condition of prosperity may soon be all reversed. Blight, and storm, and drought may destroy our crops. Events common in the histories of nations may demand from our exchequer extraordinary payments.

There is no cloud of war now on the horizon, but who can tell when it may arise?

The scheme of uniting the two great oceans by a canal across the isthmus on the southern border of this continent is one of world-wide importance, and the heart of every American proclaims that it is to be under the control of the Government of the United States. Our power may be questioned but it will be maintained. Every counsel of wisdom therefore exhorts us to "seize the day," and in time of peace to prepare for war, for it is the surest mode to avert it.

The withdrawal of legal-tender power from the United States notes can do injustice to no man, and cannot lessen the value of the notes in the hands of any holder, because an equivalent for the face value is offered in gold and silver coin in case any creditor should refuse to accept them.

When in May, 1878, I offered the amendment similar in effect to the resolution now before the Senate, and it was voted down, the time fixed for the redemption of the notes by the Treasury had not arrived. The premium upon gold was then not high, indeed almost nominal, but since January 1, 1879, it has wholly disappeared in every quarter of the Union. There is practical equivalency as currency in all transactions, public and private, between the notes issued through the national banks and the Treasury notes—everywhere they are received as equals and unquestioned, yet one is legal tender and the other is not.

It is idle to imagine conspiracies to discredit these notes because of the withdrawal of legal-tender power. Such attempts, even if successful, would at the worst embarrass some individuals temporarily and put them to the cost of a bill of exchange, but no more serious injury could ensue. Any one possessing the United States notes could pay his debts, because they will procure him legal-tender coin at the Treasury on demand. "Things that are equal to the same thing are equal to one another."

Mr. President, we have the best authority for saying the legal-tender clause never added to the value of the note, and certain it is it failed to prevent its great depreciation.

Let me on this subject read the opinions of Secretary and Chief-Justice Chase, in 8 Wall., p. 620:

> It is denied indeed by eminent writers that the quality of legal tender adds anything at all to the credit or usefulness of Government notes. They insist, on the contrary, that it impairs both. How far is Government helped by this means? Certainly it cannot obtain new supplies or services at a cheaper rate; for no one will take the notes for more than they are worth at the time of the contract. The price will rise in the ratio of the depreciation; and this is all that could happen if the notes were not made legal tender. And there is abundant evidence that whatever benefit is possible from that compulsion to some individuals or to the Government is far more than outweighed by the losses of property, the derangement of business, the fluctuations of currency and values, the increase of prices to the people and the Government, and the long train of evils which flows from the use of irredeemable paper money.
> It is true that these evils are not to be attributed altogether to making a legal tender. But this increases these evils and certainly widens their extent and protracts their continuance.

And in 12 Wallace, p. 579, (Legal-Tender Cases, opinion of Chase, C. J., 12 Wallace, p. 579:)

> Now, does making the notes a legal tender increase their value? It is said that it does, by giving them a new use. The best political economists say that it does not. When the Government compels the people to receive its notes, it virtually declares that it does not expect them to be received without compulsion. It practically represents itself insolvent. This certainly does not improve the value of its notes. It is an element of depreciation. In addition, it creates a powerful interest in the debtor class and in the purchasers of bonds to depress to the lowest point the credit of the notes. The cheaper these become, the easier the payment of debts, and the more profitable the investments in bonds bearing coin interest.
> And many are persuaded by their representations that the forced circulation is not only a necessity but a benefit. But the apparent benefit is a delusion and the necessity imaginary. In their legitimate use, the notes are hurt, not helped by being made a legal tender. The legal-tender quality is only valuable for the purposes of dishonesty. Every honest purpose is answered as well and better without it.

Certain it is the endowment of Government notes with legal-tender power has always failed to prevent depreciation.

No penalties however severe, no denunciation, no promises have ever in history been successful in arresting their necessary fate, when public confidence had once been shaken in them. In the history of our early struggles in the colonial war for independence how marked was the failure!

It may be instructive here to read from an historian of the period, David Ramsay:

The most extensive mischief resulted in the progress, and toward the close of the war, from the operation of the laws, which made paper bills a tender, in the discharge of debts, contracted payable in gold or silver. When this measure was first adopted, little or no injustice resulted from it; for, at that time, the paper bills were equal, or nearly equal to gold or silver, of the same nominal sum. In the progress of the war, when depreciation took place, the case was materially altered. Laws, which were originally innocent became eventually the occasion of much injustice.

The aged, who had retired from the scenes of active business, to enjoy the fruits of their industry, found their substance melting away to a mere pittance insufficient for their support. The widow, who lived comfortably on the bequests of a deceased husband, experienced a frustration of all his well-meant tenderness. The laws of the country interposed, and compelled her to receive a shilling where a pound was her due. * * * The hapless orphan, instead of receiving from the hands of an executor a competency to set out in business, was obliged to give a final discharge on the payment of sixpence in the pound. In many instances the earnings of a long life of care and diligence were, in the space of a few years, reduced to a trifling sum. A few persons escaped these affecting calamities, by secretly transferring their bonds, or by flying from the presence or neighborhood of their debtors. The evils which resulted from the legal tender of these paper bills were foreign from the intentions of Congress and of the State Legislatures. It is but justice to add further, that a great proportion of them flowed from ignorance. Till the year 1780, when the bills fell to forty for one, it was designed by most of the rulers of America, and believed by a great majority of the people, that the whole sum in circulation would be appreciated by a reduction of its quantity, so as finally to be equal to gold or silver. In every department of government, the Americans erred from ignorance; but in none so much as that which related to money.

And it is worthy of note that when in 1870 the first decision of the Supreme Court was reached against the power of Congress to make notes legal tender for debts, the effect was to raise the value of such notes in the market by diminishing the premium upon gold from 10 to 15 per cent., and on the contrary when in the year following this decision was reversed, and the power in Congress sustained, the value of the notes declined and the premium upon gold immediately advanced.

But what better illustration of the injustice of legal-tender paper money, and of the impossibility of preventing its great depreciation can be afforded than in the petitions so numerously signed which were presented the other day by the honorable Senator from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES,] and the honorable Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN,] praying that the difference in value between United States notes and coin should be paid to the soldiers and sailors who had been compelled to receive them during the war at a great depreciation. It is true the two honorable Senators differed somewhat in their style of introduction of these memorials and expressed very different sympathies on the subject. One considered it the exercise of the "sacred right of petition," and the other only a piece of "intense demagogy." But that is not the point just now. It proves there was gross and painful depreciation in these notes for several years, although they were then as now legal tender for all debts public and private. And, Mr. President, I hold in my hand a bill introduced into the House of Representatives and placed upon our files, providing for the issue of $500,000,000 of additional United States notes of the denominations of one, two, five, ten, twenty, and fifty dollars, "and said notes to be a legal tender for all debts public and private, and shall be kept in circulation in manner now provided by law," and a subsequent section appropriates this sum of $500,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to make payments to soldiers and sailors required to equalize the greenbacks to coin.

By the public press we are informed that a wide and impressive expression of public opinion in favor of this measure is about to be brought to bear upon Congress to influence the passage of this bill. I do not now propose to discuss its merits, excepting to say this: If it be just to relieve these discharged soldiers and sailors from the effects of a depreciated legal-tender currency, the same measure of justice is due to the officers of both branches of the service. And we cannot deny an equal justice to the wounded and crippled pensioners of the war, nor to the civil servants of the Government, who faithfully did their work during the same period, and who were all paid in the same currency. Nay, I doubt whether justly we could stop there; for the injustice authorized by the Government in the emission of such notes, and making them a legal tender for all private debts, should also be remedied, and where debts contracted in gold and silver prior to 1862 (when such coin alone was "lawful money of the United States") were paid off in depreciated currency, the difference in value of such currency with coin should in equity and justice be made good.

And for such increditable payments a flood of legal-tender paper currency would be needed, similar to that provided for by House bill No. 2480. I need not ask what will become of specie payments, but will rather ask what will become of the legal-tender notes themselves, or any other form of Government indebtedness? The present Congress may not yield to such solicitations, but we cannot answer for our successors; and should we not take affirmative steps at once in the opposite direction? In such an issue our motto should be, "Obsta principiis." On the threshold let us meet all such wild and foolish schemes so fatal to every possibility of wise and good government.

Mr. President, "like causes will ever produce like effects," and history continually repeats itself; and I earnestly appeal to my countrymen and the Senate "to shut the door forever, and lock it, and throw away the key," which admits a legal-tender currency to take the place of a stable standard having universal and intrinsic value. Let us never forget that the one single function of currency is to effect the exchange of commodities by an equivalent measure, but when that measure has no inherent value or a fluctuating value (as must always be the case when it is founded upon credit alone) it is radically corrupted.

Mr. President, centralization of power in any government is to be dreaded. Under it "the individual withers," and local self-government in which are grown the seeds of hardy, self-reliant virtues and capacities is destroyed. If this be true of other governments and peoples, how especially true of our own, where a territory so vast, embracing populations so heterogeneous in race, pursuits, and traditions are brought into a Union under a single Constitution, which is the supreme law of the land. The gradual absorption of jurisdiction by the General Government in so many ways during the past fifteen years, its invasion of the domain of the States, its interference with subjects and matters so essentially proper for local cognizance and control, have justly alarmed those who have at heart the preservation of the Union under our Federal theory and constitutional government.

I believe this recognition is widespread, and the necessity admitted of a rediffusion and redistribution of powers which in the emergencies and heat of civil war have been unduly absorbed by the National Government. Let us call to mind the legend upon our national seal, "E pluribus unum"—that the States form a Union "out of many"—not a unit. But let me ask—what act of centralization is so potent or in any degree equals that which assumes to create values by the fiat of Congress, and compels such values to be accepted as an equivalent for any indebtedness? In my view all other steps to centralization are as nothing compared to this.

The Divine master asked near two thousand years ago, "which of you with taking thought can add to his stature one cubit?"

May it not be repeated now and here, when "with taking thought" men seem to believe they can create values without limit and measures of values, and impress their will on printed slips of paper and rely upon their being received as equivalents for the labors of a life-time. Is the present attempt anything else than a scheme to avert and avoid the law contained in the primeval curse—that by the sweat of his face shall man eat bread?

Sir, there is a spirit of irreverence in these fiat-money plans of assumed omnipotence that ought to shock the minds and hearts of men.

Mr. President, I have not considered this great question from a party stand-point. It touches too closely the welfare of every human being in our society, for me to dwarf it to the mere interests of a party. But if in the name of party I should speak, and I should call the long roll of distinguished statesmen and patriots who led the democratic masses in the past and taught them that the Constitution of the United States was the supreme law of the land, and that steady subordination to its provisions in time of peace as well as in war time, was the first and paramount duty of every citizen in or out of office, what name could there be found in all that illustrious band to approve or warrant the emission at will of Treasury notes by Congress, and their endowment with legal-tender power—as "lawful money"—to pay all debts public and private—to control every contract and every obligation known to human affairs?

Sir, this debate has begun and it will close, and the name of no democrat will be uttered who at any time approved, or in any way countenanced so monstrous an assertion of power. It is utterly beside the question to read here long extracts from Jefferson and Jackson denouncing abuses of power by great Government corporations; it is a profanation of their great names; it is an insult to their honest fames to suggest or even hint that they or any of them ever countenanced or approved the emission of legal-tender paper money.

I could safely take the declarations of party faith and principles—of every national, of every State, and I believe I might truly say of every county convention, of the democratic party, from the foundation of the Government down to the present year, and find nothing but denunciation of legal-tender paper money—and on the contrary you will find the steady declaration from generation to generation, in war and in peace, that gold and silver coins are the only true and constitutional money of the United States—according to the doctrines of true democracy.

In considering so grave and all-important a principle as lies at the root of this discussion, I shall not turn aside to impale individuals upon their inconsistencies; such occupation would be trivial and unworthy—but when this legal-tender power eighteen years ago was sought for the first time in our history to be exercised by Congress there was not to be found a democrat in either House who did not deny it. Look to the record, see how they voted—how they spoke. I am half tempted to recite here the fervent and true eloquence with which some, even now members of this Senate denounced the assertion of so disastrous a power. But their action has passed into history, and can be revised by those who desire it.

I can only say that if I sought for texts peculiarly condemnatory of such a power as I now seek to withdraw from the paper issues of the Government, I could find them abundantly in the speeches and writings of the most distinguished, trusted, and authoritative leaders of the democratic party. I am content to follow in their footsteps, and here to-day to plant myself more firmly in their principles, which time has proven to be founded upon truth and justice. And intending no impeachment of others I must say that I am unable to comprehend the logic and reasoning, which admitting such a law to be in violation of the Constitution, yet justifies a vote to perpetuate its presence on the statute-book. I confess I am unable so to construe the obligation I have taken to support and defend that Constitution, and bear true faith and allegiance to the same.

Mr. President, I do not propose on this occasion to consider the interesting and important questions of bank or Treasury issues, of notes as currency—nor of the much-needed reforms in the tariff of duties on imports—nor the navigation laws—nor the parity between silver and gold and the practicability of retaining both metals by their free coinage under present regulations of their respective values. The question I have endeavored to discuss, and place upon its true and essential principles as exemplified by all human experience, is of such importance as to warrant and demand a consideration by itself.

Of course it intimately affects and controls every department of human dealings—but it should be settled upon a principle and then applied in practice. When the other questions referred to shall come before the Senate I shall not leave any one in doubt as to my position in regard to them—but I do not include them in the present discussion.

The proposition embraced in the resolution before the Senate, has made deep impression on the minds of all thinking men, and expressions of opinion in the form of petitions and memorials have been presented here from many States of the Union.

The commercial and manufacturing centers of population and industry have naturally expressed their opinions, and by abundant signatures have testified their great interest and decided conviction in favor of the passage of the resolution. Thus from Boston and Massachusetts have come memorials, from Philadelphia the great seat of manufactures, from Baltimore with her vast and growing domestic and shipping interest; from Wilmington, Delaware, and the fertile peninsula between the Chesapeake and Delaware Bays; and from the Empire State and her great city, has come the same impressive request that the resolution now before us be adopted.

The citizens who append their signatures to these memorials, include in their number men of all shades of political belief: merchants, manufacturers, judges, governors, bankers, lawyers, laborers, farmers, mechanics, and political economists. Among them are names held in the highest honor and esteem, as private citizens and public servants.

Many of them have made the study of finance and political economy, of money and its laws the occupation of their lives; and are looked up to by their fellow-citizens as peculiarly fitted to give counsel on such topics.

When lately, some of our communities in the South and West were scourged with pestilence and a commission from this body was sent to investigate and report upon the true condition of affairs, in order to adopt plans of relief, upon whose advice and testimony did they most rely? Naturally upon those who had spent their lives in the study of the laws of health, and cure of disease.

Because medical men gave their testimony on such subjects, it did not seem that they were spoken of in the Senate in terms of disrespect and distrust; on the contrary, their testimony was read with great respect.

Nor do I see the justice or wisdom (I say nothing of the propriety) of selecting the fifteen hundred and odd citizens of New York State and city for disrespectful comment, as has been done in this debate, because they have exercised in the usual and orderly manner the right to memorialize Congress on a matter deeply touching their interest in connection with a subject upon which their avocations, experience, and studies had especially fitted them to speak. There is not a member of this Senate who would not feel himself benefited by the counsel and judgment of a great many of the wise, upright and excellent men who signed the memorial from New York, in any matter touching the pecuniary interests of himself or those dependent upon him.

But I beg to draw the attention of the Senate and the country to the Wisconsin memorial presented by a Senator from that State—because we have been assured that universal opinion in opposition to this resolution prevails in the Western States.

From Milwaukee a most respected delegation has come all the way to Washington—to represent public opinion in that locality.

I trust they may be spared an attempt to create sectional prejudice against them, as was done in the case of the eastern memorialists—but may be treated with the respect due to citizens of character and intelligence.

Ten years ago I endeavored in vain to impress this Senate with the manifest and paramount duty of restoring and establishing a sound currency, a real money of daily measure of all contracts.

In a speech made by me March 7, 1870, on the funding bill I endeavored to show how much more pressing and important was the need of a sound foundation for all contracts than a prepayment and refunding of our bonds not due.

But my efforts were in vain, and the deplorable policy inaugurated by Mr. Boutwell in his administration of the Treasury was continued. From 1869 to 1875 the sale of nearly $500,000,000 of gold coin received from customs duties and its investment in United States bonds at high premiums was continued, and all that time the currency was suffered to stand unredeemed and no step taken to resume specie payment. Such a policy precluded resumption, and to it I attribute in a large degree the sufferings which followed the crash of 1873.

What I have said to-day is little more than repetition of what I have been moved to say more than once before, in regard to which I have been vindicated by events.

I wish to say a few words to explain why the resolution before the Senate does not allow the United States notes to be received "for duties on imports or interest on the public debt."

By the act of February 25, 1862, under which the first issue of these notes was authorized, it was, in section 1, expressly provided that—

Notes herein authorized shall be receivable in payment of all taxes, internal duties, excises, debts, and demands of every kind due to the United States except duties on imports, and of all claims and demands against the United States of every kind whatsoever except for interest upon bonds and notes, which shall be paid in coin, &c.

And by section 5 of the same act it was provided:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That all duties on imported goods shall be paid in coin, or in notes payable on demand heretofore authorized to be issued and by law receivable in payment of public dues, and the coin so paid shall be set apart as a special fund, and shall be applied as follows:

First. To the payment in coin of the interest on the bonds and notes of the United States.

Second. To the purchase or payment of 1 per cent. of the entire debt of the United States, to be made within each fiscal year after the 1st day of July, 1862, which is to be set apart as a sinking fund, and the interest of which shall in like manner be applied to the purchase or payment of the public debt as the Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time direct.

Third. The residue thereof to be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

I am unable to construe this law otherwise than a distinct restriction of the notes—that they should never be receivable for duties on imports—and coupled with it the distinct pledge that these duties should be paid in coin, and be "set apart as a special fund" for the security of the interest on the public debt. It was, in my judgment, unwise and derogatory to a government like our own thus to "put in pledge" any one of its sources of revenue specially—it savored too much of pawnbrokerage—but it was nevertheless done, and the contract made by the authorized agents of the American people. It may seem useless, now that credit is established and the bonds above par, when they have been called in and exchanged, that this law should be enforced; but the law of 1862 has never been repealed, but stood in full force as the utterance of the Government when the new bonds went out in place of old ones, and the inscription on the notes is the same as it originally was. I propose to be strict in the performance of public obligations, because we cannot infuse the spirit of honor and good faith, nay, uberrima fides, too much into our public acts. It was for the security of the holders of our public obligations that these pledges were made, and they alone can release us from them.

It may seem now a useless formality to pay at the custom-house to the Government the gold and silver coin we have drawn from its Treasury on its own notes, but it is a formality carried out in a spirit of exact performance of a contract, and that alone makes it dignified and proper.

Mr. President, at much greater length than I desired I have expressed my reasons for urging the adoption of this resolution, and in concluding I can only say how incompetently I feel I have dealt with a great subject, profoundly affecting the happiness, the morals, the welfare of our country. But I have at least tried to treat the question in a worthy spirit, and do my best in the service of truth and justice. Whether the Senate will concur in my views I know not, for a subject like this has never been and will never be made by me a subject of party caucus or personal canvass for votes; but I believe that good sense and right feeling are permanent and enduring forces in American politics, and in that faith I shall rely upon these qualities vindicating themselves in the minds of my countrymen as time shall pass on.

The issue is nothing less than whether there shall be security to labor for its savings, to thrift and industry of their just results. The painful earnings of daily toil and the accumulated wealth of generations are alike involved, the creation of property by labor and its transmission to posterity are all alike affected by what I have proposed, and not being a believer in congressional alchemy I ask that we now abandon any further attempts to make it successful.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ANTHONY and others. Let us adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.]

Mr. ANTHONY. With the consent of the Senator from Iowa, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BECK. I hope that motion will not prevail.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator will withdraw the motion to adjourn in order that we may have a short executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island insist on the motion to adjourn?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion made by the Senator from Iowa, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at three o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 27, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

LAND LOCATED WITH MILITARY WARRANTS.

Mr. SAPP, by unanimous consent, reported back, with amendments, from the Committee on Public Lands the bill (H. R. No. 1059) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain and certify the amount of land located with military warrants in the States described therein, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

RANCHE PANOCHE GRANDE.

Mr. CALDWELL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is it reported from a committee?

Mr. CALDWELL. I offer it after consultation with all the members of the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, after which any member will have the right to object.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is desirable that the long-pending litigation with respect to certain lands in the State of California, known as Ranche Panoche Grande, shall be brought to an end as speedily as possible; and,

Whereas, with a view to this end and that justice may be done in the premises a bill is now pending before Congress to place the whole matter in controversy, with all parties claiming this property or any part of it, with the United States, before the Court of Claims with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States; and

Whereas it seems right and proper that the parties to this controversy should remain in statu quo until the bill now pending before Congress shall be finally disposed of: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States of America, (the Senate concurring,) That the Secretary of the Interior Department and each and every one of his subordinates be instructed to cease and desist from hearing or in anywise considering any application for a patent to any portion of said lands so in controversy or dispute by any company, person, or persons, until after the final disposition by Congress of the said bill now pending before it.

Mr. PAGE. I object.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. WRIGHT. I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask to have read what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

By Mr. WALTER A. WOOD: The petition of Thomas Jefferson and 157 others, colored men of Parsons, Kansas, for the passage of the Wright amendment to the homestead act—to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WRIGHT. I want to state in reference to this petition that these colored men in Kansas——

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I am reluctant to interrupt the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WRIGHT;] but I desire to know where the question of privilege comes in.

Mr. WRIGHT. I would have been neglectful of my duty if I had not complied with the request of these people to present their petition.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania states that the matter which he proposes to bring to the attention of the House reflects upon him in his representative capacity, it is undoubtedly a question of privilege.

Mr. WRIGHT. I was going to state to the Chair——

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to be misunderstood. One of the great abuses in this House has been that too often when gentlemen have risen to "questions of privilege" they have taken the opportunity to discuss other matters that were not questions of privilege under a proper construction of the rules; and I do not know a better case than this of my friend from Pennsylvania upon which to state my desire that neither he nor any other member shall transcend the rules of the House by bringing to its attention in this way what is really not a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. When a member states that he rises to a question of personal privilege, the Chair must, of course, until a statement of the matter is made, rely upon the member's word. When the statement is entered upon, if it appears that it is not a question of privilege, it is the duty of the Chair to stop the member.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. But after the gentleman may have consumed a very long time in presenting his supposed "question of privilege," it may be discovered that it is not a question of privilege. I would like the gentleman from Pennsylvania to state in advance the character of the question upon which he wishes to be heard.

Mr. WRIGHT. I will state it, to oblige my venerable friend from New York. The question I raise is that the statement just read from the RECORD puts me in a false position as to certain persons who sent their petition here to be presented to the House. I will state wherein it does so. I do not wish to make a political speech or any other kind of a speech. This petition, signed by 158 colored men, residents of Parsons, in Kansas, praying for the passage of the supplement to the homestead act, was sent to me with a request to present it to the House, and a further request that I would be kind enough to notify the petitioners that I had received and presented the petition. That petition I presented yesterday, and wrote to the petitioners accordingly. Taking up the RECORD this morning, I find that the petition is credited to my friend from New York, [Mr. WALTER A. WOOD.] I do not want to put any responsibility on his shoulders; but I do want to put myself right on the record. This is a privilege which I claim, and which this House will not refuse.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the RECORD to be corrected.

Mr. WRIGHT. But I have a word to say further. When a petition is presented the public suppose the House has some knowledge of it; but it goes into that petition-box in silence, which is the common grave where are buried all the prayers and memorials and petitions to Congress on the part of the people of this country. And it is like Mahomet's coffin, suspended there between the cornice of the Clerk's desk and the ground beneath, approachable to all, but available to none. It is the common grave of the prayers and petitions of the people of this land. It is a part of our profound and beautiful system of rules, which are made apparently to prohibit and prevent legislation, and create disorder and confusion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is not proceeding in the line of personal explanation.

Mr. WRIGHT. Then I will go on with my personal explanation. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARFIELD. If it is a correction of the RECORD let the RECORD be corrected.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated that the RECORD will be corrected accordingly.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then that is all of the explanation.

Mr. WRIGHT. Am I defeated in the effort to explain how a wrong has been inflicted, and provide a remedy? Am I through, against my will?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to know whether the gentleman is through with his remarks or not.

Mr. WRIGHT. But I am not through. I want these colored men in Kansas to know that I have carried out their views by presenting their petition, and that I consigned it to that common receptacle of the dead where it will sleep the sleep of death in company with its slaughtered comrades. Therefore, I wish to relieve my friend from New York of the responsibility of being the introducer of the petition of these colored men. This matter unexplained might put me in a false position with him. This I would guard against. These unfortunate colored men have made me the channel of their communication. I am willing to comply with their wishes; it is agreeable to me. I am alike the friend of the colored man with the white man, and I even will include in this category my distinguished friend, [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD,] of New York.

But I must suspend my remarks, and demand the correction of the RECORD.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire for the first time in my life to ask unanimous consent of the House to allow to come to this floor a prominent citizen of my own State, the late republican candidate for governor of Kentucky, and I trust there will be no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state the name.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Evans, of Kentucky.

Mr. HAZELTON. No doubt he is a good man.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will certify to it.

There was no objection, and permission was granted accordingly.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PITTSBURGH.

Mr. ATHERTON. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 2850) to provide a building for the use of the United States circuit and district courts, custom-house, and post-office at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and to recommend its present consideration. It comes before the House not only with the recommendation of the sub-committee but with the recommendation of the full Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The site has already been purchased and they want to go on and put up the structure.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PAGE. I do not know that I want to object to the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot debate it.

Mr. PAGE. Already there are a great many other bills pending before that committee, and they should all have an equal chance; but I do not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KNOTT. I object.

ALBANY MATIMILLER.

Mr. HAWK, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No.

3964) granting a pension to Albany Matimiller; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SAMUEL ORCUTT.

Mr. HAWK also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3965) granting a pension to Samuel Orcutt; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

YORKTOWN CELEBRATION.

Mr. GOODE. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the select committee of thirteen on the Yorktown monument and centennial celebration to report a bill (H. R. No. 3966) to carry into effect the resolution of Congress adopted on the 29th day of October, 1781, in regard to the monumental column at Yorktown, Virginia, and for other purposes; and to ask for its consideration at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will reserve the right to object after the bill has been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas, on Monday, the 29th day of October, 1781, it was

Resolved, That the United States, in Congress assembled, will cause to be erected at York, in Virginia, a marble column, adorned with emblems of the alliance between the United States and His Most Christian Majesty, and inscribed with a succinct narrative of the surrender of Earl Cornwallis to his excellency General Washington, Commander-in-Chief of the combined forces of America and France; to his excellency Count De Rochambeau, commanding the auxiliary troops of His Most Christian Majesty in America; and his excellency Count De Grasse, commanding in chief the naval army of France in Chesapeake; and

Whereas the said resolution of Congress has not yet been carried into effect, although nearly one hundred years has elapsed since it was adopted: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, in erecting at Yorktown, in Virginia, the monument referred to in the aforesaid resolution of Congress.

Provided, however, That the material used may be such as the Secretary of War may deem most suitable and durable.

SEC. 2. That a commission of three persons shall be appointed by the Secretary of War, whose duty it shall be to recommend a suitable design for said monument; to prepare a sketch of emblems of the alliance between his Most Christian Majesty, and the United States, and a succinct narrative of the surrender of Earl Cornwallis to be inscribed on the same, subject to the approval and adoption of the select committee of thirteen appointed by the Speaker on the 19th of December, 1879; to inquire into the expediency of appropriating a suitable sum to be expended in erecting at Yorktown, in Virginia, the monument referred to.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of said committee to select the site for the location of said monument, to obtain the cession of the same from the State of Virginia, and to make all necessary arrangements for such a celebration by the American people of the centennial anniversary of the battle of Yorktown on the 19th of October, 1881, as shall befit the historical significance of that event and the present greatness of the nation.

SEC. 4. That the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of defraying the expenses incurred in the said centennial celebration, and to be disbursed under the direction of the said committee.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, will that produce any debate?

Mr. GOODE. I think not.

Mr. BLOUNT. The object I had in asking the question is this: The committees of the House do not understand until the report of the Committee on Rules has been adopted exactly what are their duties, and I shall therefore object to the bringing up of any question which will give rise to debate.

Mr. GOODE. We do not propose any debate at all, but to ask for the immediate passage of the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I make no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the consideration of the bill at this time.

The bill was read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GOODE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MORNING HOUR.

Mr. BLOUNT. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the morning hour, which begins at ten minutes to one o'clock p. m., and the first question in order is the consideration of the unfinished business, being a bill (H. R. No. 2649) to authorize the Comptroller of the Currency to issue $500 in new notes to the National Bank at Pontiac, Illinois, to replace a like amount which have never been signed, reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] with an amendment. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "that," in line 10, insert the following:

Said bank shall first give a good and sufficient bond in the penal sum of $1,000 to the United States, with sureties to be approved by the said Comptroller, indemnifying the Government in case said.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORT. I move, in line 7, to strike out the figure "4" and to insert "5;" so it will read 765 instead of 764.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask for the reading of the bill as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Comptroller of the Currency be authorized to issue to the National Bank of Pontiac, Illinois, $500 of circulating notes of said bank, of the denomination of $5, in place of twenty-five impressions of plate 5-5-5-5, bank numbers 741-765, Treasury numbers 252111-252135, whenever satisfactory proof shall be presented to him that said notes were stolen from said bank without the signature of either of the officers of said bank: Provided, That said bank shall first give a good and sufficient bond in the penal sum of $1,000 to the United States, with sureties to be approved by said Comptroller, indemnifying the Government in case said unsigned notes or any portion of them shall inadvertently or otherwise be redeemed at the Treasury of the United States.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FORT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MANN'S MARINE DANGER-SIGNAL.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 2143) to test Mann's marine danger-signal.

Mr. BLOUNT. I submit this should go to the Calendar, as it makes an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken, and the bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

LIGHT-HOUSE ON BELL'S ROCK, VIRGINIA.

Mr. BEALE, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back, as a substiute for House bill No. 1906, a bill (H. R. No. 3967) making an appropriation for the erection of a light-house on Bell's Rock, in York River, in the State of Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to be printed.

TIMBER LANDS, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. CONVERSE, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. No. 2914) to authorize the President to reserve from sale or other disposition certain timber lands in the State of California, and for other purposes.

The bill was read.

The first section provides that the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to select from the public lands of the United States in the State of California such tracts or parcels of land on which are growing either the "redwood" (Sequoia sempervirens) or "big trees," (Sequoia gigantea,) or both of said timbers, as he may deem proper, not exceeding in the aggregate two townships of land, and the same shall be reserved and withdrawn from settlement, occupancy, or sale under the laws of the United States, and dedicated and set apart as public parks or pleasure-grounds for the benefit and enjoyment of the people. And all persons who locate or settle upon or occupy any part of said lands thus set apart and reserved as public parks, except as provided in the following section, shall be deemed trespassers and removed therefrom.

Section 2 provides that each of such public parks selected as aforesaid shall be under the exclusive control of the Secretary of the Interior, whose duty it shall be, as soon as practicable after such selections have been made, to make and publish such regulations as he may deem necessary or proper for the care and management of the same. Such regulations shall provide for the preservation from injury or spoliation of all timber, mineral deposits, natural curiosities, or wonders within said parks, and their retention in their natural condition. The Secretary may, in his discretion, grant leases for building purposes, for terms not exceeding ten years, of small parcels of ground at such place or places in each of said parks as may require the erection of buildings for the accommodation of visitors. All the proceeds of such leases, and all other revenues that may be derived from any source connected with said parks, to be expended under his direction in the management of the same, and in the construction of roads and bridle-paths therein. He shall provide against the wanton destruction of the fish and game found within any of said parks, and against their capture and destruction for the purposes of merchandise or profit. He shall also cause all persons trespassing upon the same to be removed therefrom, and generally is authorized to take all such measures as may be necessary or proper to fully carry out the objects and purposes of this section. As soon as practicable he shall cause each of said parks to be carefully surveyed and the corners and boundaries thereof to be suitably marked, and a plat and description of each to be filed in the General Land Office; and the cost of such survey shall be paid from any moneys now or hereafter appropriated for surveys of public lands.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CONVERSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SETTLERS ON KANSAS TRUST LANDS.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3968) for the relief of certain actual settlers on the Kansas trust and diminished reserve lands in the State of Kansas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the persons included in the provisions of section 1 of the act approved July 5, 1876, entitled "An act providing for the sale of the Kansas

Indian lands in Kansas to actual settlers, and for the disposition of the proceeds of the sale," or the heirs, legal representatives and assigns of said persons, shall be permitted to complete the payment for the lands to which they are entitled under said act, at the newly appraised value as ascertained and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, under section 3 of said act, and in completing such payment credit shall be given for all sums heretofore paid as principal and interest, which sums shall be considered as constituting one installment upon the present appraised value at the date when the last payment thereof was made; and the balance shall be paid in three equal installments, the first to be paid on or before the 1st day of January, 1881, and the remaining installments shall be payable annually from the date of the first; each installment to draw interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the date when the last payment heretofore made was received by the district office: Provided, That if any of said persons have failed to make payment heretofore of any portion of the purchase-money, as required under the act aforesaid, or the act of June 23, 1874, relating to these lands, such persons, their heirs, legal representatives or assigns, shall be required, prior to the 1st day of January, 1881, to make entry and pay for their respective claims in three equal installments, the first on the day of entry, and the remaining installments annually from that date, and drawing interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, until paid; bond being required in case of timbered lands to prevent waste as in section 1 of said act.

SEC. 2. That all persons who have made entries under section 2 of the act of June 23, 1874, relating to these lands, may complete their payments upon such entries at the newly appraised value thereof in the same manner and upon the same terms, credits, and limitations as are approved in section 1 of this act.

SEC. 3. That the terms of the proviso of section 2 of the act of July 5, 1876, relating to default and forfeiture, shall extend to all entries and requirements under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 4. Actual settlement on any of said lands shall be regarded as sufficient in all cases where the claimant actually resides on contiguous land to which he holds the legal title, and has heretofore cultivated and made valuable improvements on his adjoining claim, in good faith, for the purpose of a home for himself; provided said claimant shall in all other respects comply with the law and the regulations issued thereunder by the General Land Office.

Mr. BLOUNT. I make the point of order on the bill with the view of asking the gentleman from Kansas a question. I desire to know what is the appraised value.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I will state that this bill is offered to correct an incongruity in existing legislation. It applies only to about two hundred and fifty settlers on lands, the balance of which, the great body of them, are now in market. This legislation is asked for by the Secretary of the Interior in order that he may give the benefit of laws now existing to this body of settlers.

Under the law of 1876 these lands were reappraised and put in market. There was a class of these settlers whose names had been put upon a list and reported to the Department. The first section of that law of 1876 related to that class and provided they might make payment for their lands in installments, the first to be paid on the 1st of January, 1877. Then there was a reappraisement had. That time had elapsed, rendering it impossible for them to make those payments; and this is to correct that difficulty.

Again in 1874 there was a law passed allowing entries to be made on these lands, and the law of 1876 repealed that law and let those settlers down, as it were. That has left them without capacity to perfect their titles. There are a very few of that class and this bill corrects that difficulty so that they may go on and perfect their titles under the law of 1876.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask the gentleman whether the last appraised value and the first appraised value were the same; and if not, what advantage is to accrue to parties under this bill?

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. The first appraisement made was found to be too high. Under the law of 1876 these lands were reappraised and all the settlers on those lands had the benefit of the reappraisement except the few to whom this bill relates.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not insist on the point of order.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. CONVERSE. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to ask that a bill reported at the last call of our committee, the bill (H. R. No. 1846) relating to the public lands, and which is now in Committee of the Whole, be made a special order for the 10th of February after the morning hour.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the gentleman to exempt the appropriation bills.

Mr. CONVERSE. I am quite willing to make that exception.

Mr. DUNNELL. I object to the bill being made a special order.

POSTAL ROUTES.

Mr. COOK, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3384) declaring all public roads postal routes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all public roads and highways are hereby declared post-routes, and the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to put postal service upon all such routes when the public necessity may require it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I make the point of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. The bill provides that the Postmaster-General may put on all public roads postal service whenever he sees fit. Now my observation and the recent experience of this House is that there has been a very great abuse in that matter, and I propose to keep some measure of power in Congress. Whenever the Postmaster-General shall do this it will necessarily involve an appropriation by Congress. If he shall be authorized to put mail service on all public roads and highways, Congress will be compelled to vote the money to pay for that service.

Mr. PAGE. Oh, no; he cannot do it without an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be again read.

The bill was again read.

Mr. BLOUNT. I submit that this bill will necessarily involve the Government in the necessity of making appropriations for this service, and will put it beyond the power of Congress to control the expenditures for the postal star service. Every public highway may have service put on it, and there will be no restraint except the discretion of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. PAGE. Do I understand that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] makes a point of order on this bill?

The SPEAKER. He does.

Mr. PAGE. I want to ask the gentleman if the law does not now provide that the Postmaster-General may put mail service on all these roads for the period of six months without their being declared post-routes at all, if in his judgment the public necessities require it?

Mr. BLOUNT. That may be true; but because we give him discretion to that extent, it does not justify our allowing him to go on without any control at all.

Mr. PAGE. There is no control now. He can absolutely put on mail service for six months upon any road that has not been declared by Congress to be a post-route, if the public necessities in his opinion require it.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman's own statement shows that his opinion is not correct, for he says that the Postmaster-General is limited to six months.

Mr. PAGE. I am discussing the point of order which the gentleman has raised and which I say is not good. This bill does not change the existing law in any respect, and does not confer upon the Postmaster-General any power which he does not now have under existing law.

Mr. COOK. The present law makes all railroads, all canals, all plank-roads, and all navigable rivers post-routes, and the Postmaster-General is authorized, without any action by Congress, to put mail-service on such routes as the public necessities may require.

This bill proposes merely to give him the same authority and power over the common highways. In the last Congress over two thousand bills and propositions were introduced into and passed by this House for the purpose of establishing little post-routes on common highways. The Postmaster-General has put service on perhaps half of them. In all the seven years during which I have served in Congress there has never been a single post-route bill reported to this House which has not been passed, and passed without being even read.

This bill will save thousands of dollars to the Government in the expense of printing the bills which are introduced into Congress for the establishment of post-routes, and with which our desks have been encumbered for years past. Those bills are all reported favorably and are all passed. In the seven years I have served here there has never been a post-route bill introduced which has not passed Congress.

This bill proposes simply to give the Postmaster-General the same right over public roads and public highways that he has now by law over all railways, navigable rivers, canals, and plank-roads, to order mail service as the public necessities may require. Every mile of railroad constructed in this country becomes a postal route by operation of law, and the Postmaster-General is bound to put service on it if the public necessities require it. That is all there is in this bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I acknowledge that the statement of my colleague [Mr. COOK] is correct. In antagonism to the statement of the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] I will say that the Postmaster-General has not the power at this time, of his own motion, to put mail service on any other than railroad and steamboat routes.

Mr. PAGE. I cannot hear what the gentleman says.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the gentleman will allow me to finish my statement.

Mr. PAGE. I want to hear the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. It is the fault of members themselves that what is said cannot be heard.

Mr. BLOUNT. My colleague [Mr. COOK] has stated very correctly that as to railroads the law declares them to be post-routes, and the Postmaster-General is authorized to put service on them; and so in regard to steamboat routes, the Postmaster-General may contract for postal service. But as to the public highways of the country, where he is not authorized by a law making any of them post-routes, he cannot put service on them.

In the matter of railroads the pay even is fixed by law, and in the matter of steamboats the sum involved is not very great, and therefore it is not so objectionable; but in the matter of star routes he has been restrained to some extent to the lines which have been established by Congress as post-roads. Notwithstanding that restraint, however, this House and the country is informed that there is at this hour an impending deficiency of $2,000,000 for the star service of the country.

Mr. SPEER. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPEER. The question before the House is the point of order raised by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT.]

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

Mr. BLOUNT. And I propose to reach my point of order. My friend has raised his question of order before I have concluded.

Mr. SPEER. I submit that on that point of order the gentleman has no right to discuss any deficiency in the postal service or any investigation which may now be pending before a committee of this House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will confine himself to the question of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no purpose to discuss deficiencies or investigations. If my friend will "possess his soul in patience," he will see that I have another purpose in view.

I have simply referred to the restraint upon the Post-Office Department, under existing law, in reference to the star service. What is the proposition contained in this bill? It is to remove all restraint; to allow the Postmaster-General to put star service wherever he pleases; to increase that service to any amount he may think proper. The expenditures in that direction have already reached an enormous sum; and, if this bill should be passed, there will be no power in this House to restrain the Postmaster-General in this respect. When we have once said to him, "You may put service on all the post-routes in the country," it will be in vain for us to say that we have not appropriated money for the purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will confine himself to the question.

Mr. BLOUNT. I trust that I am confining myself to the question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. BLOUNT. My object has been to show that, under the operation of this bill, large sums of money may be taken out of the Treasury. I submit, therefore, that the bill ought to go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MONEY. I ask the attention of the House for a few moments.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen who desire to speak will be kind enough to confine their remarks to the point of order.

Mr. MONEY. The objection made by the gentleman from Georgia to this bill has no force whatever. In the first place, that portion of this bill which is in the form of legislation giving discretion to the Postmaster-General is simply a repetition of the law as it stands to-day. It does not follow as a matter of course that the Postmaster-General is to put service on all the routes that are established. As the law stands to-day every river and canal, every piece of navigable water within the United States is a post-route.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Mississippi allow the Chair to ask him a question?

Mr. MONEY. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman please state whether that part of this bill which authorizes the Postmaster-General to put postal service on any of these routes would not require an appropriation to be made by Congress?

Mr. MONEY. I say there is nothing of new legislation in that part of the bill. The Postmaster-General under existing law has already the power mentioned.

As I was proceeding to state, every railroad, every plank-road, every piece of navigable water within the limits of the country has been declared by law to be a post-route; yet we know that as to thousands of miles of rivers, where the Postmaster-General has now the discretion to supply service, it has not been done.

We know that hundreds of thousands of miles of post-routes, established as such by legislation upon your statute-book, are not to-day supplied with service. Because a post-route is established by law it does not follow as a matter of course that the Postmaster-General will put service on it. The statement of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] himself is a proof of this. He tells us that last year we established two thousand post-routes and that the Postmaster-General has put service upon thirteen hundred of them. I say this bill contains no new legislation conferring any additional power on the Postmaster-General in reference to this matter.

Now, Mr. Speaker, every gentleman in this House knows that the post-route bill is passed here as a matter of course. No word of objection has ever been heard here or elsewhere to the passage of any post-route bill. A member simply suggests to the committee the route which he desires established, and a provision for the purpose is inserted in the bill as a matter of course. The further question of supplying that route with service is one over which the member interested has no control. He may visit the Postmaster-General, and if he can demonstrate the necessity of the service it will be supplied. But this bill has nothing to do with that. There is no expenditure involved in the bill. So far as it relates to the discretion of the Postmaster-General on this subject, it is simply a repetition of laws already on the statute-book. There is no new legislation in the bill, and I say that the point made by the gentleman from Georgia is not well taken.

Mr. SPEER. I desire to say a word upon the naked question of order that is before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman upon that point.

Mr. SPEER. I do not desire to discuss the merits of any star route or any railroad route or any route on any navigable river. The naked question before this House is raised by the objection of my colleague [Mr. BLOUNT] that the bill is subject to a point of order because it involves an appropriation. I think that this objection is not well founded. The bill is no more subject to a point of order on this ground than the post-route bill which is brought in here at every session by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. BLOUNT. May I ask my colleague a question?

Mr. SPEER. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does not this bill go beyond the ordinary post-route bill, which simply specifies routes? Does not the pending bill declare all public highways post-roads? Does it not go further and authorize the Postmaster-General to put service upon them?

Mr. MONEY. He is already so authorized.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to say upon the point alluded to by the gentleman from Georgia that the post-route bill usually comes in by unanimous consent, and is not read, but passed upon the assurance which the gentleman introducing it gives upon his honor that it contains no legislation whatever.

Mr. SPEER. This bill contains no legislation whatever. The law as it now stands authorizes the Postmaster-General to put service on all these routes established by the post-route bill, in his discretion, if the public service demands it. This bill simply authorizes the Postmaster-General to do the same thing with all public roads which are by this bill sought to be declared post-routes. The bill is no broader in its effect than the existing law. It contains no new legislation. It involves no appropriation. The appropriation must be made by the House for the use of the Post-Office Department before any money can be employed for this purpose. This bill no more involves an appropriation than the post-route bill which I may have introduced here and which was passed, a bill establishing a route upon which the Postmaster-General, in his discretion, refuses to put service.

I presume, Mr. Speaker, it would be out of order for me to say that I am in favor of these star routes, which carry the mail service to the doors of the rural population. In this respect I think the wants of the country have been too much neglected. I am sorry to see a disposition on the part of some gentlemen here to put down the star service for the purpose of facilitating more rapid delivery in cities and on railroad routes which will take care of themselves. The star service is the poor man's mail, it penetrates the most remote sections, and for my part I shall resist any attempt to cripple it.

Mr. KNOTT. I simply desire to say I agree, in the main, with the views stated by the gentleman last up. It seems to me that while the remarks made by his colleague may furnish a potent argument against the passage of the bill in its present shape, they do not legitimately touch his point of order. I rise, therefore, to suggest that his objection may be made available by a motion to strike out that portion of the bill to which he objects. There are a large number of us who desire the passage of a general bill declaring all public roads postal routes, so as to obviate the necessity of creating special post-routes at every session of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to decide the point of order.

Mr. COOK. I will agree to that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not that power, for he cannot modify a proposition authorized to be reported from the committee.

The point of order is made against the bill as it now stands and as it has been reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. Post-route bills are introduced at every session of Congress by unanimous consent, and often without reading, upon the express understanding that they involve nothing but post-routes and do not provide for any general legislation whatever.

Mr. MONEY. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent we may agree that the clause to which the gentleman from Georgia objects may be stricken out.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. No; I object to its being stricken out.

Mr. MONEY. It amounts to nothing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will proceed to decide the point of order. Post-route bills, as the Chair has already remarked, are introduced at every session of Congress and passed without reading upon the express understanding that they do not embrace legislation of any character, but include only post-routes. They are usually passed upon the assurance to that effect given by the gentlemen introducing them; and if this bill had been confined to the words that "all public roads and highways are hereby declared post-routes," then the Chair would have no doubt but that part of the bill would not be subject to the point of order. The proposition, however, goes further, and states that the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to put postal service on all such routes when the public interest requires it. The object of the bill clearly is to give to the Postmaster-General some additional power which he does not now possess, or else it would hardly have been introduced. The Chair therefore holds that the latter clause comes under a portion of Rule 112, as it requires that appropriations shall be hereafter made for such routes as he may authorize service under the authorization given in the last branch of the bill.

And, moreover, the Chair is confirmed in the view he has taken by reference to another clause in same rule, wherein it is said that "all proceedings touching appropriations of money shall be first considered in the Committee of the Whole." If the Chair, however, had any doubt on the subject, he will state that he would consider it his duty to give the benefit of that doubt to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. KENNA. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that this bill, under the point of order, must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. KENNA. Is a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union now in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not, as the morning hour has not yet expired. It would be in order after the morning hour to move to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to take up the bills in their order on the public Calendar.

Mr. MONEY. I appeal from the decision of the Chair sending this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to lay that appeal upon the table.

The House divided; and there were ayes 133.

Mr. MONEY. I withdraw the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would prefer to have a decision of the House.

Mr. COOK. I ask for no further count, and will, by unanimous consent, withdraw the bill.

The House further divided; and there were—ayes 133, noes 21.

So the appeal was laid upon the table.

Mr. COOK. I now withdraw the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is that by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the request has never been denied to any member.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I wish to be indulged in a remark. It occurs to me, and I submit to the gentleman from Georgia, that this bill had better go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union now or hereafter, in whatever shape it may be reported, so it can be fully and fairly discussed. There is no disposition to unduly oppose it if opportunity be given for debate. I am willing to discuss it at any time, or to take it up at any time which may be agreed upon in the future.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope my colleague will agree to the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois. This is an important matter. It should go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and some day should be fixed for its discussion.

Mr. KNOTT. I desire to ask a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KNOTT. The gentleman from Georgia, speaking for this committee, proposes to agree to the proposition to strike out the objectionable portion of this bill. Now, cannot unanimous consent of the House be given for that purpose?

The SPEAKER. That was asked and objected to. The Chair would have recognized the right in the House but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] objected when the request was made.

Mr. KNOTT. It seems to me that would dispose of the matter at this time without further objection.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I have no objection, provided ample time can be given to the House to discuss this bill. That is all I want. I am willing to agree to the earliest possible day that gentlemen may fix in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, but I must object unless time be given for discussion so the House may be informed what the bill really is.

Mr. KNOTT. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw his objection.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. No; I do not withdraw it unless the bill can be made the special order and some arrangement can be made for its discussion.

Mr. KNOTT. It would still continue to be in the morning hour and there is nothing to prevent a full discussion.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I do not think it should be in the morning hour. You cannot discuss it fully in the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to hear some conclusion reached in reference to the bill. The Chair heard no objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia to withdraw the bill.

By unanimous consent, the bill was withdrawn.

GRAVEL AND PLANK ROADS.

Mr. COOK, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back adversely the petition of citizens of Huntington County, Indiana, asking that an act be passed making gravel and plank roads free for the mails of the United States; which was laid upon the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia will take notice that there is no report accompanying this bill. The rules require written adverse reports in all cases when made from committees.

Mr. COOK. There is a report on the back.

The SPEAKER. There is a remark, but it cannot be considered a report.

Mr. COOK. I will file a report hereafter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to that request.

UNLAWFUL HANDLING AND CARRIAGE OF MAIL MATTER.

Mr. STONE, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 2077) to prevent the unlawful handling and carriage of mail matter, with an amendment; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. STONE. I ask for the printing in the RECORD of the bill and amendment and the accompanying report.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The bill and amendment and accompanying report are as follows:

A bill to prevent the unlawful handling and carriage of mail matter.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That no person regularly performing trips over any mail-route, either as owners, master, or employé of any wagon, coach, railroad-car, or steamboat, or otherwise, shall carry letters or packets, either with or without compensation, except such as relate to some part of the cargo of such steamboat or other vessel, or to some article carried at the same time and by the same stage-coach, railway-car, or other vehicle, except as provided in section 3993 of the Revised Statutes; and where letters or packets are carried on board any such wagon, coach, railroad-car, or steamboat outside of the mails, except as provided in section 3993 of the Revised Statutes, it shall be prima facie evidence that such letters are being carried by the person in command or charge of such wagon, stage-coach, steamboat, or railroad-car: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prohibit the transmission of letters or packets by the hands of a private person or messenger who is not engaged in making trips at stated or regular periods over such route, either as employé or attaché of such wagon, coach, railroad-car, or steamboat, or otherwise; and for every such offense the owner of such steamboat, railroad-car, or stage-coach, or other vehicle or vessel, shall be liable to a penalty of $100; and the driver, conductor, master, or other person having charge thereof, and not at the time owner of the whole, or any part thereof, or other person, shall for every such offense be liable to a penalty of $50.

SEC. 2. That section 3829 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"The Postmaster-General shall establish post-offices at all such places on post-roads established by law as he may deem expedient, and he shall promptly certify such establishment to the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department. And every person who, without authority from the Postmaster-General, sets up or proposes to keep any office or place of business bearing the sign, name, or title of post-office, letter-express office, or other similar title, and professes or advertises to transact a general business for hire, in the way of receiving mail matter for deposit in the post-office or postal car, or of receiving mail from a post-office to be delivered for hire to the person addressed, shall, for every such offense, be liable to a penalty of not more than $500."

SEC. 3. That sections 3977 and 3992 of the Revised Statutes, and all laws in conflict with the provisions of this act, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Amendment: Strike out section 2 of the bill, and let section 3 stand as section 2 of the bill.

Mr. STONE, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, submitted the following report:

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to whom was referred House bill No. 2077, have had the same under consideration, and report the same back with an amendment, and recommend that it do pass as amended.

The main reasons which have influenced your committee in reaching this conclusion are sufficiently set forth in the following letter from the law officer of the Post-Office Department, namely:

"OFFICE OF ASSISTANT ATTORNEY-GENERAL
"FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
"Washington, D. C., January 9, 1880.

"SIR: The necessity for the passage of the bill to prevent the unlawful handling and carriage of mail matter may be briefly stated as follows:

"Section 3982, Revised Statutes, prohibits the establishment of any private express for the conveyance of letters, &c.

"Section 3983 provides a penalty for the willful carriage by any stage-coach, steamboat, &c., of any person employed as a private express for the conveyance of letters, &c.

"This section, however, is rendered entirely inoperative by the following consideration:

"First. In most cases of violations of this section it is impossible to bring home to the owner of the boat any knowledge of or responsibility for the violations. We are informed by the agents of the Department that in many cases a large amount of mail matter carried in violation of law is found on board steamboats, when on investigation it is impossible to find any one who will assume the responsibility of its care. The matter is given up, and that is the end of it. If not detected by an agent the matter is delivered on the arrival of the boat at its destination.

"The impossibility of providing an agent on all or any of the large boats plying the principal rivers of the country suggests the impossibility of the enforcement of this section.

"Second. But suppose the master or owner of the steamboat is detected in thus transporting mail matter contrary to section 3983 or 3984, or particularly section 3985. He may plead the authority of sections 3977 and 3992, which, to say the least of it, throws extreme doubt about the whole subject. In other words, to give these sections the force which in the view of this Department they seem to have, it may be briefly stated that while section 3985 provides that no letters except such as relate to the cargo, and except such as are carried in Government envelopes, shall be carried out of the mails, while section 3977 seems to authorize such transportation by prescribing the disposition to be made of the letters thus carried. I say seems to authorize it, for it is difficult to comprehend the precise meaning of section 3977 if it does not authorize masters of steamboats to carry outside of the mails letters which do not relate to the cargo, and which are not in Government stamped envelopes.

"For if the letters relate to the cargo carriage is not prohibited, and of course there is no requirement that they should be placed in the post-office as required by this section, while on the other hand if the letters are in Government envelopes they may be delivered directly to the persons addressed, under section 3993.

"Again section 3983 prohibits the transportation of any person employed as a private express, &c., while section 3992 provides that 'nothing herein contained shall be construed to prohibit the conveyance or transmission of letters or packets by private hands without compensation, or by special messenger employed for the particular occasion only.'
